Mr. REYNOLDS. Can the Senator tell me, in dollars and cents, how much we have given to Great Britain under lend-lease, and how much she has given us? What is the difference? Have we given her more than she has given us, or has she given us more than we have given her?

Mr. McKELLAR. We have given her more than she has given us. At the moment I cannot furnish the amount in dollars and cents.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Can the Senator give it in pounds?

Mr. McKELLAR. This is a statement of where lend-lease aid is going:

The total lend-lease aid, including both goods and services, has been distributed by areas as follows:

United Kingdom, $4,430,000,000.

Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, $1,826,000,000.

Africa and the Middle East, $1,573,000,000.

China, India, Australia, and New Zealand, $1,344,000,000.

Other areas, $459,000,000.

That is the way it has been distributed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. What is the total?

Mr. McKELLAR. The total is about $11,000,000,000 to date.

Lease-lend shipments to the United Kingdom totalled $3,116,000,000 from March 11, 1941, to April 1, 1943.

Shipments of essential supplies to the United Kingdom which were purchased for cash totalled $1,400,000,000 in the same period.

In the last 3 months lend-lease shipments to the United Kingdom were 40 percent of lend-lease exports to all areas.

With reference to the amount in ship tons which we received from Great Britain, I quote from the lend-lease report, as follows:

American forces in the British Isles are receiving almost all the supplies and services that can be provided on the spot as reverse lend-lease, without payment by us. Such aid is furnished through local supply offices at hundreds of airfields, camps, and bases throughout the British Isles. The following table shows the estimated quantities, in ship tons provided to the various services of the United States Army in the United Kingdom from June 1, 1942, to April 1, 1943.

Articles and equipment:	In ship tons
Engineer Corps	249,471
Quartermaster Corps	731,301
Signal Corps	7,371
Ordnance Department	115,716
Transportation Corps	3,757
Medical Corps	85,983
Air Force	139,541
Miscellaneous Supplies	29,541
Total	1,362,681

Mr. REYNOLDS. Of what do the materials consist?

Mr. McKELLAR. Various kinds of materials for the Engineer Corps, the Quartermaster Corps, the Signal Corps, the Ordnance Department, the Transportation Corps, the Medical Corps, and the Air Force, and miscellaneous supplies.

Of course, it is not anything like the amount we have given to the British. If I remember correctly, it is about 20 percent of the amount we have furnished them. However, it is a considerable item, and I believe Great Britain has done very well to furnish that much. The committee was exceedingly well pleased with the statement furnished us by the Lend-Lease Administration.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In other words, we have given them about five times as much as they have given us.

Mr. McKELLAR. Four or five times as much.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I wish to have the matter made clear, because I wish to know how to answer the gentleman who wrote me about it. As I stated a moment ago, he said that he had been told that they had given us much more than we had given them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The truth of the matter is that we have given them about five times as much as we have received from them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. REYNOLDS. So many rumors fly around that at times one does not know where he really is. I have heard—although I cannot believe it is true—that in the lend-lease business in which we are engaged, when we give them something here on our shores they take it aboard their ships and charge us for carrying it to their shores. Is that correct?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot answer that question. We had no evidence before the committee upon that point. I shall be very glad to look it up.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I should like to know the truth about it, because I cannot believe the statement to which I refer.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will give the Senator the information later, but I cannot do so at the present time.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I think I can assure the Senator that the information which he has received is not correct.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I could not believe the statement when I heard it. I cannot understand why they should charge us for transporting to their shores supplies and materials furnished by us.

Mr. HILL. I think I can assure the Senator that that is not true.

Mr. McKELLAR. There was no evidence on that subject before the committee. Of course, we all realize that the problem of transporting war supplies, food, and goods in general across the ocean is a serious one at this time, and we have to resort to all kinds of arrangements in order to have the goods transported to foreign shores.

Mr. REYNOLDS. In connection with the perilous trips across the ocean, does Great Britain take title to the goods here, or does she wait until she gets them across the ocean? If a ship carrying several hundred tons of goods is sunk is that our loss or Great Britain's loss?

Mr. McKELLAR. There was no testimony furnished the committee on that point. The question was not asked by the committee, and I cannot give the Senator an answer to his question. As in so many other instances, there are a great many rumors which are not true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was wondering who would take the loss, and whether Great Britain takes title to the property here or after it has been transported across the ocean.

Mr. CONNALLY. That would depend on whether delivery had been made, would it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. The delivery would be made where they assume charge of the goods.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Is delivery made to them on our shores or after the goods have been transported to their shores?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say. That is a very difficult question to answer. I shall have to look into it.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Can the Senator tell me with how many countries we now have lend-lease arrangements?

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection is that we have such arrangements with approximately 44 countries.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I have heard that we are sending goods to 70 countries.

Mr. McKELLAR. We have the proof in the lend-lease report.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Does the Senator have the names of those countries?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I have the names. I can give them to the Senator.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator has said that the number is 44. Does that include the Central and South American countries?

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be glad to read their names.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not wish to take the time of the Senator to read them.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table from the report to Congress on lend-lease operations for the period ended April 30, 1943, showing the status of lend-lease countries and United Nations with respect to lend-lease arrangements.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. REYNOLDS. I thank the Senator very much.

I have one further question. Under the lend-lease arrangements with Great Britain, what is the understanding with respect to return payment? How does Great Britain expect to pay us back for the difference between the balances? Does the Senator know the answer to that question? Has there been any discussion on the subject in the committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. I think it would require omniscience to answer that question; and I am not omniscient.

Mr. REYNOLDS. There is one other question which I wish to ask the Senator. We are providing lend-lease supplies to various countries in Central and South America. Does the Senator know what sort of an arrangement we have with the countries of Central and South America for them to repay us for what we are doing for them under lend-lease?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I do not. However, I know that we have furnished aid under lend-lease to various South American countries. In my judgment, probably no aid that we have rendered has been of more vital importance, or more in the interest of this country than that which we have furnished our neighbors in South and Central America. I think our leaders have managed that matter exceedingly well, and I believe the American people will approve absolutely what has been done. We had a very difficult situation, as the Senator from North Carolina and every other Senator knows, and I think it has been managed admirably.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The reason I made inquiry about it is that in my State of North Carolina, as in the State of the able Senator from Tennessee, a great deal of cotton is produced, and in my State the chief industry is that of processing cotton textiles. It has been my observation that all the Central and South American republics are rapidly developing a textile industry, and I have understood that some of our lend-lease aid to South American countries has been for the development of their textile plants in competition with our plants in North Carolina. Of course, if that is so, I do not like it at all, because I am primarily interested in the people of North Carolina, and I do not want any other country being developed at the expense of the taxpayers of America and in competition with the producers of North Carolina. If it be true that lend-lease is providing funds for South American countries to develop their textile plants in competition with North Carolina textile plants, I want to protest against it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator should first find out whether it is true. I do not think it is true.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was asking the Senator for information. I did not have the privilege of going before the committee, or at least, while I had the privilege, I was not there, and I thought perhaps, the matter was discussed in the committee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure that what the Senator suggests is not true. In the next place, I believe that whatever is done, is done to help the war effort in such a way as not to hurt our own country.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I was wondering in regard to the South American situation to which I referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HILL. I was going to say that I think I can assure the Senator from North Carolina that the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Tennessee is absolutely right and that what the Senator from Tennessee suggests has not taken place.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I take the Senator's word for anything, but I wanted to find out, because I am particularly interested in my constituents since I have a campaign coming on next year. [Laughter.]

Mr. McKELLAR. I have not a campaign coming on next year, but I am very much interested in the same matter.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I noticed the other day that we had agreed to let Brazil have $50,000,000 for the purpose of developing her iron deposits. I wonder if that went under lend-lease?

Mr. McKELLAR. No, I am sure it did not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I know it has not been discussed for a number of years.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice in the Report to Congress on lease-lend operations, appendix 3, page 42, the countries that are receiving lend-lease aid are listed, and I notice that Canada has no lend-lease agreement with this country. Can the Senator tell us why?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to be perfectly frank, and I really do not know.

Mr. ELLENDER. Can the Senator tell us how much in the way of goods is obtained from Canada and then sent to England under a lend-lease agreement?

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator will excuse me, may I ask him to repeat his question?

Mr. ELLENDER. Can the Senator tell us how much in the form of goods is shipped from Canada to this country and then sent to England under lend-lease agreements?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know of any such goods. There was no proof before the committee that any such goods were sent from Canada to this country and then transshipped under lend-lease to the United Kingdom or Great Britain.

Mr. ELLENDER. I notice in the table to which I have referred the third column indicates the dates when lend-lease agreements were signed and the next column shows the countries that have signed reciprocal lend-lease agreements. What is meant by reciprocal lend-lease agreements?

Mr. McKELLAR. It means what it says. Australia and Belgium, that is, that portion of Belgium not controlled by the Germans, have signed such agreements, and also fighting France, New Zealand, and the United Kingdom.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does it not mean that those countries that have signed that have signed lend-lease agreements but have not signed reciprocal lend-lease agreements do not have to give back in proportion to what they receive of anything to offset what they received from the United States? Let us take the Netherlands; it appears that the lend-lease agreement with that country was signed under date of July 8, 1942. There was no reciprocal lend-lease agreement signed. The Netherlands controls large oil interests throughout South America, and I am wondering if the Netherlands furnishes us any oil in order to offset any goods which we in turn supply to her?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot say because there was no evidence before the committee on that subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. So far as Canada is concerned, on page 31 the Senator will find at the bottom of the page the following statement:

> Canada does not receive lend-lease aid from the United States. She buys munitions and other supplies from us and we buy other types of munitions and materials from her for cash. However, some lend-lease supplies are exported to Canada for the use of other United Nations' forces in training there. We have, for example, sent more than 1,000 trainer planes to Canada for British Royal Air Force, Norwegian, Polish, and other student pilot units. Other lend-lease exports to Canada consist of supplies sent for transshipment, principally partially fabricated munitions items on which production is completed in Canadian plants. The finished products are then sent on from Canada to the United Kingdom, Russia, the Middle East or the Far East, and thus do not appear in the records of United States exports to these areas.

Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was aware of that language, but I understood that we obtained a considerable quantity of goods from Canada and then transshipped them to England under lease-lend. That was what I was attempting to elicit from the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. There was no testimony about that, and I am sure the Senator is mistaken regarding it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am asking for information. I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot give the exact information, as there was no proof concerning that before the committee, and I have no document here which gives the information. I am quite sure, I will say to the Senator, that that is not correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that we are purchasing from British Guiana, and, I think, from Dutch Guiana, about 60 percent or more of our bauxite requirements. I am wondering if we pay cash for it or if we get any credit?

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me ask the Senator a question about that. Is it purchased through the B. E. W., the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not know.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am sure it is, if it is purchased, and, therefore, it would not come under lend-lease at all.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am wondering why it should not. Here is an opportunity, it strikes me, where the English could certainly offset to a large extent some of the cost of goods we are sending to them, and the same thing would apply to the Netherlands. It is my information that the Netherlands is in control of or is purchasing much oil in South America and in several islands in that area, and we are paying out good cash for that oil, and at the same time we are sending to the Netherlands much in the way of goods. I am wondering why it is that a reciprocal lease-lend agreement has not been signed by the Netherlands.

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot answer that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, a great many of the materials which come from South and Central America particularly are bought by the R. F. C., or some of its subsidiaries. For example, materials worth about $450,000,000 have been bought by the R. F. C. for our own use and also for our allies, which are not included in the lend-lease account, because they are straight-out purchases by our Government through the medium of the R. F. C.

Mr. President, that brings up the thought that there should be some place in the Government where a master set of books is kept with all countries with which we have lend-lease agreements, either reciprocal, or one way, or whatever they may be, so that when the war is over at least we may have a picture of what has taken place.

Outside Lend-Lease, and the R. F. C. and the Director of Inter-American Affairs, which also spends money in Central and South America, the Army and Navy have lend-lease transactions in munitions, which have amounted to about a billion and a half dollars, according to my figures, and I shall later put the correct figures in the RECORD. Those things do not come through the Lend-Lease Administrator at all, but they are lend-lease in munitions, and air bases, sea bases, docks, and installations. When this matter was brought up in the committee, Mr. Stettinius, the Administrator, said he would get in touch with the Army and the Navy and with the other agencies and attempt to elicit information as to this matter so that in the future the Congress would have an over-all picture of all gifts, or grants, or whatever we may call them, which have been flowing not only from lend-lease, but from other agencies, to foreign countries associated with us in the war.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the purchases in South America and elsewhere spoken of by the Senator are purchases which are made by the Board of Economic Warfare for different purposes, and that Lend-Lease does not take part in those purchases, and they are not on their books.

The Senator from Maryland is correct, Mr. Stettinius was asked those questions by the Senator, and he very cordially joined in the view that there should be books, and that there should be an over-all record kept of everything.

Mr. ELLENDER. The fact remains, however, as I am sure the Senator will admit, that agencies of our Government are buying from England materials which are really located in South America, but are owned and controlled by England. We are giving cash for them, and the materials are brought back to this country and manufactured, and then transported to England, without offsetting any of the purchase price of the raw material.

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot tell the Senator about that, and I do not think any human being on this earth can tell him. I wish to indicate to him why I make that statement. It is because I find that while those of us on the Committee on Appropriations are working night and day to provide appropriations, my good friend Jesse Jones, with the R. F. C., under authority given him by the Congress, is appropriating about one-fourth or one-third as much money as the Congress is appropriating. So heaven knows who is buying. I think there are dozens of organizations under the R. F. C. which are using money as they please in the war effort, without any respect to Congress, without any regard to whether or not it is appropriated by the Congress. What we do is to give the R. F. C. the power to issue bonds, and they spend the money as they please, without reference to any appropriations made by the Congress. I think that is very unfortunate, I think it is very unwise legislation, and I am glad the Senator has brought the matter up so that I could make this statement to the Senate.

I believe that situation should be corrected. I think appropriations should come from the Congress, as required by the Constitution. I do not believe we should have a dozen agencies appropriating money in the war effort or any other effort of the Government.

Lend-lease, however, has nothing to do with that. Lend-lease comes before the Congress in the proper way. It comes before the Committee on Appropriations, asks for what it wants in the war effort, explains why it needs the money, gives all the facts openly and above board, and Congress thereupon appropriates the money, just as we are doing in the pending bill. Every other agency of the Government, in my humble judgment, should follow the same course. There should not be a score or more of independent offices appropriating money daily for things we know nothing about and making no report to the Congress.

I learned only a few days ago, in an examination before the Economy Committee, of tremendous sums spent which I did not know anything about, and I do not think any other Senator knew anything about them, because it was purely by accident, and not through the regular course of duty, that it was discovered. I think that should be stopped.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, when the renewal of the lease-lend came up for consideration before the Senate I asked several questions seeking to elicit from the Senator from Texas whether he could indicate in dollars and cents the amount England has given this country in order to offset what we have let them have under the lease-lend agreement. I never saw the figures, and I doubt if the figures have been presented to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McKELLAR. My recollection of that is that they were presented to us, but I do not think they appear in the record, I think they were given off the record. My recollection is that the amount was $1,200,000,000, but I should have to examine the record again in order to be certain about it, and I will do so, in answer to the Senator's question.

Mr. ELLENDER. It strikes me that since we have a reciprocal lease-lend agreement with Great Britain, Mr. Stettinius, who heads our Lease-Lend, should at once look into this matter.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me point out to the Senator from Louisiana that our armed services have spent in British territory $833,000,000 in building air fields, installations, houses, and semipermanent arrangements, which are not a part of lend-lease. I do not say this in criticism of our armed services, because in many of the cases perhaps the national safety warranted the expenditure of the money before any agreement could be worked out. I mention it only for the purpose of showing the Senator that, even when the lease-lend picture is before us, there have been almost a billion dollars additional spent in British territory.

Mr. ELLENDER. And that does not come under lend-lease.

Mr. TYDINGS. It does not come under lend-lease, and that is one of the reasons why I think Britain could give us the bases in the West Indies permanently in exchange for those expenditures, because those bases could be used only in an attack on or defense of the United States, as they lie close to our coasts.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me say, in reply to the Senator from Maryland, that I hope we will not go into the question of bases in connection with the pending appropriation bill. They are handled under a policy of the Government which is legislative and executive entirely, and does not come under the head of appropriations.

Mr. President, I am quite sure that the Office of Lend-Lease Administration is carrying out, in the best way possible, the law as Congress passed it, and I think every member of our committee who was present and heard the testimony given by representatives of the Lend-Lease Administration has come to the same conclusion.

The Senator from Louisiana a few moments ago asked about what we are buying from the Netherlands Government and what we are sending to the Netherlands Government. We are sending nothing to the Netherlands Government under lend-lease which is not being paid for in cash, except finished munitions.

I also wish to say to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. REYNOLDS] that the Lend-Lease Administration has provided no aid to any South or Central American country except in the way of munitions. What the Lend-Lease Administration is doing is done for the purpose of carrying on the war. We are not interfering with the internal arrangements of other countries. In our lend-lease dealings we are not interfering with the local situation in other countries or with the administrations in other countries. What we are doing is to help the war effort by furnishing munitions and other implements and articles of war which will help us win at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. President, if I may be excused for saying it, after having had representatives of the Lend-Lease Administration before our committee many times, I have become greatly impressed with their desire to carry out the lend-lease law in the best way they can, and while they no doubt are making mistakes—everyone makes mistakes—still they are doing a good job.

Mr. President, if there are no other questions to be asked regarding this measure, I hope we may have a vote on it.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I should like to make a few observations. I thought I would not make any, but the turn which the discussion in the Senate takes every time the question of lend-lease is brought up is, as I see it, a bit discouraging.

Early in 1941, almost a year before Pearl Harbor, Congress considered lend-lease. The bill, I believe, was actually passed and approved by the President on March 11, 1941. Everyone who is at all conversant with the facts knows very well that the dollar exchange in this country of those nations which are now fighting the war on our side was practically exhausted. It was rapidly reaching the vanishing point. Everyone who is familiar with what took place after the passage of the lend-lease measure, allowing for a great deal of waste, allowing for a great deal of mismanagement, allowing for a great deal of incompetency, if you please—if there has been waste, mismanagement, and incompetency in the handling of lend-lease funds—must know that through the passage of the lend-lease measure we are at least half a year, if not a full year farther advanced toward the final conclusion of the war, whenever it may be that the war shall end. This Nation is spending today at the rate of approximately $8,000,000,000 a month, and if lend-lease did nothing more than shorten the war by 12 months, or by 6 months, it would pay back in dollars and cents considerably more than the entire appropriation made for lend-lease, to say nothing of the blood of our men which will be saved if the war is brought to an end 6 months or 12 months earlier than it otherwise would come to an end.

Mr. President, when we had the lend-lease measure before us I, as chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, had the honor to conduct the hearings on it. I had the honor to champion in a small way the passage of the lend-lease measure through the Senate. There was an honest difference of view at that time on the part of many Senators with respect to the advisability of the lend-lease program. Many Senators feared—and I entirely respect the views of those Senators—that the passage of the measure and the operations which would necessarily flow from it, would have a tendency to and would actually take us into the war. That time is past. Who was right or who was wrong upon that important question is not now, it seems to me, a proper subject of discussion. The fact remains that with lend-lease, and perhaps without lend-lease, Pearl Harbor would have come; Japan would have struck us in the back on that fateful December morning, with or without lend-lease, but beyond the peradventure of a doubt we were some 12 months further advanced in our capacity to manufacture the munitions and the engines of war.

So, Mr. President, I should like to say now that I am not concerned with any accounting between us and the nations which are fighting on our side. I do not greatly care, except for the sake of the complete record, whether a balance is ever struck. I am conscious of the fact that there might not have been any other cotton mills in my State or in any other State if we had not met this issue in the way we did. I am convinced that if we had not made the preparations in the expansion of our plants, if we had not made the preparations which we made in those precious months when we were buying time, if you please, against the fateful hour of attack, the war would have to continue a year longer; and it costs us $100,000,000,000 every year to fight this war, and it will cost us an untold number of human lives, the lives of the best men we have in the Nation.

Mr. President, I am not worried about some waste in Lend-Lease Administration. Under its present management, I have the feeling that it has been most efficiently handled, but I am not concerned about some mismanagement and some failure to compel the countries with which we are obliged to deal at this time to pay us back before we allow them to have the things which are necessary.

How can we place a value upon the good will, and cooperation, and the actual willingness to fight by our side of all our South American neighbors? How can we estimate the good will and the willingness to die in our behalf on the part of all those nations that are fighting on our side? Does anyone expect that China will ever be able to pay us back? Yet how can we estimate the value of China, how can we estimate the value of the blood China is spilling in holding back in the Pacific the most treacherous enemy this Nation has ever had?

Here are the facts, if they are wanted: There is not an informed person anywhere who cannot reach the conclusion, and who is not compelled to reach the conclusion, if he deals frankly with the situation, that even if we have shortened this war by only 6 months we have cut down our expenditures, at the present rate, by $48,000,000,000, not by a mere $11,000,000,000; and in the blood of our men, in the tears of their mothers, we have saved more than can ever be estimated.

I do not defend everything which may have been done under lend-lease—far from it, although I know of very little that has not been done properly. However, I am not stopping to analyze and examine with a microscope all the steps which may have been taken by conscientious men when the lend-lease program was first under consideration.

I desire now to pay my respects to one, a member of the Cabinet, a man who is not of my political faith—I refer to the Honorable Henry L. Stimson, the Secretary of War—who had a deeper interest, who had a more profound conception of precisely what lend-lease meant, than did almost any other man in our Government. I remember with what devotion he fought, day and night, against what he thought would be crippling provisions in the Lend-Lease Act, because he realized, as all America should realize, that the lend-lease program was the very heart of our contribution in the defense of the free nations of the earth until we reached the hour when we were called upon to spill our blood in behalf of the great cause in which we were compelled to take up arms.

Mr. President, it is natural and commendable to scrutinize the expenditures made by all agencies of government; and it is easy to examine the lend-lease operations and find out that so much money has been given here and so much aid there, and to raise a question about whether the expenditures were necessary or proper. However, before we do that we should realize that, against the $11,000,000,000 we have spent under lend-lease, and against the additional $11,000,000,000 we may spend, or the twice $11,000,000,000 we may spend, we have saved, in mere dollars and cents, more than lend-lease has cost, that probably we have sustained the faltering lines, both on the east and on the west, of our chief Axis enemies, that probably we have supported them, and that, but for lend-lease, they might have had to give up the fight before the hour came for the attack upon us. Let anyone recall the time when the three Axis Powers entered into their compact, and let him know for a certainty that somewhere in the future lay the day and hour of attack upon us by one or more of the members of the Axis group.

So, Mr. President, if ever there was a step taken by the American Congress, if ever there was an appropriation, for which I could vote in all good conscience, it was the step we took in passing the Lend-Lease Act and the appropriation of every sum of money we have appropriated under that act.

I thought I should like to make this statement, Mr. President, because I think the historians of the future will recognize that the date of the signing of the lend-lease bill and the commencement of the course of action which our President then took, and has steadfastly followed, was the day on which the Axis Powers were defeated.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am in hearty accord with a great deal of what has been said by the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia. I, myself, voted for the lend-lease bill before we got into the war. I voted for it as an insurance policy against our becoming involved in the war, more than for any other purpose. I voted for it, in part, because I felt that the countries attacked by the Axis Powers were less at fault, were the innocents, so to speak, and deserved the support of fair-minded mankind.

As I understand the pending question, the issue whether lend-lease was a good thing or a bad thing is not involved in the present debate. Only a short time ago the lend-lease law was reenacted; and, if my recollection serves me correctly, it passed with no votes against it in this body.

What is now before us is an appropriation bill. It is the duty of Congress to examine that appropriation bill, the activities which have heretofore taken place, the purposes for which the money was appropriated, the ends to which it has been used, and from the whole picture to determine the wisdom of continuing in whole or in part, or even to a greater extent, the lend-lease activities provided by the pending bill.

Therefore, I point out, as an advocate of lend-lease, as one who has never failed to give it his support, that I have no quarrel at all with its philosophy. I agree with the Senator from Georgia that if we can shorten the war by a year or 6 months, or, I shall say even 6 minutes, the wisdom of lend-lease can be defended, because it will mean the saving of a great many American lives.

However, in spite of all the humanities of the equation, it would be unwise for this country or for the Congress not to keep an eye on lend-lease appropriations, just as it keeps an eye on the appropriations for our own Army and Navy, and from time to time to ascertain whether lend-lease and lend-lease in reverse, which is the Siamese twin of our lend-lease policy, are receiving the consideration which the sacrifices of Senators' sons and the sons of their constituents merit in all the circumstances, considering that lend-lease was passed 9 months before this country entered the war, and, in the eloquent language of the distinguished Prime Minister of Great Britain, was the most generous act ever performed by any government in the history of the world.

What is lend-lease? First of all, under lend-lease authorizations some $18,410,000,000 was made available to the Lend-Lease Administrator; but in addition to that authorization the War Department, in the Third Supplemental Appropriation Act, the Fourth Supplemental Appropriation Act, the Fifth Supplemental Appropriation Act, and the Sixth Supplemental Appropriation Act of 1942, and the Military Appropriation Act of 1943, was given additional billions of dollars for lend-lease purposes. So the total sum given to the Lend-Lease Administrator and to the Army and Navy amounts to $35,907,000,000.

When Mr. Stettinius appeared before the Appropriations Committee and gave us a very detailed, and I thought a very frank account of his stewardship, I asked him if he was conversant with the expenditures of the War and Navy Departments in certain fields of military activity outside the United States. He said he had only a general picture of it, but he went on to say that he thought it wise—as I do—that somewhere in this Government there should be a master set of books which would show all the ramifications of the whole lend-lease program, not only his part of it, but the War Department's part of it, the Navy Department's part of it, and such other parts of it as might be pertinent.

I wish to digress and read some of the expenditures of the War Department. As these bits of information are confidential and secret, I shall substitute letters of the alphabet—not an uncommon practice in Washington—for the names of the countries so that no military information will leak out:

Country A, $24,000,000; a South American country; for airports, sea bases, and appurtenant facilities, built with American funds and with American material and equipment. American administrative employees and natives of A comprised approximately 85 percent of the employees.

Country B, $1,900,000 for airports, sea bases, and appurtenant facilities; built with American funds and American materials and equipment; American administrative employees; native labor in country B furnished approximately 85 percent of the employees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Senator is now reading expenditures made by the War Department and not by the Lend-Lease Administration.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct; and I am bringing it out only to show that this thing called global war, so far as appropriations and expenditures are concerned, ought to receive the constant scrutiny of the Congress of the United States, not only from the time Lend-Lease was originally enacted, but through all subsequent appropriations. I think it only wise, in view of what I consider the willingness of our country to give—and I believe it is most willing to give everything it humanly can to our allies and to others associated with us—to examine the counter-picture and, where opportunity exists, to see if the willingness is reciprocated to an equal degree. If that be "small" I am sorry; but I do not believe it is.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and in a few minutes I hope he will be made a member of the conference committee which will consider this question in conference.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall support the bill on the floor and in conference. I am thoroughly in favor of it, as the Senator knows.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator is. What I was about to say is that the Senator realizes that none of the other countries can reciprocate with the same ease and facility with which we have given.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will come to that. I do not agree with that statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator will also recall that the testimony before our committee was that Great Britain has been very careful to reciprocate whenever she could, and is doing more as time goes on, and as conditions improve. The same statement applies to other countries.

Mr. TYDINGS. I have not yet come to Great Britain.

The first country to which I referred was country A. I note that we spent $24,000,000 on airports there. I also note that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation bought $24,858,000 worth of critical materials from that country. As the airports and facilities are either permanent or semipermanent, it occurred to me that there might have been a little lease-lend in reverse in that situation, in which we paid both ways. If lend-lease, as I know it exists in this country, is to be encased and clothed in a cloak of unstinted generosity, when we are viewing this global war, I do not see why that garment cannot be made the international mode of dress to a greater extent than appears to be the case up to the present, from an examination, not of a part of the figures, but of all the figures.

I use that comparison only by way of illustration. I could prove the case in many other instances. In addition to paying all the bills, we have paid in full for all the materials we have purchased from countries which have been the beneficiaries of our foreign construction.

Country C, $840,000 for the same purposes.

Country D, $380,000 for the same purposes.

Country E, $220,000 for the same purposes.

Country F, one of the countries mentioned in the debate, which was paying cash for everything awhile back, but whose name I will not now mention, $5,300,000. Eighty-five percent of the labor in that particular case consisted of nationals of the beneficiary country, and the United States paid the whole bill.

Country G, $17,100,000. The same situation existed.

Country H, $830,000. The same situation existed.

County I, $4,200,000. The same situation existed.

Country J, $780,000. The same situation existed.

Country K, $2,100,00. In all these instances the situation with respect to labor was the same, so from now on I shall simply read the countries and the amounts, in order to save time.

Country K, $8,300,000.

Country L, $16,000,000.

Country M, $330,000.

A group of countries, $21,200,000; another operation in the same group of countries, $16,000,000.

An island not far from continental United States, $24,500,000; another island, $1,900,000; another island, $360,000; another island, $11,300,000; another island, $33,300,000; another island, $15,700,000; another island, $4,900,000; another one, $2,500,000.

Another one, $3,500,000; another one, $19,700,000; another one, $95,000,000; another one, $189,000,000; another one, $168,000,000.

That is not chicken feed, Mr. President.

Another one, $62,000,000; another one, $51,000,000; another one, $23,000,000; another island, $80,000,000; another island, $25,000,000; another island, $3,300,000; another island, $100,000,000.

There are several places with reference to which the amount of money is not stated, but where a description is presented of the work done.

I took the Army and Navy figures—and I have read only the Army figures because those relating to the Navy are comparatively small—and for the most part, the Navy's construction has been in places where there was nothing else to do, as it can well be imagined, and the total is nearly a billion and a half dollars. Of this amount almost $800,000,000 was spent in territory of the British Empire. None of this appears in the lend-lease picture. The labor was all furnished locally by British subjects. Eighty-five percent of the common labor was so furnished in practically every case, and we paid the whole bill. That was all right with me. But if these countries were furnishing 85 percent of the labor, it seems to me that at least they might have made that as a contribution when the work was done on their own soil, and when we were most generous in lives, as well as in money, in protecting many of the countries—the names of which I have disguised by using letters of the alphabet—from the threat of invasion, or of being conquered.

I find that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has spent $432,690,000 in the purchase of materials in Central and South America. In many of the countries where these works were installed, 85 percent of the labor used consisted of nationals of the country in which the installations were made. We paid for all the labor and, at wartime prices, bought these critical materials.

There is another angle to this picture. Who is to pay for this? Senators, our sons who are on the battlefield today are going to pay for it. I agree with my distinguished friend from Georgia. Some of these men will return, and the liquidation of this debt will be an obligation which they will have to carry for the remainder of their lives. It will require as much money merely to pay the interest on our national debt as was raised by this Government for all purposes every year from 1930 to 1940. That is merely for interest alone.

I think we owe those men something. I do not mean that lend-lease should be discontinued. I do not mean that it was wrong then or now. I think it was right then, and I think it is right now. However, I think we owe it to those who are going to the theaters of war as fast as ships can take them, as well as to those who are already there, that we give a good accounting of our stewardship, and while we have been and will be generous, to make sure that we have kept the faith with them in this body in the same way they are keeping the faith with us everywhere in the world.

Mr. McKELLAR rose.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I shall not conclude for some time.

Mr. President, our work does not stop there. We have entered into various good-will activities, with which I am in accord, and I find that we have spent $21,000,000 for health and sanitation in countries of the Western Hemisphere. That was a fine good-will gesture, but the boys on the fighting fronts will be required to pay that $21,000,000 when they return home. The extent to which we have placed an unbearable and additional load on their shoulders without good reason constitutes, in my judgment, a betrayal of them.

Mr. President, lend-lease should be, in the very nature of things, not a matter of equality of payments because it cannot be, and no sensible man would demand, that books be kept on that basis. But there should be, insofar as there can be, a willingness to reciprocate for the generosity of this great powerful and rich country which has so willingly and rightfully, in my judgment, poured out its abundance in order to help shorten this bloody struggle, and save first of all the lives of our citizens, although many of them have already made the supreme sacrifice.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HAYDEN. Is there any part of the $21,000,000, to which the Senator referred, for health and sanitation, which was expended for any purpose except to obtain rubber in South America?

Mr. TYDINGS. Allow me to say "Yes."

Mr. HAYDEN. What part?

Mr. TYDINGS. The health and sanitation program applies to countries which supply only rubber.

Mr. HAYDEN. Does the Senator know what portion of the money related to the production of rubber? My understanding is that considerable sums were necessary for expenditure in Brazil in order to obtain rubber from the jungles.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. Let us take that as an illustration. I think the Brazilian Government—a country of which I am very fond, and the leading country in size and population in South America, as well as a country which is actually with us in the war—should have the full benefit of the lend-lease program as it now enjoys it. I am heartily in favor of that. I likewise see that our war trade with Brazil has amounted in some critical materials to only $24,000,000,000.

It has occurred to me that with a little more cooperation we could have persuaded Brazil to have borne some of the expenses incident to the furnishing of these critical materials. That is what we are furnishing Brazil. Munitions are nothing more than critical materials because critical materials put together are munitions, and we are sending munitions to Brazil. It seems to me that Brazil might very properly give us raw materials with which to make those munitions in return.

Mr. HAYDEN. But to return to the question of expenditures for health and sanitation; I have heard the representation made that we were in great need of rubber, that it was obtainable in the Brazilian jungles, but it was absolutely necessary to combat malaria and other tropical diseases.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. HAYDEN. And in order to obtain it we made these advances. Is it true that the money was not spent for that purpose, and if not, for what purpose was it spent?

Mr. TYDINGS. I can show the Senator the amount of money that was spent in Brazil for health and sanitation, and it was a large sum. I can also show him that money was spent for health and sanitation in countries very far south of Brazil, where rubber was not a question at all.

Mr. HAYDEN. Were American troops operating in that area?

Mr. TYDINGS. Not in all cases. Of course, it is only a drop in the bucket, anyway, because the whole amount is only $27,000,000. I merely put that in the picture to show, as I have said, that this is an uncoordinated effort. Mr. Stettinius has only the lend-lease part of it, the War Department has another part of it, the Navy has another part of it, the R. F. C. has another part of it, the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs has another part of it, and all of them are agencies spending money. In my judgment there should not only be a master set of books provided to determine what have been our contributions and the contributions of other countries to us, but if there were greater coordination, without any hardship on some of the recipient countries, I think we could obtain the things we are buying without in the future actually taxing the boys who will bear the load of extra debt when they return. That is the whole point of my argument.

Mr. HAYDEN. There could be no argument about that at all. It is simply plain common sense.

Mr. TYDINGS. But that is not being done.

Mr. HAYDEN. We should not do these things in an uncoordinated way. I merely wanted to try to advance the idea that when we are making expenditures justified by the acquisition of so scarce an article as rubber, they might be very wise expenditures.

Mr. TYDINGS. They might be, but I still cannot see why we could not induce Brazil to pay the money for the development of her own natural resources, when we are sending munitions to Brazil, and she is a country at war.

Mr. HAYDEN. It depends on how quickly we can get rubber.

Mr. TYDINGS. We cannot get rubber in 24 hours, if I understand the tire situation aright.

I think we have reached the time when, I respectfully might suggest, these agencies have to be coordinated. I should like to see the President issue an Executive order to husband all this outgo and income of materials and money through some central agency, from which we could get a statement of fact from time to time, and the account would be beyond dispute, and it would not be lost in the extraneous records of some department or bureau or agency. I think we owe it to the men who are abroad to do that while they are gone.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, has the Senator included the Board of Economic Warfare?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I have not.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is the master mystery of all, is it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. I may say that the account which I am rendering is only of that part of the activities which have come within my knowledge. I do not doubt for a moment that there are other agencies and activities, in fact, I could now name two at least, in addition to those I have enumerated, and in addition to the one the Senator has mentioned, from which money is flowing out, apparently without any thought at this juncture of a reciprocal arrangement. That is no reflection on the Lend-Lease Administrator, because it is not within his jurisdiction. That condition exists because these functions and activities have to do with organizations and agencies which are not in any way tied in with lend-lease, either because of a fault in the law or because of a fault in executive administration in not coordinating them all in one place.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Supplementing the inquiry of the Senator from Michigan with reference to the B. E. W., the distinction between the lend-lease and the B. E. W. is a pronounced one. Lend-lease, when it needs money, comes to us for an appropriation, as in the bill before us, but when the B. E. W. wants money, it does not come to Congress for it, it simply issues a directive to the R. F. C., and the powers of the B. E. W. are so broad that in the last analysis, they can draw on every dollar Jesse Jones has in the R. F. C., and the draft has to be honored. That is of course an extreme illustration.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is correct. In addition to the agencies I have mentioned by name, the Commodity Credit Corporation makes expenditures in foreign countries, the Export-Import Bank makes expenditures in foreign countries, or loans, in some cases, and in the case of the Export-Import Bank, as of the date I got this information, the loans amounted to $71,000,000.

All these loans, of $71,000,000, $132,000,000, and so on, are cumulative, they run into billions, and therefore I make the statement, after having had access to the adding machine, that these simple matters which I have brought to the attention of the Senate today amount to $2,000,000,000 all one way, and which the Lend-Lease Administrator has not on his books because they are not lend-lease operations as encompassed in the law. We should have at some place, a master set of books, and a clearing house, for these extraneous dealings, so that somewhere along the line we would know what the picture was.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, is the $2,000,000,000 amount contained in the appropriation under consideration?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; it has already been spent.

Mr. AUSTIN. Will this appropriation include a similar item of $2,000,000,000?

Mr. TYDINGS. No, it will not. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont that the $2,000,000,000 for the most part has come out of Army and Navy funds which we appropriated, and with a provision in the law that they could be used for the purposes which I have generally outlined in the few illustrations I have given, and which carry all the way down through practically all of them.

Mr. AUSTIN. I would not have my inquiry interpreted as an objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. I understood that. I did not put that construction on it. I wish to make plain to everyone that I am not attacking lend-lease in the slightest. I voted for it when it was first before the Senate, I voted for it for the reasons I have stated, partly out of regard for what I thought was the right and wrong in the matter, or, if one wants to look at it that way, because I was a trifle idealistic, perhaps, and largely as an insurance policy, just in case the little bit we could give in so short a time would mean the difference perhaps between the recipient nation standing up or going down.

I am glad we took the action, and I am not against lend-lease now. Money is of secondary consequence. Lives are important. It is important to end the war. But money is of sufficient consequence that where it is being given for a specific purpose, the recipient, when he is able to do so, should reciprocate. I cannot see the slightest thing wrong with that, either in idealism, or in self-interest, or in the general interest.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. HILL. I do not wish to delay the Senator's speech, but in reference to the observation made by the Senator from New Hampshire, there came to my attention 2 or 3 weeks ago a copy of a statement which Mr. Milo Perkins, the Director of the Board of Economic Warfare, made before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. I take it, therefore, of course, that if Mr. Perkins appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House, Mr. Perkins, with his Board of Economic Warfare problem, will come before the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

I am not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, of which I think the Senator from New Hampshire is a member. I do not know whether the Senator was present 2 or 3 months ago when Mr. Perkins appeared before that committee.

Mr. TOBEY. I examined him.

Mr. HILL. I do not know whether the Senator agrees or not, but it was my information, from Senators who heard his testimony, and other Senators, that Mr. Perkins made a most interesting statement, and made a very strong case for what the Board of Economic Warfare was doing. I did not hear the statement. I read in the hearings of the committee that part of the statement which was printed, but it was my understanding, and the records so indicated, that a good part of what Mr. Perkins testified to was off the record and, therefore, did not appear in the printed hearings.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct. I think he did give a very interesting account of the operations of the B. E. W. Beyond peradventure, some of us on the committee believe that the way to operate is not by access to funds with no limit whatever, but these boards should come before the Congress, sell their propositions, get their appropriations, and clear through Mr. Lindsay Warren's organization, the General Accounting Office.

Mr. HILL. I merely wish to say, as I previously stated, that Mr. Perkins was before a subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations some 2 weeks ago, so I am sure he will be coming also before the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to reiterate, at the expense of boredom, perhaps, that I am for lend-lease. I am for the utmost generosity we can extend to our allies to shorten this war, and make victory certain and quick, and save every life possible, not only of the men of our own country, but of those of countries which are fighting on our side, whether it be in the Far East, in Europe, or wherever it may be. I am in no sense trying to set up books on that account.

However, it has occurred to me, and I hope this is not disunity, that one of the great failings of a young country such as ours, which has been engaged in world affairs on a large scale for only a few years, lies in its idea that everyone in the world has a detached view, and thinks beautiful thoughts, and is good, and kind, and so on. I think that estimation of the world is unsound, and I think too many of our population have that view. I do not want to see my country—although it may be overgenerous, as I hope it will be in its contributions—to be so overly overgenerous as to be really foolish.

Therefore, when we were pouring out these things to our allies, particularly before we got into the war, and primarily for their defense—for ours incidentally, but primarily for theirs—and when they were so appreciative, as I knew they were, it did not seem to me to be the part of treason, or disunity, or even un-Americanism, for me to ask, or to look around to see what they could do for us, not in payment, not in complete wiping out of the accounts, but as a reciprocal measure which would put them on the same plane that we were on.

Out of my temerity to enter into this greater field of activity beyond our borders, it occurred to me that we had leased for 99 years some bases in the West Indies, and I was curious to see how much money we had spent there. I shall not state the sum, but it is not small. Then I was curious to see how much we had spent on contiguous or nearby islands or territory, and I found that the sum was not small, and it was spent on or in the very part of the Dominion from which we had leased the bases, that is, the country was the same.

These islands, as everyone knows, and as every military man in Britain, in Russia, in China, or in the United States will tell us, have one value only, for the defense of or attack upon the United States. They are close to our own shores. I do not want the islands. I do not want the populations. I do not want my country to use this war as an imperialistic instrument, but the naked bases themselves, which have been leased for 99 years—why? Because they were important to us, and the lessor country realized it—the naked bases themselves, it seemed to me, could very well be transferred to United States sovereignty, not the whole of the islands, not the population, but merely the bases, by way of reciprocation in small part for what we were trying to do there in addition to furnishing armies and navies.

Now the things we are sending abroad, Mr. President, are much more important than money. Money advanced can be repaid by mere services, but when natural resources are taken out of the ground of any country, even though it has no national debt, there is a resultant impoverishment. What we are taking out of the ground is oil, iron, other minerals, which nature took thousands of years to put into the ground, and which human ingenuity cannot return once it is extracted. Therefore the effort on my part to try to obtain for us a spit of sand only, which might protect our remaining resources, I did not think would be anti-British, or anti-Russian, or pro-Axis, or tend toward disunity. It occurred to me that it might be nothing more than a very, very, very, very, very, very small lend-lease, or reciprocal aid, or whatever one might want to call it. I make no apologies whatever for having made that suggestion, and I am using this occasion now to reiterate it.

Mr. President, I should likewise like to see the title to some islands in the Pacific cleared up, to which a country, the greatest recipient of our lend-lease operations before Pearl Harbor, as well as now, claims dominion along with us. They are only little sand spits. They are the only islands we lay claim to in this whole vast territory, among hundreds of thousands of islands. That nation has disputed as against us the title to those two little islands, and has gone so far as to land civil servants on each of them, so that there will not be any question about relinquishment of those two little islands, out of all the thousands of islands, when the war is over.

Mr. President, that sort of thing makes one a little more realistic about lend-lease than he was when we began it. It is beyond my understanding what in the world two or three little islands close to our shores can mean to that country in comparison to what they would mean to us.

Some persons have gone so far as to say "You ought to let these questions remain until after the war." Well, we did not let our oil, and our iron, and other supplies remain here until after the war, and if the transaction is settled after the war I shall be just as happy as if it is settled now, but I think we ought to make the record as we go along. I remember that after the last World War we did not make the record well enough, and there was a great deal of dispute afterwards. The Senator from Oregon remembers very well that it was the habit of Senators to say, "When such and such was going on you did not say anything," or "When the other thing was going on you arose on the floor and said thus and so," and that was forever conclusive evidence that the door was closed then and there.

Mr. President, I have tried to profit by that experience in my own humble way. I do not live in the intellectual clouds, as do some of the great people of this country who never held any political office, but who can lecture on all subjects, astronomy, war, meteorology, disease, the future of mankind, how the world ought to be set up hereafter, how everyone will be taken care of or be lost in the shuffle. I thought I would get down to this more limited mental operation of simply trying to be generous, but trying to be reasonable at the same time.

Mr. President, I find that just off the shores of the lower part of the United States we have spent $212,000,000 on the territory of one particular country. All the labor furnished was local labor, that is, the ordinary labor. We paid the whole bill. Then I find that we bought hundreds of millions of dollars of material, and I find that we paid for it all. Then

I find that we spent great sums for welfare purposes, and we paid for it all.

Mr. President, I find evidences of this astounding thing, that after this war we will have a repetition of exactly what happened after the last war, namely, that the people who demand that nothing be said on matters of this kind during the conduct of the war will be out in the front ranks criticizing everyone in and out of Congress for not having spoken out. Mark my words, and see if that will not be true. Senators will find such persons writing stories, and making speeches, and taking Congress to task for not doing now what they say should not be done until after the war is over. Human nature and human reactions are strange. The very people who are denouncing the Congress for even uttering a sentence during the conduct of this war will rise after it is over and say, "What kind of a Congress was it that permitted these things to go on?" So we had better make the record now.

My humble effort here this afternoon is only to bring these facts to the attention of the Congress, because I believe we owe it to our own people, to those in the armed services, while we support the lend-lease program, while we give these additional billions of dollars—and I shall give the program my full support—that the facts be brought out. The world knows that lend-lease is a one-way street in many cases, a one-way street which could be made a two-way street by a little bit of reciprocal generosity to offset the generosity so abundantly shown in actions of this country even before Pearl Harbor and so abundant since.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a few moments on a matter not of international import but of very vital import to my colleagues and constituents back in New England and the eastern Atlantic States. It is a tragic situation, and to meet this situation I am taking heroic methods this afternoon by seeking to amend the pending bill in order to give relief to a portion of our citizenship which sorely needs relief. As evidence to buttress my case I read to the Senate a telegram received this morning from the commissioner of agriculture of the State of New Hampshire, as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., June 3, 1943.

Hon. CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Desperate feeding problem faces New Hampshire dairymen and poultrymen, especially the latter. Reports from millers advise impossible to get corn and wheat. Thousands of our people responded to appeal for poultry meat and eggs as with milk. Feeding situation now so desperate unless relief immediately comes thousands of chicks, broilers, and layers will go hungry, and day-old baby chicks do not live long without feed concentrates. Advice via Boston corn and wheat plentiful supply, but fixed price on corn forces holding from sale. Chance to secure supply through Chicago auction market at price above Office of Price Administration fixed price. Millers do not care to violate Federal prices fixed or take loss in July market, Chicago sold short. Check if possible Federal holding corn and wheat and do at once all possible to relieve desperate situation. Urge quick Senate approval bill passed today by House authorizing sale 50,000,000 bushels Government-owned wheat. Urge favorable influence on quick transportation via Great Lakes grain authorized for entry from Canada. Quick action imperative.

ANDREW L. FELKER,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. President, I read a second telegram from the Merrimack Farmers Exchange, Inc., R. W. Peasley, general manager:

CONCORD, N. H., June 2, 1943.

Senator CHARLES TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

New England nearly out of corn, wheat, and barley. None available on market. Birds starving in 10 days.

MERRIMACK FARMERS EXCHANGE, INC.,
R. W. PEASLEY, General Manager.

I read another telegram from G. M. Bartemus Co., of Concord, N. H., as follows:

CONCORD, N. H., June 2, 1943.

Hon. CHARLES TOBEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Unable to buy corn, wheat, or barley in New England. Mill can run 3 days more on present supply. Can you do anything to relieve the situation?

G. M. BARTEMUS CO.

Mr. President, with that Macedonian cry coming to my desk this morning, and as a citizen of the State of New Hampshire, and a Senator from that State, I make bold to come before the Senate this afternoon to submit an amendment to the pending lease-lend bill, not because it affects lease-lend; it is not even germane to it. The amendment is, I know, subject to a point of order, as Senators all know, but I have received splendid cooperation from my leader, the distinguished senior Senator from Oregon, and having gone to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] and obtaining his cooperation in the fine spirit that he would not invoke the rule which provides for a point of order to lie against such a proposal, and would not make the point of order; having discussed the matter with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who has given me helpful cooperation; the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL]; the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN]; and other Senators, I now come before the Senate and say that this situation is so acute in New England and in my own State of New Hampshire that I ask my colleagues in the Senate to consider this situation in the thesis of the Pauline statement, "We are every one members one of another." This is truly a Macedonian cry.

So, Mr. President, I submit the amendment to provide that out of the Commodity Credit Corporation's supply of wheat on hand, 50,000,000 bushels more shall be released and sold, as 125,000,000 bushels were sold last March or February, and be sold at not less than the parity price of corn, so that thereby we shall relieve this shortage which at the present time is in its acute stage.

I send the amendment to the desk, and ask for its reading and adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, after line 18, it is proposed to insert the following additional section:

SEC. 3. That the act approved March 25, 1943 (Public Law 18, 78th Cong.), be amended by deleting "two hundred and twenty-five million bushels" and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred and seventy-five million bushels."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (H. R. 2753) was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will be authorized to change the section numbers.

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. GLASS, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. NYE, and Mr. LODGE conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Most merciful Father of mankind, we pray that in the still voice we may hear the message of a righteous and a redeeming God enshrining in our hearts. We praise Thee that there is faith so deeply rooted in the human soul that it survives all tragedies and binds us to Thy throne forever. To Thee, who art the Captain of our salvation, who dost determine our stature and the bounds of our habitation, we pray that our country may be delivered from the blinding power of selfish men and from the subjection of the works of disloyalty to our Government.

O Spirit of God, be with us and guide our lives that they may be honest in the dark as they are in the light, as good in obscurity as they are in publicity, as faithful when alone as when the world is looking on. O inspire us to set our affections on the dateless and spaceless things of Thy everlasting kingdom. Mold our thoughts with immovable conviction, with fortitude and sacrifice, keeping aloft the threefold torchlights of faith, hope, and love. In our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2848. An act amending the "Joint resolution making an appropriation to assist in providing a supply and distribution of farm labor for the calendar year 1943," approved April 29, 1943; and

H. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to bill of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 2570. An act to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 2584. An act to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes.

AMENDING THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT ACT

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 2766) amending the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is this legislation?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. This is the so-called Monroney bill relating to the matter which I discussed with the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman state for the record the purpose of the bill?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. It is to take care of areas, particularly in six States, where they have had heavy flood damage and insect infestation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Just what does the legislation provide?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. This will allow those in the flooded areas and areas where crops have been damaged by insect infestation to go ahead and plant now and it will allow them to plant cotton on some of this land and corn on other land. If they wait much longer they cannot plant anything. It will also allow those folks to remain on the farms where all of their crops and property have been destroyed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. It is a necessary and urgent relief proposal and it has been unanimously endorsed by the gentleman's committee?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes; it was reported out unanimously.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BISHOP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. I yield.

Mr. BISHOP. Does that take in the flooded portion of southern Illinois?

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Yes, the whole area.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That notwithstanding the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, or any other provision of law, on any farm on which the county committee finds that a substantial part of any crop was destroyed or damaged by flood or by insect infestation in 1943 so that abandonment or replanting of such crop is necessary, the actual production of cotton from any acreage on such farm may be marketed without penalty and the planting in 1943 of any acreage in excess of the farm cotton acreage allotment on such farm shall not cause the producer to suffer any deduction or loss of eligibility for payment, commodity loans, or price support: Provided, That the acreage in excess of the farm acreage allotment in 1943 shall not constitute past acreage or past production of cotton in determining the farm acreage allotment for any subsequent year.

With the following committee amendments:

On page 1, line 9, after the word "cotton", insert "or corn."

Page 1, line 9, after the word "acreage", strike out the word "planted" and insert "so destroyed or damaged and replanted."

Page 1, line 10, after the word "farm", insert "in cotton or corn."

Page 2, line 3, after the word "cotton", insert "or corn."

Page 2, line 7, after the word "cotton", insert "or corn."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSARY OF JEFFERSON DAVIS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this is Memorial Day in many of the Southern States.

It is the birthday of Jefferson Davis, the Great White Chieftain of the Confederacy—one of the ablest leaders the world has yet produced.

One of his leading adversaries once declared that he was eloquent among the most eloquent in debate, wise among the wisest in counsel, and brave among the bravest on the battlefield.

Bishop Galloway once said of him:

Marvelous, many-sided, masterful man, his virtues will grow brighter and his name be writ larger with each passing century. Soldier, hero, statesman, gentleman, American—a prince of Christian chivalry, the uncrowned chief of an invisible republic of loving and loyal hearts—when another hundred years have passed, no intelligent voice will fail to praise him, and no patriotic hand will refuse to place a laurel wreath upon his radiant brow.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

EVACUATED JAPANESE IN CALIFORNIA

Mr. ROLPH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include as a portion of my remarks a communication from the Downtown Association of San Francisco.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. ROLPH addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD, and include therein two short editorials on the proposal to repeal the Chinese Exclusion Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the Appendix and include a statement by Admiral H. E. Yarnell.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CHINESE EXCLUSION LAW

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, within a short while the House will have before it a bill to repeal the Chinese exclusion law and to grant to the Chinese an immigration quota. I am sure all of the Members of the House are anxious to know about this bill, its implications and what it means to the war effort.

This morning Admiral H. E. Yarnell appeared before our committee and made a statement. I am placing that statement in the Appendix of the RECORD, and I trust the Members will arrange to read it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WOODRUFF of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a speech before the New York City Rotary Club by Samuel E. Crowther.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from California [Mr. KING] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

OPINION OF ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL OF ARKANSAS

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to include an opinion from the Assistant Attorney General of Arkansas, and that my remarks may appear in the Appendix of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

[Mr. STEWART addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

THE SILVER PURCHASE ACTS AND THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the managers on the part of the House on the Treasury Department appropriation bill have filed the conference report and have indicated disagreement again with reference to the amendment which I successfully offered to that bill which would preclude the expenditure of any of the appropriations authorized under that bill for the carrying out of the provisions of the Silver Purchase Acts. Undoubtedly somec .e will offer an amendment to recede and concur in the Senate provision which deleted the Celler amendment from the bill. I do hope that the House will follow the procedure it adopted on two previous occasions when it supported my amendment and precluded the use of any money carried in the Treasury Department appropriation bill for carrying out the purposes of Silver Purchase Acts. The Committee of the Whole originally adopted the Celler amendment, the House concurred and again the House refused to recede from its position and refused to accede to the Senate's wish to allow appropriations to be used by the Treasury to administer the Silver Purchase Act. These acts have outlived their usefulness, if they ever had usefulness. We have 3,000,000,000 ounces of silver stored at West Point. We need no more. The Treasury should not be permitted to administer the purchasing of any more silver. I have bills pending before the Ways and Means Committee to wipe the slate clean of silver purchasing. I admit passage of my bill is the logical method for dealing with the problem, but heretofore that committee has not accorded me a hearing. I had no other recourse but to attack the silver purchasing from the flank. I prefer a frontal attack. But I had no choice. Keep my amendment intact. A half loaf may be better than no loaf at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and to include therein a letter from a former Congressman and an address by Robert J. C. Stead, made before an international rotary conference at Flint, Mich., on May 7. I am advised by the Public Printer that it will require 2⅕ pages of the RECORD and will cost $99.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a resolution of the Saratoga County War Council.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

CORN SHORTAGE IN PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that out of the legislation now before the House will come a genuine solution to this labor problem. I am glad to see the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], whom we missed so much yesterday, on the floor today to make his contribution.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a telegram I received this morning. It deals with another proposition but is very important:

YORK, PA., June 2, 1943.

HON. CHESTER A. GROSS,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

In order to supply minimum requirements of feeders and dealers we serve in eastern Pennsylvania, Maryland, New Jersey, Virginia, and Delaware, it is necessary that we purchase 30,000 bushels No. 2 yellow corn weekly. This based on last year's business. All former sources of supply have informed us that they cannot furnish any corn. Under the circumstances, we feel it is imperative that Commodity Credit Corporation release sufficient quantities of corn to supply our minimum requirement. Please do something for us.

HESPENHEIDE & THOMPSON, INC.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MAY. I will not move to go into the Committee until after the gentleman from Michigan has submitted his request.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I cannot yield now; and inasmuch as the gentleman from Pennsylvania inquired as to where I was yesterday, permit me to make reply.

My health for the last few days has not been good. Farming operations at home demanded my attention, and last Saturday, Sunday, and Decoration Day, in addition to the speaking at Decoration Day exercises in the district, the farm and the home gardens were given attention.

Under the impression that this bill would not be on until later in the week, my return was delayed until 1:50 a. m. on the morning of Wednesday—yesterday—then a grounded plane delayed my arrival until 4:30 p. m.—too late to vote on the rule. It was my desire to be here when the rule came up, but never did it occur to me that the absence of one Member of the House on the question of having a free discussion of so important an issue could be vital. My attitude on this legislation is well understood, not only by my constituents but by every Member of this House who has cared to be present during the past few years.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman withhold that and will the gentleman yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER. No business can be transacted unless the gentleman from Mississippi withdraws the point of order and if the gentleman does withdraw the point of order, then there is nothing can be done until the Chair determines whether or not the gentleman from Michigan states a question of personal privilege.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order for the present.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, rise to a question of personal privilege.

On page 4 of volume 1, No. 2, of May 1943 issue of the official publication International Education Department, of the U. A. W., C. I. O., which is in my hand, there appears, among other statements, the following:

Now, with Hitler staggering under the blows of our Soviet ally, invasion of Europe to bring about the unconditional surrender of the Axis is imperative. Defeat for the Axis in 1943 is the battle cry of America's people and those of the United Nations.

But against this program of victory, sinister forces have moved into action. Anti-labor and Quisling groups are carrying forward a feverish campaign to block the decisions of the Casablanca conference—to hamper and hold back invasion of Hitler-dominated Europe—to bring about a peace by negotiation with the mad dogs of fascism.

DIVISION FOSTERED

Division and disunity have been fostered. Congress is being made more and more an instrument for the disruption of the military and economic policies proposed by the President in the interest of victory. Policies of the President for putting the national economy on a war footing have been ridiculed, sabotaged, and partially wrecked.

The reactionary poll-taxers and their Republican friends have already jeopardized the cause of effective wartime rationing, price control, and progressive taxation. By their opposition to full mobilization of manpower they seek to strike at the foundation of our military power. An ex-President of the United States, long known for his adherence to doctrines of appeasement, has been applauded in his proposals that we go slow, that we fight a comfortable war, that we do not attack until 1944 or perhaps 1945.

LABOR THE TARGET

Because labor recognizes this for what it is, the fatal policy of defeat and disaster, labor too has been the target of the slander of those who would divide our Nation in its hour of crisis and peril. The Hoffmans, the Dieses, the Rickenbackers, and the forces of betrayal for whom they speak, have conspired against and viciously attacked the millions of men and women who are today providing the weapons needed by the armed forces of democracy.

* * * * *

The conspirators against the unity and victory of the American people and the United Nations, the small but powerful groups desiring a negotiated peace with Hitler, have again been echoing Herr Goebbels' gospel of the Communist menace.

The foregoing statements reflect upon the integrity and the patriotism in his official, representative capacity of the Member from the Fourth Congressional District of Michigan, and he raises the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], state just exactly the language to which he takes exception?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the specific language to which I refer, and I ask unanimous consent to put my request in the RECORD at this point, is in the article which I handed to the Speaker from the official publication of the C. I. O., and this is the language, but the other is used to show the purpose and intent:

Because labor recognizes this for what it is, the fatal policy of defeat and disaster, labor too has been the target of the slander of those who would divide our Nation in its hour of crisis and peril. The Hoffmans the Dieses, the Rickenbackers, and the forces of betrayal for whom they speak have conspired against and viciously attacked the millions of men and women who are today providing the weapons needed by the armed forces of democracy.

That is a direct charge we are interfering with the operation of the war and, taken in connection with the other language, that we have conspired so to do. It will not take an hour to answer that charge, which is false.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must assume some latitude. It is only by implication, the Chair may say, that this impugns the honor and integrity of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN]. It is a very close question. The Chair will recognize the gentleman, but he wants it understood that it is a very close question.

EXTENSION OF LIMITATION OF DEBATE ON S. 796

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate on the pending bill, S. 796, be extended for an additional 40 minutes, the time to be equally divided and controlled by myself and the ranking Member on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on yesterday when general debate was proceeding, those in opposition to the bill on this side of the aisle were given scant consideration and were unable to get time to voice their sentiments in opposition to the bill. Does the gentleman propose to divide the 40 minutes between those who are in favor of the bill and those who are against the bill?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I was pressed for time yesterday and had requests for time from Members on this side of the aisle. I also had a few complaints and criticisms. I have asked this additional time for the sole purpose of being able to allot some of the time to the opposition.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Kentucky was very unreasonable yesterday, I think, when requests were made to him in a proper manner for time. He was both arbitrary and discourteous in his responses to the requests that were made to him. I do not want to object, but I certainly shall unless the gentleman can assure the House that the opponents of the measure will be given time. I do not want any for myself. I will say what I want to say under the 5-minute rule.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some time and I may say I requested some time yesterday. I do not propose to object to continuing the time for debate, but I do agree with the gentlemen who have previously spoken, the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that there are many points of view that should be given a chance for hearing on the floor today and I think we should have time.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, who has the floor?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky propounded a unanimous-consent request and the gentleman who reserves the right to object then has the floor. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has the floor on a reservation to object.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if he will not increase the request for time in order to satisfy the demand for time?

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I have done everything I could to allot the time as fair as I could, and I have disregarded some of the members of my committee. I resent and deny the charge that I was unreasonable to anybody. I simply begged an opportunity to arrange my time so that I could allot it among the several gentlemen who wanted to speak. I make this request for the sole and only purpose of being able to accommodate them. I will modify the request and ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 1 hour.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Kentucky——

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] is recognized.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the words on which the personal privilege is requested are as follows:

> Because labor recognizes this for what it is, the fatal policy of defeat and disaster, labor too has been the target of the slander of those who would divide our nation in its hour of crisis and peril. The Hoffmans, the Dieses, the Rickenbackers—

I do not deserve; I do not claim to deserve the honor of having my name mentioned either with that of the chairman of the Dies committee, nor with the name of the hero of World War No. 1, Rickenbacker, or as one of the liberals of the so-called labor group characterize him, "the rat of World War No. 2."

Let me repeat what was said. It is an honor to have my name mentioned with that of Rickenbacker. When a man has served his country, as has Rickenbacker; when he has faced death, as did Rickenbacker in the air and on the sea; when on a raft on the Pacific he held in his arms a dying comrade and saw that comrade die; then and only then should he assume to question the loyalty of Rickenbacker. The man who called Rickenbacker "the rat of World War No. 2" should be expelled from the union to which he belongs. When a union bars or attempts to bar Rickenbacker, Rickenbacker's picture, when he makes an appeal for aid to the Red Cross, or that workers continue at their task to support the men who are risking their lives, it ill behooves any member of such a union to venture a criticism of the patriotism of anyone.

Permit me to read:

> The Hoffmans, the Dieses, the Rickenbackers and the forces of betrayal for whom they speak have conspired against and viciously attacked the millions of men and women who are today providing the weapons needed by the armed forces of democracy.

So far as I know, neither from the floor of this House nor anywhere else has any Member of the House ever challenged the patriotism of any labor man or any worker in the munition factories or in war industries anywhere. Members high in the administration's confidence have charged that those causing these strikes in munitions factories and in the coal mines were guilty of treason. No such charge has been made by me. The racketeers and labor leaders have been challenged; their patriotism has been challenged by some, and as long as they try to continue to call strikes to bring about slow-downs and stoppages of work, the patriotism of some of them will be questioned, and we will continue to wonder whether or not they realize that a war is on.

We know that the fighting men must have arms; we know they must have munitions; we know that when men do not work the fighting men cannot be supplied with either arms or food. We know that the wheels of the factories in this country cannot turn if they do not have coal; we know that coal is not being produced. We know that if that coal is not produced, if the wheels do not continue to turn, men will die for lack of guns and of ammunition.

The question before us today and which must be answered, Are we with our fighting forces, the Army, the Navy, the Air Corps, or are we with the union racketeers? Do we aline ourselves with the loyal factory workers, who are doing their utmost, or do we bow in allegiance to labor politicians?

Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in the history of our country that anyone belonging to a union or any union organization has ever conducted a strike against the Government. We did have the Whisky Rebellion, and there have been other disturbances, but at no time has an organized group, known as a labor organization, at any time at all and especially as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO] said, "during a time of war," ever defied the Federal Government.

Never before in the history of our Nation has an organized group in time of war hurled defiance at the Commander in Chief of our Army and our Navy. Do we today, serving our Government, stand by the Commander in Chief or do we yield to these labor leaders who oppose this legislation?

Here you have here in the city an indictment for sedition of some thirty-odd individuals. For what reason? Because they wrote, because they said things which it is claimed would interfere with the spirit of our fighting men. I make no comment upon that indictment. The guilt or innocence of the individuals charged is to be decided by a jury, but what have we here now? We have a situation where while our men need munitions of war of all kinds, yet because of the demand that there be paid an additional $2 per day, which is not granted, we have a half-million men going on strike, depriving the Nation of the coal which is necessary to keep in operation the factories which turn out the fighting tools. Is that sedition? Is it undermining the sprit of our fighting men?

Tell me, if you will—let those who advocate strikes, who carry on strikes, tell me if they will—does it encourage our men on the battle front to know that here at home the supply of weapons is being diminished because men are on strike? Does it increase the happiness of our fighting men, intensify their loyalty, if that be possible, to know that men here at home refuse to support them by turning out the necessary equipment, just because they do not get additional pay of 8 cents an hour or of $2 a day? When news of these strikes breaks on the fighting front, just what do the fighting men say?

I ask the Members of the House to go down to the Union Station where thousands or more men belonging to the Army, the Navy, and the Air Corps are passing through every day, day after day, and talk to those men. Ask them what they think about strikes and slow-downs. You will get an answer. You will get it quickly. It will be brief and to the point. Part of the answer may be profane because men who have faced death, who are on their way to face death, have little patience with idle talk. You will understand what they say and you will know that they are earnest and that, if we fail them here in the Halls of Congress, adequate answer will be made to our failure when they return.

Several of the Members asked me where I was yesterday. They intimated that I was running out on this legislation. I was so unfortunate as to be grounded in Detroit and could not get here in time to vote on the passage of the rule. But, Mr. Speaker, has the Congress arrived at such a state that I must be here for the adoption of a rule? My position on legislation is well known to every Member of the House. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because he did me a favor in asking that question; it gives me an excuse for getting this in the RECORD.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield for a question.

Mr. RANKIN. I understand that the article the gentleman read from attacks the patriotism of a former President of the United States, which means Herbert Hoover.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know that that specific reference was to Herbert Hoover.

Mr. RANKIN. I want to say in reply to that that while I never voted for Mr. Hoover in my life, and we never agreed on political philosophies, I do not believe there is a more patriotic man, a more sincere and earnest man, in America than Herbert Hoover.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And that statement applies to every Member of the House; it applies to practically every man who works in factories and mines, and the sad thing about it is that some of the so-called labor leaders, labor politicians, fail to realize it. They have fallen into the evil habit of challenging the patriotism of every individual who opposes any legislation they favor, who supports any legislation they oppose.

In coming down on the midnight train yesterday from Kalamazoo to Detroit there were some 35 or 40 men belonging to the armed service who were forced to stand on the platform of the coaches, and several of them were expressing their views. Oh, that we had a record of the views of those 35 or 40 men. A number of issues came up; one was the coal situation, and the strike at Akron in the rubber factory.

Lewis is not the only one who has defied the Government. Lewis and the coal miners are not the only ones who have refused to perform vital work—work which must be done if the war is to be won. There have been strikes all over this country. Men have been prevented from supplying coal to factories just because they would not join the teamsters' union—Tobin's union, an affiliate of the A. F. of L.

This situation was not created by John L. Lewis acting alone. The President himself, this administration and their activities are among the causes of the condition which now confronts us. Time after time, because of the political alliance which exists between this administration and certain labor politicians, strikes and slow-downs have occurred, and the demands for increased wages have been granted.

It is quite true that the strikes have been less in number and that the man-hours involved have been less than in some other years. And one of the reasons for that is that the workers are as a class patriotic, and another is that almost invariably this administration has yielded to demands for increased pay; hence, there was no reason to strike.

To put it bluntly, this administration has sold out the American people. It has sold out to its political allies. This administration created the situation which gave rise to these strikes. Does anyone believe for one moment that, if the administration had adopted a firm, sound policy, forgotten its political ambition for a fourth term, for a continuation in power, these few labor leaders who engineer these strikes would have dared, in wartime, to knock the foundation out from under the armed forces?

Lewis is but following the plan—the plan that is common to other labor leaders who lack his courage, his straightforward method of dealing. Green and Murray and other union leaders have fallen in behind him, seeking, as he is seeking, to increase their power in their respective unions. They are seeking to demonstrate to all workers that they can defy the Government. Whatever may be their words, whatever their promises, their actions show their purpose.

And the question now before us is, as just stated, will we support the armed forces, or will we increase the cost of the war program by an increase in wages, by pay and a half, by double pay, by shorter hours? Or will we insist that all—yes, every citizen—render a service comparable to that rendered by the drafted men?

Coming down on the train, talking to these men who were in the service, some of whom have been across, others who were about to go, I learned that they had but one thought, and their expression was—you know, after the little Sunday school and the home boy goes into the Army and is in the armed forces awhile, he learns, as some of us who come to Congress learn, a little profane language, and once in a while we use it—the thought of all these boys, as they expressed it, was, "To heck"—I substitute a word for theirs—"with these fellows. Let us at them. They say they won't work and you can't make them work; let us at them. They will work." And those fighting men meant it.

Last week, talking with two lieutenants who were back from Guadalcanal, they had and they expressed the same thought. Those of us who think that the people of this country are not back of legislation to end this situation are just mistaken.

Padway of the A. F. of L. said down here in a public forum the other day, "Oh, well, this bill is discrimination." It is nothing of the kind. It applies to all who are called to serve. We who support legislation of this kind are not unpatriotic; we are doing a service not only to the country but to the working man himself. We are trying our best to let labor clean its own house before the boys come back and clean it for them. Discrimination? Would Mr. Padway have legislation against stealing? The majority of the men, he said, do not strike. Of course, they do not. They do not want strikes—that is the reason for this bill, one provision of which would make it possible by a secret vote to prevent strikes. The majority of our people do not steal, yet we have legislation against stealing, against getting drunk, against all sorts of crimes. Labor legislation is aimed to meet the few, the very few in the ranks of organized labor who will not conform to decency and to good practice as they know it. This is not legislation against labor or labor unions. It is legislation against racketeers hiding within and behind a union label.

I read this morning some of the comments that were made here yesterday. A gentleman on the minority side whom I greatly admire made an extended argument which appears in the RECORD as to why this labor legislation should not be considered at this time. First, he was opposed to it because certain men connected with the agencies of government are opposed to it. The fighting men, the men who suffer and die because of the lack of munitions and equipment, are not opposed to it. I care not if some politician in some department is opposed to it. That to me is no reason. The letters which come through uncensored from the men who are doing the fighting are proof positive that they and their officers at the front are not opposed to it—otherwise the letters would not pass the censor.

Then the gentleman said:

> I am opposed to its consideration in view of the fact that the labor organizations, such as the American Federation of Labor, are opposed to this bill.

Permit me to inquire, since when did they become our masters, since when do we serve them rather than our people, when and where, from what source do they derive the power to tell us how to vote?

If time permits, I will show you where Mr. Green, president of the A. F. of L., and Mr. Meany, at that time secretary-treasurer of the A. F. of L., as long ago as 1941 advocated two of the most important provisions of this bill, but they did not want it in legislation, they wanted it a matter of voluntary agreement.

Then said this gentleman:

I am opposed to it because it will legalize strikes and may provoke labor disputes or strikes.

Just why will legislation which gives a vote to union men legalize strikes? Strikes are now legal. Will giving union men a voice in union policy promote a strike—cause a labor dispute? His argument carries the assumption that union men want to strike and that if permitted to vote will vote to strike. I say the opposite result will be reached, that often they will vote not to strike.

But if it is necessary and if we must meet the issue in this country as they failed to do in France as to whether or not we shall have strikes or production in war industries, then we had better meet it before 100,000 or 300,000 or 400,000 more men die in this war, some of them because of want of supplies. Let us know now whether we owe allegiance to labor politicians, whether we will have production or whether we will support the armed forces—whether we will countenance additional strikes.

The gentleman further said:

I am opposed to it (this bill) because it is very similar to the Smith bill, in principle, which passed the House of Representatives 18 months ago, and upon which the Senate took no action, which measure I voted for at the time, as it was aimed to stop Communist-inspired strikes.

Does it make any difference who inspires a strike? The purpose of the strike and its result are the real issues. Is not this the question before us today?

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. SABATH. May I ask the gentleman whether he actually believes he is speaking in accordance with the rules of the House on a question of personal privilege when he goes into what was stated yesterday in general debate on a bill that is about to be called up? I have no objection, of course, to the gentleman or any other Member at any time obtaining the privilege of addressing the House on a question of personal privilege or the privileges of the House, but I think the gentleman should recognize and realize that he is not speaking on a question of personal privilege; he is speaking about the bill that is before the House now, on which the gentleman will have plenty of opportunity later to speak under the 5-minute rule and also, perhaps, in the additional hour of general debate which will be agreed upon and which the chairman asked for a few minutes ago.

Mr. HOFFMAN. And did not get. I thank the gentleman for his observation and for his admonition, and all that, but unfortunately I cannot agree with him for the reason that this article charges that I have conspired to interfere with the operation of the armed forces, because I oppose what they are pleased to term antistrike legislation. I am trying to show that this legislation to which the gentleman refers in no way would interfere with or hinder war production. I am sorry that I do not have the intelligence to make my point clear.

Mr. SABATH. Oh, no; I would not say that. I would not charge the gentleman with not having that intelligence.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Undoubtedly the gentleman's charity and good nature would prevent him from making such a charge.

Mr. SABATH. Personally, I do not believe the gentleman's name has been mentioned in that article. Has it?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes. I was honored by having my name mentioned with that of Mr. Rickenbacker and that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES].

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman should not assume that it was meant to apply to him.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Was the gentleman here when I stated my question of personal privilege?

Mr. SABATH. I am always here when I hear that the gentleman is going to speak.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is a high compliment, too. It certainly is a high compliment. But no notice was given that I was to speak. I did not know it myself until the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] just before I raised the question mentioned my name. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was on the floor then the gentleman's hearing must be bad or else I did not speak loudly enough, because my name was read when the privilege was requested.

Mr. SABATH. It is getting a little weak.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Going back to the discussion when I yielded to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH]. At that time, reference had just been made to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], who stated that he was opposed to this bill, because it was very similar to the Smith bill in principle, and for which he voted, as he believed the purpose of the Smith bill was to stop Communist-inspired strikes.

Let me repeat. Does it make any difference who inspires a strike? The purpose of the strike, its effect upon our war effort, are the real issues, and the question here before us today is whether, as has been stated time and again, we propose to see to it that legislation which will demand and secure from everyone the fullest cooperation in the war effort, the most complete support of our fighting forces, is enacted, or whether we will yield to the demands of administration politicians, of labor politicians, and permit them to have, as they have had for months, their way with the production program.

It is true, as has been so many times said, that our production record is a marvelous one; that the majority of the men and the women engaged in war production have worked faithfully and well. But it is equally true that a small minority of workers, drawing—if their wages be compared with those of farm workers, clerks, and others engaged in civilian pursuits—wages which are exorbitant, have hindered production; have used every available excuse to increase their compensation, regardless of the effect upon wartime economy.

The question before us today is this: Are we to have the coal which turns the wheels of the factories which make the guns, the planes, the ships, the tanks—all the munitions of war; which process the food, which fabricate the clothing, that the soldier, the sailor, and the airman must have if we are to win?

We cannot dodge the issue. Nor can we deceive our people at home nor the men in the service.

Mr. Speaker, this bill has two main provisions. One is the provision for a vote before a strike is called. Just last week we had up this so-called poll tax matter, and I recall how my Republican friends, including the gentleman to whom I just made reference, the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISH], and a majority on the other side were insistent that that legislation be passed. If it is necessary that the folks of the South, regardless of their ability to pay a poll tax of $2, as in Mississippi, be able to vote in a general election, how much more important, how much more vital is it that when we come to the question of whether there shall be a strike in a defense industry, whether a man shall quit his job, be forced to quit his job—how much more important is it that he should have the right to vote on that proposition? Should he not have the right to vote? Is not that the American way? What do they say about it?

Let us see what Mr. Green has to say. Then also gentlemen brought up another proposition—that they had not had a hearing. Why, bless my soul, away back in 1941, hearings were held before the Committee on the Judiciary, and before the Committee on Rules, at which Mr. Green and others, including Mr. Meany, then secretary-treasurer of the A. F. of L., had all the time they wanted to state their views. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], a member of the committee asked about this question of whether or not there should be a secret vote before a strike should be called, and what did Mr. Green say?

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Green, a moment ago you spoke about when a strike has been officially approved. I am just wondering whether or not in the consideration of legislation you would feel that the Congress ought to enact legislation requiring the taking of a vote, a secret vote, on the question of a strike by the members of a craft?

Mr. GREEN. I do not think you need any legislation. That is the policy of the American Federation of Labor, to take secret strike votes.

Mr. WALTER. Yes, sir. Now, if that is the policy of your organization would you object if we were to write that policy into law?

Mr. GREEN. What for?

Mr. WALTER. Well, perhaps there would be other people affected who have not adopted that fine policy.

Mr. GREEN. That is the principle of compulsion which labor resents.

Mr. WALTER. Is it a principle of compulsion or is it merely an instance of the democratic processes being complied with?

Mr. GREEN. It is a form of Government control, a form of governmental order saying to labor, "You must do thus and so." Labor would probably do it, all right. It is just like the adoption of our no-strike policy. We have done that wholeheartedly and willingly. But the probabilities are if Congress would say, "You must do that," then there would be rebellion.

Do you get the point? Let us state it in this way. Mr. Green said, back in 1941, speaking for the American Federation of Labor before the Committee on the Judiciary, that there should be and that it was the policy of the American Federation of Labor to have a secret vote before a strike, and then he said that, notwithstanding the fact that he believed in that policy, that he thought it was right, and that for years they had followed it, that if we write it into law to compel the few who do not agree with it, to compel Lewis, who apparently does not believe in it, to abide by a policy which is right and fair, there would be a rebellion.

Well, if we are going to have a rebellion in this country, we better have it before we get further involved abroad. We better have it now, we better have the issue settled as to whether men can strike against the Government, against the armed forces, as to whether men for $2 a day or 2 cents a day can shut off production of arms and munitions of war which men across the seas must either have or die. I say we better have that issue decided now before we send another million men across the sea, for they will be defenseless if this policy continues. Why praise our form of government if it cannot protect and supply the men who are fighting its battle. Why fight a war to force our form of government on other nations when it can be defied here at home by John L. Lewis and other labor politicians.

Let us see what Mr. Meany, secretary-treasurer of the A. F. of L. said in 1941, and here is the official transcript. What does he say about it, and I read from page 64. He says:

I want the committee to understand that our policy goes not against the cooling-off period as a matter of agreement between employers and employees; it is against the cooling-off period as a matter of statute law. I have personally signed agreements as long as I have been connected with the trade-union movement, that called for a cooling-off period. We agree with the employer that when the expiration of an agreement is reached, we set a 3-month period aside in which you have to give notice. That is standard practice, and has been for 50 years.

This bill provides for a 30-day cooling period.

That provides for a cooling-off period by agreement between employers and employees so that it cannot be used as a weapon by one side as against the other.

That is an agreed, a standard practice that we have had for 50 years, and we believe in that practice, and we insert it in our agreements at every possible opportunity.

If they agree that it is a good policy why not write it into the law?

And yet there are those here on the floor of this House who say that those two things recognized by the unions themselves as being good and necessary, shall not be incorporated into law. Why? Because it is compulsion. I may agree that I will not steal. I may agree that I will not get drunk and come on the floor of this House intoxicated. Should there not be a rule that would punish both? How quickly would I be expelled if I came down here inebriated, staggering around in a drunken state? How long would I be a Member of this House if I made that a practice? Yet these men say of the two most-important provisions of this bill, "The idea is good. We believe in it. We follow it, but do not try by law to make us abide by a rule that we have made for ourselves."

I will not take any more of your time. This issue is clear. There is no excuse for branding a man who votes for legislation which will enable workers to serve not only their country, but to uphold the hands of those they have sent abroad to fight their battles as either antilabor or disloyal. The administration has ducked and dodged. This Congress either decides that we will go along and support the men who have been forced by a law that we passed to fight our battles, or we decide that we will let them take their chances with what production some few men can bring about. We have had an example, an illustration. We have it today. It is not something to speculate about. It is not something in the dim and distant future. It is here with us now. Five hundred thousand miners holding down the production of the coal which the factories must have if they are to furnish the ships, the planes, the tanks, and the guns which the men who have gone must either have or die without even having a chance. Last week we had the strike of 50,000 men in the rubber industry.

The threat of defeat at election put out by the A. F. of L. a few days ago and the threat made by the C. I. O. to the same effect is an idle threat, for our people are not back of the men who make those statements. To me there seems to be just one issue. Is our Government in America supreme? Can a government which says to the boy on the farm and in the factory and in the schools—six boys graduating from high school in my home town next week are going to be inducted the next day—that they must leave home and friends; and fight, and perhaps die, admit that it lacks either the will or the power to give them fighting tools? They are not listening to any call to strike against going into the Army. They are going wherever they are sent. Are we going to say to them, "Yes, boys, you are just past 18; you are going, but here at home the Congress does not see fit in its wisdom, or lack of it, in its courage or lack of it, to pass legislation which would compel those who remain at home to give you the support that you need, that you must have if you are to win."

The charge made in that article is false, as we all know, and I will take my chance with the folks who remain at home and with the boys who come back from the war, rather than with the fellow who dictates to the politicians in the departments here in Washington, before I will follow the orders of the so-called leaders of these labor organizations. It is a choice easily made, for to me my first thought is of the men who are fighting for me, for my children, for my country.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in two separate instances, in one to include a copy of a resolution unanimously adopted by the Cleveland Federation of Labor against and condemning unauthorized strikes; and in the other a copy of a telegram sent by Mr. A. of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of S. 796, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. At the close of the debate on yesterday the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] had consumed 56 minutes; the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] had consumed 1 hour and 6 minutes.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] is recognized.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, during the 13 years that I have been a member of the Committee on Military Affairs I have voted to report out a great many bills with which I was not in entire accord. I have also voted for a great many rules on the floor of this House where I voted against the bill on final passage. I happen to belong to that school of thought which holds that every measure in a democratic body is entitled to fair debate and just consideration.

I oppose some of the provisions of the pending bill and when amendments are offered I expect to support them; but I feel we are confronted with a serious crisis in this country and that this Congress and especially the people of the country are demanding legislation. I know that some of the provisions of this bill are untimely. Some of them are unfair and unjust and I will not support them. Above all, I think they will fail to produce practical results. I am anxious to see some legislation that will meet this terrible crisis that now confronts us in the coal fields of the country. This House more than 18 months ago discussed a general labor bill, which was hardly considered in the other body. They have completely ignored it. I think the time may arrive later when this House ought to consider general legislation covering the entire labor field, but there has always been a kind of peculiar psychology about some of this so-called labor legislation. I recall that back a few years ago when labor wanted many of us, including myself, to support wage and hour legislation and the creation of the National Labor Relations Board prevailing wage law, Davis-Bacon act, and many other things in connection with the welfare of labor, and which many of us actively supported, there was no objection made at that time. I think my labor record both here, and before I came here, will compare favorably with any Member of the House.

Labor is entitled to the same fair treatment as any other group of our citizens, but those who will not obey the law and practice justice should be made amenable to it. We have legislated and regulated the farmers, industrialists, contractors; prosecuted the doctors as well as many good citizens who violate O. P. A. regulations. The innocent have nothing to fear.

I should like briefly to recount the steps that lead up to this present bill. I wish you would take time to read the hearings, especially of those who came before the Committee on Military Affairs. Some of the criticism directed to the chairman has neither been just nor fair. At the request of the ranking minority member of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] in which I later joined, the chairman thought it was only fair that the representatives of the various departments charged with production should come before the committee and explain why and give their reasons for the letter they wrote to the Speaker of the House and the chairman of the committee. I may say in all fairness that many of those suggestions were adopted and later will be offered as amendments to the bill. In the committee an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. DAVIS] to sections 2 and 3 of the bill, later actively supported by members of the committee such as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], myself, and others, feeling that in view of the statements made by those charged with production, namely, representatives of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the Maritime Commission, that those sections did nothing in the world but legalize strikes. So I anticipate that that amendment will be offered again; but to get right down to the very heart of this bill may I remind my colleagues that the testimony adduced before the committee this week showed conclusively that at a meeting a few months ago the no-strike agreement was had in which Mr. John L. Lewis—Mr. John L. Lewis, I repeat—Mr. Philip Murray, Mr. William Green, and many other representatives of labor agreed absolutely to no strikes during the war; then came along the fateful day of May 1 when the coal miners went out on strike at the behest of Mr. Lewis.

If I may recount a little more history, may I recall to your minds that the day they went out the President of the United States, who is the Commander in Chief of the armed forces, issued an Executive order that the Government should take over the coal mines of the country. What did he do? He appointed Mr. Ickes as director in charge of that matter and they unfurled the American flag over every mine. Uncle Sam then became the boss. On the night of May 2, if I may quote his words, the President and Commander in Chief said this:

> A stopping of the coal supply even for a short time would involve a gamble with the lives of American soldiers and sailors and the future of our whole people. Therefore, I say to all miners and to all Americans everywhere, at home and abroad, the production of coal will not be stopped.

The very day when that flag went up over those mines the Pittsburgh Coal & Coke Co., the Philadelphia Mining Co., and the other great mining companies of the coal regions of the country ceased to be the operators and managers of those mines; the operator was nobody but our own Uncle Sam.

A few days ago those miners went out again at the behest of their leader. Against whom, if you please? Not against the owners and operators of the mines; they went out against the President and the Commander in Chief of the United States. I take the position, and I expect to defend it—I do not care what happens to me personally or politically—that no man in peacetime and more especially in wartime has a right to strike against his Government. That is the issue, and that is what we ought to boil this bill down to and try to be practical. I want to get results. I think we can wait about general labor legislation.

I invite a careful reading of section 13. I cannot read all of the provisions in the brief time allotted to me, but I want to refer to that section of the committee amendment dealing with interference with Government operation of plants. It reads as follows:

> INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS
> SEC. 13. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or other property is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or property, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or property by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

Why should any honest and patriotic American citizen object to that?

I challenge any man or woman on the floor of this House to point out in this bill a single word that says a man does not have a right to strike. I challenge him to point out where it destroys or diminishes the right of collective bargaining. I challenge him to point out where there is a single prohibition against the right of free speech. I challenge him to point out where it prevents peaceful picketing. It does none of these things.

The bill as reported does repeal the Norris-LaGuardia law about injunctions. I opposed that in the committee and I expect to offer an amendment here to strike it out. There was a provision in the original bill to outlaw the closed shop. I opposed that in the committee and by a majority vote that has been stricken from the bill. I am opposed to strikes in wartime, and that is all we ought to undertake at this time, because that is all we can hope to pass in the Senate and get approved.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WRIGHT. Read the next section. There is a criminal penalty.

Mr. THOMASON. Of course, there is a criminal penalty.

Mr. WRIGHT. Does not the gentleman thing it would be better and more effective to have injunctive relief?

Mr. THOMASON. No; I am opposed to injunctions in labor disputes. I cannot yield any further. For heaven's sake, we are in a war, the Commander in Chief has taken over the coal mines in order to provide coal for the winning of this war. The men are working for the Government of the United States and they have struck against their country in wartime. That cannot be defended. Does the gentleman mean to say there should not be some criminal provision providing either a jail sentence or fine when men violate the law? We are in total war.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman asks me a question.

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not say there should not be a criminal penalty, but I say injunctive relief would be more effective.

Mr. THOMASON. I disagree entirely with you. I oppose injunctions just as I did "yellow dog" contracts. Is there any man or any group of men in the United States bigger than our Government? That is the issue. I am for my country first. That is the reason I am supporting legislation on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as they may desire to the following gentlemen, and I ask unanimous consent that they may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD: The gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JENNINGS], the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER], and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is a grave responsibility that rests upon the Congress today in its deliberation upon the Smith-Connally bill to place a legislative curb upon strikes and to regulate labor unions during the war. As representatives of all the people of the country, we are to decide whether the great majority of them will be properly represented or whether a minority group of labor leaders who profess to find in this proposal something sinister and hostile to the rights of labor shall be dominant, and work stoppages allowed to continue at a time when the existence of our life as an independent nation is hanging in the balance.

Let it be clearly understood that most of those who are supporting this measure are not unfriendly to labor. I firmly believe in the right of the workingman to organize into labor unions for the purpose of protecting him from exploitation by an unscrupulous employer. A necessary corollary to the right to organize is the right of collective bargaining through which the union officers negotiate with their employers to correct any apparent grievance. Furthermore, a necessary corollary to the right of collective bargaining is the right to strike, for that is the only instrumentality of compulsion which labor has to correct a grievance. These are the three spearheads by which labor has succeeded in obtaining for itself many of the benefits of the past 25 years. These are the "rights" which must and should be protected at all times, both in war and peace.

But, Mr. Chairman, the bill before us does not deny to labor any of these rights in spite of all the protestations of the professional labor leaders to the contrary. In simple terms, it provides that in the event collective bargaining should fail to obtain an adjustment of any particular dispute, then a period of 30 days must elapse before a strike is called. The right to strike still exists under the bill, but that right cannot be exercised within 30 days after other efforts for an amicable settlement have failed. Certainly, this is not an unreasonable provision.

This requirement is what is known as the cooling-off period, in which tempers and emotions and personal animosities are allowed to moderate so that the immediate problem or dispute may be viewed with a calmness, fairness, and lack of passion. Already some States of the Union have enacted statutes similar to this, which were opposed vigorously by the spokesmen for labor at the beginning, but which, in actual operation, have proven to be both effective in curtailing strikes and at the same time in accomplishing the goal which labor has sought. The workingman in those States has found that his right to strike still exists in spite of the law, and he is satisfied. The same result will be obtained when this bill is enacted into law.

There are some persons who claim that this legislation is not necessary for the reason that the spokesmen for labor have solemnly promised that there would be no strikes during the war. This in the face of the fact that the great coal strike is now on and 500,000 miners not on the job. What is the record of the War Labor Board in regard to strikes and labor disputes? Since it was created several months ago the W. L. B. has disposed of only 786 disputes, or an average of 50 cases per month. It now has pending before it some 2,000 unsettled cases, which, based on previous experience, will require 3½ years to settle. It is these disputes, Mr. Chairman, from which strikes result. Furthermore, the records indicate that in 1942 there were a total of 2,968 strikes in this country, the greatest number for any year in our history, except in 1937 and 1941. During the month of April just past there were 395 strikes, establishing a record which, if maintained for a year, would total more strikes in 1 year than have occurred in all the combined years since the Department of Labor was created. Strikes are a serious and menacing problem and require the immediate attention of the Congress.

It has been asserted by those who are opposed to this bill that to enact it would be tantamount to an attack upon labor as a whole and charge them with unfaithfulness and disloyalty in time of war. What a silly and preposterous argument. Because laws are passed providing punishment for murder does not mean that all people are suspected of being guilty of murder. Because it is illegal to steal does not imply that everybody is a thief. Because a law is proposed to reduce strikes in the interest of the successful prosecution of the war does not mean that all workers are guilty of violation of the pledge of labor not to strike. No laws would be necessary if everyone were honest and fair and honorable. It is to punish the few and to suppress the temptation of some that laws are made. Honest labor has no reason for offense at this bill—it is only those whose conscience hurts who complain.

No one questions the loyalty and determination of the great majority of workers in this country. Their sons are in the field of battle and on the high seas the same as the boys of the employer and the office worker. They realize the grave danger in which our country rests; they know the importance to the success of our men at the battle fronts that there be no suspension of war production; they are willing to and have worked long and arduous hours; most of them have refused to strike even though they have felt themselves to be aggrieved. It is not those people whom this bill would affect; rather, it would curb the very, very small minority of laborers and labor leaders who persist in practices which are accepted in peacetimes but which have no place when their nation, their homes, their lives, and their jobs are in peril. Some of them have even gone so far as to defy the power and authority of the Chief Executive and the Commander in Chief. Those men who believe themselves above and beyond the power of Government and who seek to make selfish gains for themselves during the exigencies of war, can and must be checked.

By what right, sir, can this Government arbitrarily take a young man from his school, or his profession, or his business, and his home, compel him to give up substantial earnings, tear him away from his wife or mother or children, clothe him in the uniform of a soldier, put a pack on his back and a gun in his hand, command him to go forth to battle a common foe and expose himself to the shot and shell and hell of war and, at the same time, permit any person or group of persons, for personal and selfish reasons, to refuse to work and make the very things which that young man needs to protect himself from the enemy or to inflict harm to the enemy? By what right, I ask, can that same Government confiscate the excessive earnings of a corporation, which have been occasioned by the war, or commandeer the plant, equipment, or property of any corporation or individual for the purpose of increasing war production and, at the same time, permit a worker or group of workers to stop production because they are dissatisfied with the wages they receive? There must be a uniformity and fairness of treatment for all the people, else the powers of government are misguided and abused.

Deliberation on this bill has not been hurried or superficial. It has been considered most thoroughly by both branches of the Congress. Many committees of both the House and the Senate have held long and exhaustive hearings on this general subject matter for the past 2 years. A bill similar to the one now before us passed the House in December 1941 by a substantial vote of 252 to 136. When it went to the Senate it was allowed to die at the hands of a committee dominated by administration influence. Just a few weeks ago, when the coal strike threatened to cripple our war production, the Senate passed the Connally bill, which had been pending before that body for some time, by a vote of 63 to 16. The bill now before us is a combination of the bill passed by the House in 1941 and the Connally bill. It was reported unanimously by the House Committee on Military Affairs.

Subsequent to the report of the measure, certain high officials of the Executive Department protested the passage of the bill, at the instance, we are told, of the Secretary of Labor. Once more, the Executive branch of the Government has undertaken to thwart the expressed will of the representatives of the people, and we again see evidences of the lash of the dictator, which has been characteristic of the New Deal over previous and supine rubber-stamp Congresses. It is time for the Congress to face its responsibilities squarely, and honestly, and fearlessly, without danger of intimidation or recrimination. Unity we must have; unity we all seek; but that does not mean that the people's spokesmen must follow blindly the directives and edicts of the Executive, even in time of war.

It is time for the Congress to act. The President, though clothed with ample powers to subdue strikes, has failed to act. Even today, there are over a half million workers refusing to produce the coal which is so essential to our war production. Neither the desire of any person or group of them for a fourth term, nor the obligation which is due to an organization which contributed a half million dollars to the New Deal campaign fund in 1936, can be allowed to interfere with the production of the sinews of war. The day for temporizing and vacillation by the President in dealing with this vital matter is over. It is now time for the people, through Congress, to speak.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat, this bill does not deny organized labor any of its rights. It does not deny men the right to organize into unions. It does not prevent collective bargaining. It does not prohibit peaceful picketing. It does not withdraw the right of labor to appeal to Government for redress of any wrongs. It simply imposes upon labor many of the duties and responsibilities that are already imposed by law upon practically all other groups of our citizenry. As a friend of labor who believes in unions; in its right to organize; in its right to bargain collectively; in its right to strike under normal conditions, I wish to urge that the rank and file of labor, the overwhelming majority of whom are as patriotic as any Member who serves in this body, put their own house in order, else they will lose all the benefits they have gained in the past quarter century. It is my firm conviction that once this bill is on the statute books and labor itself understands its purpose, its meaning, and its effect, they, themselves, will admit the wisdom of it and become its strongest advocates.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, this is a war measure. Its purpose is to secure uninterrupted production of ships, guns, tanks, planes, munitions, and other necessary war supplies.

This Nation is engaged in a war on the seven seas and throughout the whole world. The people of this country are fighting for the life of the Nation. They are fighting for the lives, the liberties, and the security of every man, woman, and child in the land. Millions of our boys are under arms. In the Army alone, as of May 23 of this year, 6,759 have been killed in action, 14,865 have been wounded in action, 22,494 are missing in action, 16,301 are prisoners of war. The casualties in our Army total 60,420.

In the Navy, as of June 3, the killed are 584 officers, 5,096 enlisted men, making a total of 5,680; officers wounded, 136; enlisted men, 2,100; making a total of 2,236; officers missing, 850; enlisted men, 9,059; a total of 9,909; officers prisoners, 202; enlisted men, 1,339; a total of 1,541; total officers in all categories 1,772; total enlisted men in all categories 17,594. The casualties in our Navy total 19,736.

Among these dead are the heroes who with General Doolittle bombed Japan, were captured and brutally murdered by the Japs.

We have just begun to fight. The campaigns through which our armed forces have gone are but preliminary skirmishes compared to the tremendous and bloody fighting that lies ahead of our armed forces. Responsible heads of our War and Navy Departments have repeatedly warned that casualties of more than a million may be expected before the war is won.

This is a day of mechanized warfare. We are engaged in total war. The overwhelming majority of the American people are determined that no man nor set of men shall be permitted to slow up, sabotage, or in any other wise interfere with the successful and victorious prosecution of this war. The people of this Nation are determined that no man nor set of men, through individual or concerted action, shall be permitted to send our boys, unarmed and unequipped, to certain slaughter. Such a course would be a reversal of the entire history of this country and would lead to our humiliating defeat and to the enslavement of our people.

"To bring the conflict to a successful termination" this Congress has pledged the wealth and the lives of our people. In fulfillment of that pledge more than $200,000,000,000 have been appropriated, and we have builded 8,300,000 of our young men into a living wall of defense and offense. Into this war to defend our liberty, our lives, and our country, the overwhelming majority of the American people are putting their very soul.

This proposed act is not an indictment of the laboring people of this Nation. The great majority of them are at work. It does not question the patriotism of anybody. It simply provides that the labor of the faithful many shall not be defeated by a few selfish men. It does not suspend a single legal right of organized labor. It does not suspend the laws that guarantee to the working people of this country the right to organize, the right to collectively bargain with respect to wages, hours, and working conditions through representatives of their choice. It does not require involuntary labor on the part of anyone. It simply says to those who might seek to slow down or stop the continuous production of materials necessary to the successful prosecution of the war: "Before you do this, let the men and women who compose your organization vote on the question—and then for 30 days let us see if the differences can be settled by peaceable mediation, conciliation, and voluntary arbitration."

The attitude of those who oppose this measure may be boiled down to this: They say to this Government and to this Congress: "You may take the boys of this Nation, put them into our armed forces at $50 per month to fight, and if needs be, to die, but do not you touch, by law or otherwise, the man, or the men, who undertake, in defiance of the Government and the safety of our people, to slow down or stop our effort to arm, equip, feed, and support our boys in this war."

The act as passed by the House provides:

Section 2 makes it unlawful for a war contractor to conduct a lock-out against his employees until after the expiration of 30 days from the date on which such a contractor gives to his employees, or their representatives, and to the Secretary of Labor, written notice of his intention so to do, together with a statement of his reasons for such an intended lock-out. This section makes it unlawful for employees of a war contractor to strike until after the expiration of 30 days from the date on which they, or their representatives, give to such contractor and to the Secretary of Labor written notice of their intention to strike, together with a statement of their reasons for striking.

Section 3 makes it unlawful for employees of a war contractor to strike until after the Secretary of Labor has certified the result of a secret ballot, taken under the direction of the United States Conciliation Service, of the employees engaged at the plants, mines, or other places of employment in which such strike is threatened.

The act clothes the National War Labor Board with power to hold public hearings on any disputes that may arise between employers and employees in war industries and to take jurisdiction on its own motion of such disputes. In making its decisions the Board is required to conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended, and the regulations and orders issued under such acts, and, where no law is applicable, to provide terms and conditions to govern relations between any employer and his employees to the end that any dispute shall be settled between the parties on a fair and equitable basis.

In short, the act passed by the House would:

First. Make it unlawful for any persons to "coerce, instigate, or induce any persons to interfere by lock-out, strike, slow-down or other interruption," with the operation of any plant, mine, or other property taken over by the Government.

Second. Provide fines of not more than $5,000 and prison terms of not more than 1 year, or both, for persons found guilty of instigating such delays.

Third. Give the W. L. B. statutory authority with power to subpena witnesses.

Fourth. Require secret ballots on all strike votes in war plants and a 30-day "cooling off" period before a walk-out can be called.

Fifth. Prohibit labor organizations from making political contributions.

Sixth. Require unions to register with the National Labor Relations Board and file periodical financial statements.

By the express terms of the act no individual employee shall be required to render labor or services without his consent; and no individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of the act by reason of his having ceased work or by having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

This act, as passed by the House, sets up machinery for the adjustment of labor disputes and for a continuation of work, rather than destructive industrial warfare, strikes, and paralysis of production. There are no strikes in Germany or in Japan. They mean to defeat and enslave our people. Today there are millions of French, Russian, Dutch, Belgians, Poles, and other conquered races toiling in Germany and in the occupied countries of Europe under the lash and at the point of German bayonets. This would be the fate of the working people of this country should we lose this war. Membership in a union and the rights guaranteed our working people under the laws of this Nation would be of no avail and would be but scraps of paper if the Germans and the Japs ever set foot, as conquerors, on the soil of this country.

We are on trial as a free government of freemen and freewomen. Our enemies have said we cannot wage war successfully because our people are free and will not make the sacrifices necessary to win. So far, we have given this statement the lie. The American people—more than 98 percent of them—have been on the job since Pearl Harbor. Our boys face hardship, heat, cold, suffering, and death. On the sea, in the air, and on the battlefield, they have made sacrifices and won victories that entitle them to the support of this Congress. Nothing short of our united support of these heroes will satisfy the American people and their fighting sons.

On the declaration of war, the American Federation of Labor, the C. I. O., and the United Mine Workers gave their pledge that there would be no strikes during the war. These pledges have been kept for the most part. Counting the time lost by unauthorized strikes and the recent stoppage of work in the coal mines, the loss of time in our war industries has been less than 1½ percent. Ownership, management, and the men, women, boys, and girls working in our war plants have wrought miracles in production of war materials.

The men and women in our armed forces are from the homes of this country, from every walk of life.

During the month of May the Axis scored heavily on our home front—perhaps as heavily as we scored on theirs. American boys lost their lives dropping bombs on German factories and mines in order to slow up German production of arms and coal. Hitler did not need to bomb ours to stop our production of coal and steel. More than 500,000 of our workingmen quit work, and it did not cost Hitler one plane or the life of a single German. Our coke ovens were banked, our factories and steel mills slowed down.

But Hitler's factories were not running short of fuel. He was getting plenty of coal, because French and Belgian miners were digging coal every day while their German slave masters stood over them with guns. These French and Belgian miners work 12 hours per day. They cannot strike. The French did their striking back when the French Army was getting ready to fight the Germans—and when the Germans struck the French did not have enough equipment. Now they are slaves. We are calling up our boys to fight. Laval is calling up the boys of France to work as slaves for their German conquerors.

Here are two of the kind of letters I am receiving from mothers and fathers of boys who have been called to fight and, if needs be, to die for this country:

Representative JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.

DEAR SIR: Like a good many of my fellow citizens, I'm fed up to the teeth with the current spectacle of a lot of the tying up of the war effort. Uncle Sam beckons, and my sons lay down their school books to pick up guns, and exchange the comforts of home for the stern discipline of military life. What use for me to protest even if I felt justified?

While I toss on my bed, my 19-year-old wallows in mud and accepts a monthly pittance less than many at home pull down in 1 week. Come January, the second son will graduate from high school just in time to have the finger put on him. It rather strains my patriotism at the seams to contemplate that while these boys renounce all their individual rights, unprincipled men can, by exercising their right to vote strikes (or declare them willy-nilly) condemn these lads to death, on their slightest whim.

My indignation flames at the thought that these men have more power to wield than is their right, or anybody's, in wartime.

I am supposed to have a few rights myself, including that of Congressmen to act in my behalf.

Signed by the mother of a soldier.

Representative JOHN JENNINGS, Jr.

DEAR SIR: I have talked to many gentlemen and we can't understand why you Representatives and Senators can pass laws to take our boys to the armed forces and make them fight and give their lives for $50 a month, and yet you can't, or won't pass laws to stop the strikers from stopping work which is very necessary to the war effort of our boys who are dying for these same men.

We think there should be some law to force them to work or fight, if they don't want to work, let our boys come home and work and let them fight. We farmers are told how much we can get for our foodstuff we produce and also what we must produce; we have the same right to stop producing and demand more pay for products. If we did this, we would be counted very disloyal. Now the general public would like to see some measure taken to force these strikers to stop and let all fight together or let all go down together.

Please reply to this letter.

Yours very truly.

Signed by the farmer father of a soldier.

That the continuous operation of all our factories for the production of war materials and the continuous operation of our coal mines is necessary to the victorious prosecution of this war and to the safety of the Nation and the liberty of our people is recognized by everyone.

And now, when the life of the Nation is at stake, and when its security is threatened, will this Congress act? Shall we refuse to act? Have we a government of laws? Shall we abandon the fate of the Nation to private individuals?

From our brave sailors, marines, and soldiers who are fighting, bleeding, and dying all over the world there comes a challenge to this Congress.

From every fox hole and battlefield, from the frozen slopes of the Aleutians to the desert sand of North Africa and the muck and pestilential swamps and jungles of the South Pacific there comes to us a cry that will not be denied.

From hospitals where our wounded languish in pain and anguish, from the graves of our dead, whose blood cries out to us from the grounds, from the hearts of the fathers and mothers of these boys there comes an appeal that should turn the "coward's heart to steel, the sluggard's blood to flame."

From Japanese and German prisons, where our boys are crowded behind barbed-wire fences, there comes a summons.

I, for one, am ready to stand up and be counted in favor of the bill. I take my stand with the fathers and mothers of these boys, living and dead, and with the boys who stand between us and slavery and the outrage of our women and girls.

This I know, all over this land fathers and mothers of boys who are under arms and who will be called to arms are anxiously awaiting the result of the vote on this bill. Our soldiers, sailors, and marines everywhere are awaiting the roll call on this bill. Hitler, Mussolini, and Hirohito await it. Let the answer be emphatic. It should be unanimous.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, in the supreme court room at our beautiful State capitol in Nebraska you find these words engraved: "The eyes and the ears are poor witnesses when the soul is barbarous." We might also say, "A man convinced against his will is of the same opinion still." Mr. Chairman, there has been considerable heat and not too much light in the discussion of this labor legislation.

I question whether anything I might say or anyone else will change many votes in this body. Most of us have made up our minds be it good or bad.

I did not like the bill as originally presented to the Congress. There were features in the bill which I think were bad. Some of the sections have been modified or removed. Amendments have been adopted which have improved the bill. I expect to give it my support.

When any organization or union living and operating in this, a democratic country, fails to adopt democratic plans in the conduct of their business then that union or body becomes a direct threat to the Nation itself. It has been quite evident the last few weeks that some of the union racketeers who direct the activities of the unions feel that they are bigger than our Government. These union racketeers, and I refer to the men of the John L. Lewis stripe, are nothing more than saboteurs to our war effort. They sabotage as much as the worker who might deliberately throw a monkey wrench into moving machinery. They deserve the same treatment as other saboteurs have received in the past.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us merely strikes at the one or two percent who are the racketeers in labor and who enslave the service of millions of loyal American workers. Someone has said that more than a million of the American Federation of Laborers' sons are in this World War. You and I know that these fathers and mothers and their brothers would do nothing which might hinder their boys on the firing line from having every weapon and advantage needed to win this war.

I have thought for some time that Congress ought to have a medal or a badge of honor to give the loyal workers who are on the job day after day working without stint or praise to keep the assembly lines of this country in action. These folks want to work, Mr. Chairman, but because some high-paid racketeers of labor will penalize them if they work when a strike is called, they are forced by existing circumstances not to work. There are only a few of these racketeers but they do control a large body of workers. It is some form of slavery because the laboring man is controlled by the labor boss and he has little to say about his working conditions. It is a peculiar kind of slavery because the worker is earning more than he ever did in his life. It is slavery nevertheless because the man who does the work has no more control over his working conditions than his father had in the days when capital exploited labor. He must follow the rules of the racketeer or be kicked out of the union and thus be denied the right to work. These racketeers are selfishly determined to get theirs while the getting is good even at the cost of too little or too late to the boys on the firing line. The boys in the terrible trenches on many battle fronts of the world want ammunition, guns, airplanes, and tanks and there is little difference between the ammunition and guns made by union or nonunion members. They care not who makes them but they want it and plenty of it.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say at this point that I believe in labor unions. Were I a laboring man belonging to many of the crafts or to an unorganized group I would want to be a member of the proper union. I believe that labor should have the right to collective bargaining. I believe in ordinary times they should have the right to strike. However, today, when we are drafting the flower of mankind to fight for our liberties on many battle fronts, placing in their hands the weapons of war that we should expect and demand from all groups at home equal sacrifice and unity in this total war effort. When the miner strikes, or any other organized group who are making the many materials needed by our soldiers, it is against the public interest and the best interest of our Government. The organized minority must be prevented from calling these strikes in wartime.

There is nothing wrong with legislation which will permit its own members to decide if they want to strike. Is there anything wrong with legislation which permits that same member in a democratic fashion to decide who he wants for his leader? Is there anything wrong when that same union member wants to know what is done with the money he pays in to the union? This legislation will help the common laborer, the man in the rank and file to decide his own fate and that of his union. It will prevent the racketeer from exploiting honest patriotic laboring men and women. Is there anything wrong with that?

It is unfortunate, my colleagues, when leaders of labor threaten you with political defeat because you do not dance to the tune that they want to play. These racketeers would make you a slave just as they are enslaving their own members. This legislation will help good labor unions, it will prevent that small percent from running amuck and sabotaging our war effort.

It will take some moral courage, Mr. Chairman, and I want to remind my colleagues that moral courage is far more difficult to have than physical courage. I do not believe that the Members of this House will prove to be a spineless group of cowards who run for cover because Mr. Lewis, Green, and company are cracking the whip over their heads. I am convinced that the majority of honest hard-working union members want this legislation adopted. Not the racketeers, no, it would spoil their little party.

It has been stated that the unions have given a no-strike pledge; that is true, but since that pledge was given the statistics from the Labor Department show that more strikes than ever have been carried on in this country. I predict that when the 20-percent withholding tax goes into effect that the curve in strikes will go up. The Labor Department statistics show that in April of this year there were 395 strikes. The great General Motors Co., engaged in an all-out war effort, have had 20 strikes in the last 4 months. The Timken Roller Bearing Co., engaged in making technical materials for the military, have had 9 strikes since February 19. It was on February 19, 1943, that the union in this company gave their no-strike pledge. Gentlemen, with the exception of 2 years, there have been more strikes in the last year than in any 1 year of the last 20 years, and all of this under a no-strike pledge and during the most critical period in the history of our country.

Whenever a small organized minority of racketeers and saboteurs can call a strike which paralyzes production in this country, particularly during wartime, it is an insult to your boy and mine, who are fighting their hearts out to preserve this democracy. I say to you again it is time that Congress, the President, and those in authority take these racketeers of labor by the scruff of their necks, and give them the treatment which will convince the country and the union members that the United States Government is bigger than a few leaders with reptile stripes. This legislation should pass, and it will be a step to curb the unholy activities now perpetuated upon this Government.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the increasing frequency and the increasing size of strikes in our country today has caused concern among all the people of our Nation. These strikes have had a bad effect upon the efficiency of our great war effort. Public concern has now increased to the point where immediate action is demanded of Congress. Capital and industry and labor and the executive branch of our Government have been held strictly accountable for the avoidance of strikes up to date, but as strikes have increased in size and frequency the people have now turned to Congress for some vigorous and effective legislation to control this menace to our war effort before it is too late.

The people today are still looking hopefully to us as their Representatives in Congress to meet this need for legislation with straightforwardness and determination.

It has been my privilege to serve on the Military Affairs Committee, to which the antistrike bill—that is, the Connally bill, S. 796—was referred for study and report to the House of Representatives. I could criticize some sections of this legislation, and I could criticize the incompleteness of the hearings and even the parliamentary procedure in giving jurisdiction over a labor issue to the Military Affairs Committee of the House. I could also criticize the executive departments of our Government for waiting until long after this bill was acted on by the Military Affairs Committee to voice their objections to it, as they have done.

Just why the War Department, the Navy Department, the Department of Labor and the Maritime Commission and others of the executive branch of the Government waited so long to voice their protest, has not been made clear by the representatives of those departments and agencies. However, this great strike issue today has progressed beyond the point where the American people are going to excuse Congress from responsibility and for further delay on any such grounds. The strike situation has developed to the point where the American people now demand immediate action and effective legislation by Congress right here on the floor of the House.

Congress is well qualified to pass judgment upon the strike issue now. Public sentiment has crystallized and immediate action is demanded. Congress can and must perfect this legislation here on the floor of the House today if we are to fulfill our obligation to the American public and if we are to serve our Nation effectively in bringing about a timely solution to the interference of strikes with our war effort.

Congress should face this issue fairly and fearlessly and effectively by passing the bill (S. 796) today. Then with the help of this legislation I sincerely hope that organized labor and the President and the departments under him will cooperate to their utmost in putting an end to the strike menace.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the discussion about this bill has been largely directed toward the strike now prevailing in the coal mines. I am anxious for the committee to realize that the coal-mine strike is just one of the symptoms of what is happening to the country, and I want to give you some statistics in reference to what is going on, then I want to explain, if I can, just what is in this bill. There seems to be a great deal of misunderstanding about it.

I inquired of the War Labor Board last week how many cases they had pending and undetermined and how many they had decided in the past 15 months of their existence. I find that as of that time they had decided 786 cases in 15 months, or an average of about 50 cases a month. These are dispute cases, every one of which contains the threat of a strike against a war industry. They have decided in that time an average of 50 cases a month. They have now a backlog of 2,050 cases pending, active, actual labor disputes carrying the threat of a strike. If they never have another case it will take them, according to the average they have made, 3 years and 4 months to dispose of the cases now on the docket. So the coal strike is not the only labor dispute in this Nation by any means.

I want to call your attention to the fact that in the largest industry of war production we have, namely, General Motors, there have been in the past 4 months 20 strikes, an average of more than 1 strike a week in General Motors over the past 4 months. I want to call your attention to the fact that the Timken Roller Bearing Co., a most vital concern to all of your mechanical industries, entered into a collective-bargaining agreement on February 19 of this year in which it was agreed that all disputes should be taken through a certain course before any strikes are called. Since that contract was made in February of this year that company, manufacturing vital articles, has had 9 strikes in violation of that contract.

I read you yesterday some labor statistics and I want to give them to you again so that in the RECORD there may be authority for my statement. In the May issue of the Monthly Labor Review, page 961, issued by the Department of Labor, there were in 1942, 2,968 strikes. That is more strikes than ever occurred in the United States at any time within the past 20 years with the exception of 2 years. One of those years was 1941 when we were preparing for war and the other was in 1937 just after the enactment of the National Labor Relations Act. Those are not my figures. They are the figures of the United States Labor Department.

The Labor Department also issues a monthly digest for the use of Members of Congress. In the digest of May 31, 1943, it appeared that in the month of April there were in the United States 395 strikes. If the strike situation continues on that average for 1943 there will have been more strikes in the United States in 1943 than there have been in all the history of the United States since the Department of Labor began keeping statistics on the subject. Gentlemen, think about that for a moment.

It is said that we have a no-strike agreement. Some say there is not any trouble except this coal strike. I am reading you figures given by the Labor Department on what is going on today, not what went on last year or what somebody may predict will go on. We have a no-strike agreement.

Three months before Pearl Harbor at a convention of the C. I. O., Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., made this statement:

> Nothing must stop the work of organizing the unorganized in America, not even a great national emergency shall stop it.

I submit to the House this question: Has the C. I. O. more faithfully kept its promise to organize the unorganized or its promises that there should be no strikes during this emergency?

I want to get along now to the bill.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this time.

This bill was passed on, except the Connally provisions of it, by a vote of nearly 2 to 1 in December of 1941. It had this unusual thing happen to it, in which hearings were had by the House as a Committee of the Whole for 3 days when it considered every provision in detail, which were voted for 2 to 1.

If you will turn to page 7 of the bill, you will note the first thing is definitions. I call your attention to the fact that in these definitions the railway industry is excluded from the operations of the act, so they will still continue to operate under the Railway Labor Act as this bill does not affect railway labor. Of course, their representatives have been up here; they have been after me, those representing the railway labor group, but this bill does not affect them; it shows that on its face.

Sections 2 and 3 of the bill would provide that there shall be no strike until there has been a 30-day notice. The objections to this section are quite conflicting, because the gentleman who just preceded me said that this section was objectionable because it authorized and legalized strikes. It does not authorize or legalize strikes, because strikes are already legalized. I have never introduced a bill as yet that would prohibit the right to strike, and I never expect to do so. This merely provides that there must be a notice of 30 days given before there shall be a strike.

On the other hand, the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] on yesterday made a statement about those sections in which he said they prohibited the right of the minority to strike. The gentleman from New York is a good lawyer. I can reach but one conclusion about his observation, that is, he never read the bill. In accordance with the bill the majority may strike or the minority may strike, after the strike ballot has been taken.

Mr. CELLER. Will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Excuse me for just a moment until I complete the explanation, I will yield to the gentleman first.

We come now to the section which prohibits violence and intimidation. We went over all that in 1941, and the House voted for it 2 to 1.

Then the next section prohibits what is known as professional picketing, that is to say, if a plant is to be picketed it must be picketed by employees. The House also went over all that in the debates on this bill.

Section 5 outlaws jurisdictional disputes, boycotts, and sympathy strikes. I do not think this House wants to countenance a strike by A union in sympathy with B union, when B union is striking about something with which A union does not have anything in the world to do, and which is perfectly silly in time of war. And that has all been hashed over in the debate in the House in 1941 and was approved by the House by a vote of 2 to 1.

A violation under this proposed law would not result in sending anybody to jail; it provides nothing of the sort. The only criminal penalty attached to this bill arises when the Government is operating the property that has been taken over and there is a strike against the Government itself. That is where the criminal provision comes in.

What impelled the adoption of the provisions that I have read to you? The theory is this, that Congress from time to time has enacted legislation which gave advantages to organized labor that it did not give to the rest of the people of the United States. It gave those rights under the Norris-LaGuardia Act and under the National Labor Relations Act. All this bill does is to say that we do not think you ought to do those things during time of war. We make it unlawful, and if you do it, if you violate the law, then we are going to cut you down a notch and leave you where the rest of the American people are, and withdraw some of the special provisions that have been granted under the National Labor Relations Act and under the Norris-LaGuardia Act. That is all.

Registration of labor unions is required under the bill, and it is quite simple, if you will just read it. I have heard that discussed in this debate, but we debated all that last year.

Now coming over to page 18, to the section "Maintenance of the status quo": that gives to the War Labor Board, when it takes jurisdiction of disputes, the authority to order a stay for the period of 60 days and then prohibits a strike until that 60-day period has been given, so the Government can mediate and settle the controversy.

I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that while that is a stay period, that it is virtually the same provision that the House Committee on Labor reported out here last year, and which was under consideration at the same time the so-called Smith bill was being considered. The Committee on Labor, which has never done anything against the legitimate interests of labor reported just such a provision, that there must be a 60-day stay while the Government undertakes to mediate these differences. Now, if you will look back into the RECORD of that day you will find that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] was acting chairman of the Labor Committee, that he was for it, that he said he believed in it. And, if there had been such a provision, if the Senate had listened to the wishes of the American people, in passing the Senate bill and included what the House had had in its bill, we would not have had this coal strike today; we would not be losing many hundreds of thousands of tons of coal that are so vitally necessary in this period of our Nation's life, since the War Labor Board, under its jurisdiction, could have said, "You must cease and desist for a period of 60 days before you can call a strike, Mr. Lewis."

You would not have a strike if the Senate had passed this bill as the House passed it last year.

My time is so limited I shall not discuss the Connally features of the bill, because I want to yield. I yield first to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. First, may I ask the gentleman if he agrees with what Director of War Mobilization James F. Byrnes said the other evening, as follows:

> Do not forget dur g 1942 only one-twentieth of one percent of time of workers engaged in war work was lost on strikes.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes, I know all that percentage stuff, but I have read you the report of the Labor Department on the number of strikes that took place in 1942, and I have read you their report on the strikes that took place in April, which, if maintained throughout the year, will break all records for the number of strikes ever had in this country.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have just one question on a point on which I am rather confused. Has the President of the United States asked for this legislation?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. No, not that I know of. He never asked me for it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Did he ever ask anybody else for it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RANDOLPH. In furtherance of the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER], I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] could well say that any legislation of this type, restrictive in nature, is not aimed at the majority but at the willful minority. The great body of our workers, in factory, field, and mine, are the patriotic Americans who are doing so much to bring a victory over relentless enemies.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Of course, it is like the law against murder, innocent people not only do not object to it but want it for their protection.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. In section 13 (a), concerning interference with Government operation of plants, is there anything that forbids an individual workman from striking?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. On the contrary, it is specifically provided that there shall be nothing that shall prevent him from striking.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. He not only can quit work but he can participate in a strike, as I understand it, as long as he does not give direction or guidance to the strike.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That is the Connally bill. I am not so sure the gentleman is right on that.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. STARNES of Alabama. With reference to the percentage points quoted, is it not true that if only the 500,000 miners remain out of work for 30 days, it would paralyze the whole war effort?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; if they remain out of work for 3 more days, it will practically paralyze it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has again expired.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN] be permitted to extend his own remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, several times during the last few years, legislation has been presented on the floor of this House which asked for the enactment of measures that would nullify labor's accomplishments and impede its advancement.

Similar speeches were made on December 3, 1941. On that day predictions were made that if antilabor legislation were not passed, production would collapse and the war lost in a very short time.

Three months later, in March 1942, a repetition of this antilabor spectacle was staged in Congress when the so-called Smith bill, of a year ago, was up for consideration.

Again, about 6 weeks ago, the same campaign against organized labor emanated from the floor of this House and a repetition of the same speeches calling for the same shackling of labor in the so-called Hobbs bill.

In spite of the above seasonal assaults against the war workers and the defense producers of this country, American labor has overproduced and far exceeded the most optimistic predictions on the turning out of tanks, bombers, cannons, ammunition, ships, and the other essential needs to win this war.

The latest authentic reports indicate that in February 1943, 3 months ago, less than 2 workdays out of every 10,000 were lost on account of strikes. In March 1943, less than 3 workdays out of 10,000 were lost on account of strikes. On Monday, War Mobilization Director James F. Byrnes, in a speech at Spartanburg, S. C., stated that in 1942 only one-twentieth of 1 percent of defense production man-hour days was lost on account of strikes. All available data indicates a net loss of man-hours averaging each month approximately three-tenths of 1 percent. This record does not show the necessity for legislative measures of the character of the so-called Smith-Connally antilabor bill. Defense workers have performed what is universally regarded as a production miracle.

Every Member of this House, the people of the country, and the members of organized labor deplore and repudiate the actions of John L. Lewis in bringing about strikes and stoppages in the coal production of this country during wartimes. I am not personally familiar with the economic conditions and company store set ups in the various mining localities, but I am opposed to penalizing the millions of loyal and patriotic members of American organized labor engaged in other fields of industry. Everybody knows that in recent months the food budgets of the American family have reached critical proportions. In fact, in every avenue of American life great sacrifices have been made on account of this war. No section of our economic set-up has suffered more than the small businessman. In fact, thousands of grocery men, meat dealers, automobile dealers, gasoline stations, and dozens of other retail establishments have closed their doors and lost everything, but are taking their sacrifices without complaint and in the spirit of patriotism.

Does anybody claim that with almost 50,000,000 engaged in war production in this country, that there would not be some unauthorized tie-ups of production scattered over the thousands of mills and factories throughout America? These interruptions have been condemned by the great leaders of labor organizations which supervise 95 percent of American labor, to wit: the A. F. of L., C. I. O., and the railroad brotherhoods.

A few months ago, absenteeism was the vehicle being used to discredit organized labor throughout America. It has been adequately proven to the American public that absenteeism was greatly exaggerated and not all one-sided—bad housing, inadequate transportation, lack of medical services, lack of day nurseries, inability of foremen and superintendents to handle increasing numbers of women workers, and so forth—all contributed to the absenteeism that existed. In time this is gradually clearing itself up without legislation. Volumes of bitter poison were distributed by a few newspapers and commentators whenever certain misunderstanding by local differences between labor and management took place in factories and industries. This vicious lying propaganda has a far-reaching purpose and effect. Both employers and the leaders of our large labor organizations are entitled to every credit for their cooperation and unified understanding during the last 2 years, without which the great success of our war effort could not have taken place.

We must not overlook that labor is entitled to its real place and credit in this great war effort along with industry, and when the history of labor's accomplishments since December 7, 1941, is told to the people after this victory is won, I feel that American labor will receive its proper credit and honor for the part it has played in preserving American freedom and liberty.

It is significant that one of the first official acts of Adolf Hitler 10 years ago was to destroy organized labor and labor unions in Germany. The free institutions of our American system of government need not fear that our Constitution and our liberty and our privileges will ever be in danger because of the freedom and progress and advancement of organized labor.

Persons advocating this type of legislation should take into serious consideration the results its final passage might have upon the morale and mental attitude of millions of members of labor in this country. Individual members of organized labor, by reason of their inherent American patriotism, are jubilant and proud to be able to take part in this great American war production accomplishment.

Members of Congress should visualize for a moment the feeling in the mind and also in the homes of the average American worker if legislation of this nature becomes effective. Millions of our most patriotic workers might assume an attitude that their Government found it necessary to pass legislation to supervise and compel them to work when the liberties of themselves and their families are at stake.

Since Pearl Harbor, the production of American war workers has astounded the world and it was personally called to our attention by the Prime Minister of England a few days ago on the floor of this House. Let us be careful that by reason of our actions on this legislation that the morale of the American worker is not seriously hampered and our victory endangered, all by reason of unnecessary bitterness engendered at frequent intervals by legislation of this kind.

Hatreds, bitterness, intolerance, and witch burning brought prohibition and its penalties during the last war. We should now reflect to the lesson learned in those days. Government cannot legislate in men's minds that which is not in their hearts. This legislation will lead to confusion, repulsion, and impede America's war effort.

A few quotations from the industrial leaders of America might be important at this time:

William Batt, president of the S. K. F. Industries, said the following at Town Hall on April 17, 1941:

> Where there is delay due to strikes, I doubt if the solution can be found through legislation.

Report of the department of manufacture committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, January 24, 1941, said the following:

> The national chamber believes that antistrike laws prove ineffective and that they will deny fundamental rights to our citizens. The chamber further believes that public interest will be best served by voluntary cooperation.

John S. Kemper, past president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, in an address at the Twenty-ninth annual meeting of the organization April 28, 1941, said:

> While the strike situation is apparently on the mend, it still is the most serious obstacle in our military defense. As a result, there has developed a strong minority calling for the outlawry of strikes and lockouts. As I see it, such a step would be the worst possible way to deal with the problem * * * compulsory arbitration or the attempt to deal with labor and employer disputes by any form of legislative compulsion never has worked out satisfactorily.

William S. Knudson, former president of General Motors, in testimony before the House Judiciary Committee, February 10, 1941, said:

> I don't believe you can make a man a criminal because he is striking.

In his speech before the Veterans of Foreign Wars, April 5, 1941, he said:

> I do not believe that legislation against strikes is necessary or enforceable.

B. C. Forbes, on April 22, 1941, in the Journal and American, New York, wrote:

> This writer has constantly opposed legislation outlawing strikes for the reason that cooperation is infinitely preferable to compulsion.

An article by Stewart Chase condensed from the Factory Management and Maintenance Magazine in this month's Reader's Digest said:

> In a great number of industries over the country, labor-management production committees have been formed for the purpose of mutual cooperation and understanding. Naming a few of the companies where labor-management problems are being ironed out without work stoppage are: Du Pont, Bethlehem Steel, Radio Corporation of America-Victor, United Airlines, Western Electric, General Motors, Caterpillar Tractors, Winchester Arms, General Electric, International Harvester, and hundreds of others.

This presents to the neutral and fair-minded citizen the question, Are these wildcat and scattered work stoppages wholly the fault of the leaders or members of organized labor? Neither labor nor management has any first mortgage on patriotism, but uncalled for greed and avarice on the part of either, may easily bring about local wildcat strikes and work stoppages.

Let us not throw the red herring of communism across the pathway of organized labor in America. The public is fast realizing that this smoke screen has been the rendezvous for enemies of organized labor over the last 30 years. If ever this great free land of ours was on the verge of communism and standing on the brink of national discontent and revolution, it was during 1930, 1931, and 1932, when over 12,000,000 American men were walking the streets and highways looking for work to feed and clothe themselves and their families. The same agitation and prejudices and hatreds are cropping up today that thrived immediately after the last World War. This prejudice and hatred against organized labor in the 1920's gave industry, the employer, and the promoter, a free rein and brought us the stock market, real estate, and the promotional booms which led up to the financial debacle of 1929.

In the Middle West during 1930 and 1931, our farmers, the most conservative class of people, were resisting mortgage foreclosures with pitchforks and ropes, and industry and labor alike were crying for a just solution of their troubles.

Let us not repeat the mistakes of the 1920's and allow hatred, bitterness, and partisan feeling to again run rampant and upset our economic structure and threaten our free governmental institutions.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time on this side to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS].

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, just a little less than 2 years ago, in a period of critical labor unrest, the Senate by an overwhelming vote enacted the original Connally bill, a measure designed to crush out strikes and prevent work stoppages in defense industries by granting the President arbitrary authority to seize industrial property.

When that proposal came to my committee as an amendment to the Selective Training and Service Act I vigorously opposed it. When the House adopted substitute legislation, I fought the property-seizure principle in conference; and later led the fight which defeated it in the House.

Now, again, in another crisis, the House is called upon to devise legislation which will eliminate this chronic threat to our security without at the same time destroying the rights of labor and the individual. Once again the Senate has approved the principle of property seizure. Now we here must decide whether we shall seek a solution in sound, long-range legislation written within the pattern of the Constitution, or whether we shall further abdicate our duties and responsibilities as representatives of the people and delegate additional arbitrary authority to be exercised at the personal whim and fancy, and I might add, for the political advantage of an Executive who has demonstrated his inability or unwillingness to deal with labor problems on anything but a personal and political basis.

The forceful seizure of property, as proposed in the Senate measure, is utterly no solution of the problem we are facing. That proposal therefore does nothing more than validate the arbitrary exercise of power to which the President has resorted with increasing frequency. It does not, in the remotest way, deal with the basic problems involved.

Nothing could more plainly prove the inadequacy of the seizure method than the present crisis in the coal mines. By Executive decree the President seized the mines throughout the United States on May 1, but what has been accomplished? Did that act end work stoppages? Obviously not, for within the month coal production came to a complete standstill. At best the President accomplished nothing but a troubled and uncertain truce in which not a single one of the basic points in controversy has been settled. In fact, if anything the seizure has complicated the problems and intensified the bitterness. What is happening in this instance is convincing proof of the very things I said in July of 1941 when I argued that Congress could not contribute to a solution of this problem merely by granting more arbitrary power to the President.

I emphasized then, and I repeat with all possible emphasis now that Congress could scarcely do more in a single act to jeopardize the American system of free enterprise and the constitutional rights of the individual than we may do in the endorsement of this principle of property seizure at the discretion of an all-powerful Executive.

I have repeatedly warned my friends in the ranks of labor that the Government will never stop with the mere seizure of physical property, because mere buildings and machinery are worthless without the manpower which alone can make them productive. In fact, it ought to be perfectly clear to everyone that the Government contemplates such seizure primarily as a means of seizing control of labor itself. After Government commandeers a factory or a mine, it would be childish to argue that it will not recruit, by force if necessary, the workmen to operate it. What other reason have you heard advanced for such seizure?

This would indeed be antistrike legislation with a vengeance. It would give the President power to crush any resistance organized labor might offer to any whim or fancy he might choose to impose. This would be the means by which the President could actually destroy the basic rights and privileges of the individual.

Consider for a moment, also, what might happen to the American system of free enterprise under such power. Is it difficult to imagine this President, or some even more aggressively minded state socialist using this authority to impose absolute Government control upon all important industry? Consider the present plight of the coal mine operators. I know we read a lot about continuing negotiations between the Government boss, Ickes, the miners and the operators, but this is nothing but the flimsiest shadow boxing. The operators long since have been reduced to the role of innocent bystanders. And their position is typical of all ownership and management caught in serious labor controversy.

The simple truth is that the operators have no authority whatsoever to negotiate the demands of the miners. They do not now have, and they have not had such authority since the President started issuing directives in an effort to stabilize wages. They are reduced to the status of messenger boys who can do nothing but carry the demands of their employees to the President or his agents for decision.

I hold no brief for management in this instance. In fact, I imagine the operators would gladly agree to reasonable adjustments if they can just find a way of doing it without courting criminal prosecution at the hands of their boss, the Government. But the quarrel is not between management and labor, or management and Government. It is between Government and labor. More specifically, this is the usual personal, bitter struggle between a willful Executive who considers labor relations, or more accurately, labor politics his own private preserve; and a type of equally willful labor leadership which insists that the President must share this tight monopoly with a chosen few.

I shall be the last to condone a selfish act by an individual or by any group, no matter how large, which threatens our national security. I do not condone the action of the miners, whose work stoppage gravely imperils our war effort, but by all means let us be careful to assess the blame in this situation where it properly belongs. First, let us admit frankly that the miners have just cause for complaint. Obviously, the administration is failing badly in its feeble attempts to stop inflation, and the miners, like many other classes of people, have suffered a steady decline in real wages as the cost of living skyrockets. Obviously, also, the miners have a right to expect that their wage scales will be kept in line with the pay in other industries, and we must admit that many other lines of labor have fared much more favorably than the miners.

Let us not lose sight of the fact that at the base, this is a titanic struggle between two individuals who are first of all political enemies. Politics, rather than the question of economic justice, is the main issue here, and it would be terribly unfair to blame the rank and file of mine labor for a condition which is primarily the fault of a willful President.

In this situation we have a personal and bitter feud, but consider the possibilities in a different situation. Suppose a strong man in the White House should strike a bargain with just a little handful of men who own labor under the tight monopoly which has been built up by this New Deal administration. Suppose a President decides to deal with a like-minded labor leadership to sell American industry into state socialism. Would not a wave of strikes purposely called in our key industries just about accomplish that conversion overnight under the authority which the President has been exercising, and which this property seizure bill would legalize?

I do not intend to dwell on that possibility, but I would like to point out that it is not nearly so fantastic as many a debacle which has actually overwhelmed free people before.

I sincerely wish that this question might have been considered, both in the Senate and the House in a more deliberate manner, when the national temper had not been so aroused.

I frankly consider this House substitute less than perfect in many respects, and say to you that certain features of it can and should be improved. In fact, I shall offer a substitute in full for the bill which has been reported to you. As debate continues here, and as the matter receives further study in conference, however, I know we can produce really effective legislation which will serve to restore the American labor scene to harmony.

Whatever the final action may be, however, I hope we shall once and for all put an end to labor relations by personal whim and fancy. I hope we will firmly establish the principle that labor relations, like every other important national interest, will be based in constitutional law.

We must be careful to insure that strong-arm methods which jeopardize individual rights or which threaten the important and desirable gains of labor are avoided.

I know that this body shares my confidence in the rank and file of American labor. We know that labor is not striking, and will not strike, except where it has been purposely misinformed and misled. We know that the men and women in the ranks of labor will not impede production and thus endanger the lives of their own sons and brothers and husbands on the battle fronts unless they are absolutely convinced that for the moment they must do so in the long-range best interests, not only of those fighting men, but of the Nation as a whole.

The trouble to date arises from the unfortunate fact that the millions of men and women in labor are confused and uncertain. They have been bombarded from every direction with propaganda and political hokum born of purely personal selfishness in this administration and in a limited group of labor leaders. There has been no source in this emergency to which they could turn for facts and truth, for the sorry truth is that there is simply no clear code of labor law and no consistent course of administration upon which they can depend.

They have known only that a President, with almost unlimited power, writes the administrative law and directs its interpretation to suit his mood of the moment. And because there is no solid basis of law to which they can turn, they are forced to look for opinion and guidance to the only other source they know, a leadership which too often has been more interested in personal power and aggrandizement than in the real promotion of labor's interest.

We are warned by many, including ranking administration officials, that to write regulatory labor legislation now will endanger all labor relations. I vigorously disagree with that viewpoint, for it says in just so many words that American labor will be loyal only for selfish motives and for a definite price. I simply do not believe that. I am, in fact, convinced that the average man and woman who works for a living, either in or out of a union, wants, above everything else, to see labor relations divorced completely and finally from politics, so that all of us at home may work in harmony in the one all-important job still remaining ahead of us.

I can think of no greater service this Congress can render the men who are fighting this war abroad, and the people who are willing to make every necessary sacrifice at home to insure victory and a return to peace in a country that will remain true to our traditions of freedom.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. While I quite agree with the gentleman that there is a good deal of appeasement being carried on by Government agencies and authorities, may I ask the gentleman if he does not believe the provision in the committee bill which authorizes the War Labor Board to issue subpenas to compel the attendance of leaders or workers or operators or anybody else would strengthen the hands of those in authority and put them on a spot, so to speak, where they would have no leeway or reason to evade any longer when they can be given statutory authority?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I do not want to disagree with the gentleman on that, but I am not particularly in favor of that provision in the bill. I believe the War Labor Board has enough authority now under the Executive order to function. I believe the remedial legislation I am proposing is all the Board needs to function effectively.

I am going to offer a substitute to this bill. My substitute will contain sections 2 and 3 of this bill and the report section and a couple of others, which I shall discuss later.

The question is whether you want to entrust to the American laboring people the right to govern themselves, and the right to decide for themselves whether there is going to be a strike. I believe in the patriotism of American labor. You will never convince me that when you say to American labor "You can have a secret ballot to determine whether you are going to strike," they will vote to strike. You will never convince me that a small minority in any plant in any organization or in any industry in this country could force the entire organization to go on strike if they have the protection of a secret ballot.

If you reject this solution of the problem, you say, in effect that labor in this country is dishonest and that labor is unpatriotic. You say, "We are not going to entrust to you the right to decide by secret ballot whether or not there is just cause for a strike."

I do not condone strikes, nor can I understand any problem arising in labor or in industry that would justify labor in exercising its constitutional right to strike during war. But even condemning the strikes that we have had in the country, I say that I do not want to see this Congress write legislation that will deny American labor that basic, fundamental right to strike. I want to trust them. I want this Congress to have faith in labor and say that it may by secret ballot determine what it wants to do.

Mr. ELMER. Has the gentleman thought about the point raised by the gentleman from North Carolina yesterday about the bill being unconstitutional?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I did not hear the gentleman, and I do not know what his point is.

Mr. ELMER. The gentleman says that he is not in favor of labor striking when they want to strike?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I did not say that at all.

Mr. ELMER. That is what I understood the gentleman to say.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Then the gentleman misunderstood me. I said that I was not in favor of strikes, and that I could not understand any condition or circumstances where labor would exercise its right to strike during war.

Mr. ELMER. All right. Under this bill does the gentleman think it provides that I must work for a coal company if I am ordered to do so by the Government, and that I cannot quit working for that coal company if I am ordered to work for it by the Government? Is that in this bill?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. It is not in this bill. There is nothing in this bill that would compel a man to work.

Mr. ELMER. Then if you cannot compel him to work, you give him the right to strike.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. He has that right. There is no law that denies labor the right to strike, and this bill does not take it away from him.

Mr. ELMER. Why does not this bill take away from him the right to strike?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I do not think it would be the right thing to do, and I do not believe it would be constitutional to do so.

Mr. ELMER. Could this House pass a measure that would compel me to work for some other man, if I did not want to work for him?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Why, certainly not. That is slave labor, and I will not even consider that as a possible necessity. American labor is patriotic, and will cooperate with the Government in wartime. We will accomplish much more if we depend upon voluntary cooperation, rather than coercion.

Mr. ELMER. If you take away the right to strike, or if you delay the right to strike, then to that extent you have introduced involuntary servitude, have you not, and that is forbidden by the Constitution.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Of course.

Mr. ELMER. And the gentleman from North Carolina was right when he said this act was unconstitutional?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I do not know what he said about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us is a combination of the Connally bill passed by the other body and the Smith bill which passed this House, about 2 to 1, months ago. When the bill is read for consideration, if necessary we can amend it in order to obtain full production without hindrance from anyone.

I think we all realize that something must be done whereby our national defense program will not be jeopardized in any manner. The safety of this country depends upon the speed of production of war materials. It has been demonstrated that the size of an army does not bring victory, but it is the implements of war, destroyers, warships, guns, tanks, airplanes, and war materials of various kinds.

More than 8,000,000 of our young men and women are now in the armed services of this country and they are entitled to all the implements of war as they need them and in sufficient quantity. We should not permit the shutting down of factories or mines producing something necessary for winning the war, and if this bill does not carry out this idea it should be perfected so it will.

Slowing down of production, either by owners of industry or by labor, will retard our defense program and injure the morale of our young patriotic boys and girls who are training and fighting, though receiving only small pay. Many have volunteered, but those who did not volunteer were and are being conscripted. They must train and fight, and something should be done to prevent continuance of strikes during this emergency.

The subversive element in plants producing implements of war or material necessary to the war effort must not be allowed to destroy the morale of our great fighting forces. We owe an obligation to these young loyal Americans who are fighting for the defense of our country, and that obligation is that we must be loyal, every one of us, and furnish them the material for our national defense. They are not asking for more money in this great struggle to defend our country and save democracy.

The people of this country, especially the young men, accepted selective service as a result of the national emergency. Our people are being called upon now to accept new tax burdens and have the right to expect that the program will not be retarded and that the money will be put to proper use. Many bills have been introduced, and some passed the House, with the purpose of curtailing strikes and speeding up production.

Some time ago the House passed a resolution authorizing the Military and Naval Affairs Committees to investigate the underlying causes of strikes and find out who is responsible and to make such recommendation for legislation as is necessary to prevent any obstacle in the way of production of war implements.

Any reasonable man can understand the viewpoint of young men who are taking military training and fighting and receiving small pay, and of the farmers who are producing agricultural commodities necessary for our armed forces and working from sun-up to sun-down and their pay in many instances is just a small pittance.

I do not understand why the Nation as a whole, including industrial management and organized labor, during this emergency would oppose any legislation which has for its purpose the curbing of strikes in plants producing essential war materials.

I am convinced that the rank and file, and probably more than 95 percent of the workers, desire that further strikes in war plants be prevented during this emergency.

In order to win this war we must cooperate better, make more sacrifices, and bury the differences. Someone has aptly said we cannot fight a war within a war and win either contest.

These are unusual and trying times and all must cooperate in this crisis. I am satisfied practically all wish to be loyal to our country, the greatest democracy in the world. All disputes in industries producing material necessary to the war effort should be settled without resort to strikes so that work will not be slowed down. It is my understanding that in certain sections of this country many of the unions have gone on record endorsing this policy of nonstriking during the emergency, although we have strikes today.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Chairman, for many months we have seen this Government coddle and cater to the whims of John L. Lewis until today he considers himself bigger than the Government. He considers a wage increase for his union more important than the lives of the young men of our country now on the battlefields of the world, and more important than the very existence of the Nation itself.

To be sure certain people of this House are wild in their opposition to any legislation which affects or regulates labor in any way. Today we hear about labor's rights. I know that labor has rights; but I do not believe those rights are greater than those of other individual citizens nor greater than the rights of the National Government itself fighting for its very existence.

Rights of labor are no greater than the rights of individual American citizens, and if it is essential to the successful prosecution of this war all rights and liberties of individuals must be curtailed and restricted. Recently, a bill passed the House making it a criminal offense against the Federal Government for any citizen to know of any acts of sabotage against the Government and not report such knowledge to the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Does anyone claim that such statute would be constitutional in time of peace? The requirements of war and the safety of the Nation have required that the rights and privileges of the individuals, of organized minorities and organized majorities be restricted during the war, that they may be saved for us in time of peace by the winning of the war. Certainly labor should be no exception.

I know the president of the American Federation of Labor has stated openly in the press that the labor unions and his union in particular will use all the assets it has to defeat every Member of this House who votes for this bill.

Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that if labor unions had to account to its members for the use of membership funds, he might have less assets to use for such purpose. As it is he had best be starting the division of his assets, because if, as a Member of this House, I cannot vote my convictions except with fear and trembling, I would no longer care to remain a Member of it. Life is too short, and a man's personal feeling of integrity is too great.

I make no charge against the great mass of American workers. Practically all of them are just as patriotic as you and I. On the whole, they have done a great job of production. I feel that a few irresponsible leaders of labor should not be permitted to run roughshod over the Government of the United States, and actually over the union members themselves. What chance would a coal miner, untrained for other work, have if he refused to accept the dictation of John L. Lewis. You know he would be out and would feel the effects as long as present conditions obtain. On two occasions heretofore beneficial labor legislation has passed this House only to fail to pass the other body.

In spite of the work of some of us, for 18 months these labor leaders and certain persons high in this Government have used their influence to block the passage of any legislation whatever. They have insisted that as bad as strikes were in defense industries, that organized labor itself would correct the ills, which so sorely beset our Nation. We had the pledge of no strike from labor, yet today we find approximately 500,000 coal miners out on strike, called out by a man who considers himself bigger than Government, who apparently is bigger than many care to realize. In an industry, which is vital to the production of arms, machinery, clothing, and which furnishes fuel to keep the people of our Nation warm while they do their part in our all-out war effort, we find these 500,000 men called out by John L. Lewis, called on to lay down their picks and shovels, to play pinochle, if you please, while our boys are dying on the battle fronts of the world, in many instances, because of too few guns, too little ammunition, not enough planes nor supplies, and mind you, many of those young soldiers are sons of the very strikers who add to the chance of these young men never coming home, dying to be buried in an unknown grave. Can we as a Nation permit these individuals through action of their leaders, to place their claim for additional wages above the safety of the Nation?

While legislation to cut out the cancerous growths which have grown up in labor unions has been blocked by pressure from labor-union leaders and perhaps well-meaning men high in Government position, who were going to prevent strikes in time of war, we have had more than 2,900 strikes in 1942 and, I am advised, more than 1,000 strikes so far this year. We have had more than a strike a week in General Motors. Oh, I know it is said that nearly all strikes now prevalent are said to be unauthorized by the labor union. Can you show me any other place where any organization is not responsible for the acts of its subdivision?

It is argued that there is no necessity for any legislation, that this bill will destroy labor. Yet the labor unions, and the Members of this House who oppose this bill were just as vehement in their opposition to the Hobbs bill which did nothing except make highway robbery in the name of a labor union a Federal criminal offense. Neither then nor now does any labor union offer any substitute measure for the protection of the Nation.

I know it is said, and it is true, that the Federal Government has no right to say that a man must work or cannot quit work in peacetime. Our Government in peacetime cannot require a citizen to bear arms. Yet the young manhood of the Nation has been put under arms, their salaries fixed at $50 per month, and now the Nation requires that they risk their lives and in many instances die that the Nation may live. In time of peace certainly this Government cannot fix ceiling prices on commodities, yet today at war, we find the Government fixing the price of practically everything. Through rationing, we find the Government saying how much may be manufactured, sold and to whom. Under the War Manpowers Act, we find men frozen to their jobs, unable to change to a better job with better pay. We find that employers cannot increase the pay of employees. This is hard to bear but mind you, none of this could be done by our Government in peacetime. All are being done today because we are at war, because in time of war the very Nation itself being endangered, the President and the Congress by its declaration of war have bound all the manpower, and all the resources of the Nation to the prosecution of the war. You know there rests in government the right to deal with any group which places a claim to an increase in pay above the welfare of the Nation. In peacetime no, in wartime, yes.

Before I came here, labor and labor unions have been the recipients of great favor from this administration: The Wagner Act, the LaGuardia Act, the 40-hour workweek, the National Labor Relations Act. But I tell you that the actions of a few labor leaders and unions are jeopardizing the whole foundations of labor's rights given them by statute.

Certainly it is not right to limit a workweek to 40 hours while we are crying on every hand about the shortage of labor. Certainly no man should be required to belong to a labor union, to pay exorbitant dues in way of tribute before he is permitted to work for his Government in time of war. That is un-American and a violation of every right known to our Nation in peacetime or war.

To call a strike in a war industry is just as detrimental to our Nation's war effort and to the Nation's safety as would be the greatest act of sabotage imaginable. Are we to punish one because it is done in secret and to let the other go because it is in the open and in defiance of government? They should be placed on an equal plane, where the effect on the prosecution of the war is apparent.

I say to you I believe in collective bargaining, in the right of people to organize, but unions so organized should be held accountable in its finances to its members; in its actions, to the general welfare of the Nation at war.

As has been said perhaps we cannot forbid the strike of an individual because of the constitutional guaranties against involuntary servitude. However, in case of a strike at this time certainly the privileges given to such labor unions should be withdrawn if certain things detrimental to the Nation are done by them. We certainly can protect others in taking the places of those striking and in so doing do our part in supporting the young men of the Nation who are giving their all, while people at home, already making more money than ever in history, are placing demands for higher wages above the lives of their sons. The bill before us is not perfect, and I hope it will be amended in several particulars.

Is there any reason why a labor union should not be required to register? If a labor union conducts it financial affairs honestly, should it mind accounting to its own members? If such union conducts its elections fairly, should it object to having its elections placed under the eye of the United States Conciliation Service, where strikes in wartime are at issue? Labor should not have any objections to settling this matter by law since laws have been found necessary to prevent the few labor racketeers from destroying organized labor itself and every worth-while right which it has obtained through legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I choose the welfare of my country, the safety of its young men now fighting on the battle fronts of the world, to the special rights claimed by John L. Lewis or any special group in our Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCANLON].

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the present bill. Yesterday I opposed the rule, and, in brief remarks, pointed out that at hearings before a subcommittee of the Labor Committee on bills introduced by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] no one had appeared in favor of these measures. As chairman of the subcommittee I conferred with a prominent industrialist from my State and suggested that he appear as a representative of management. The discussion I had with this gentleman was entirely informal, so I do not feel free to refer to him by name, but in effect he told me: "I do not think I should appear before your committee in favor of these bills. Who wants these labor-baiting measures? Management does not. We are satisfied with the status quo. Just because John L. Lewis and the President have a feud, why should we upset our entire labor relations by stirring up a lot of trouble?"

That was, in substance, the opinion of an industrialist—a very prominent industrialist who, before the war, had engaged in many disputes with labor. But he is entirely satisfied with existing labor relations. Certainly, labor does not want these measures, and if management does not want them, who does?

If this so-called Smith-Connally bill were a good bill—which it is not—I would be opposed to its consideration at this time. It is before this House only because there is a coal strike. This body is heated with anger at the threat to war production resulting from the stoppage of work in the bituminous-coal mines. I personally deplore that stoppage. But this Congress should approach the issues before it in a cool and deliberative state of mind. We are not in that state of mind here today.

We are fighting a great and terrible war. Our sons are bleeding and dying—not just for the physical boundaries and properties of the United States of America but for the freedom and rights which are guaranteed to each and every one of us and to each and every group. Management or industry has certain inalienable rights; labor has certain inalienable rights, and agriculture has certain inalienable rights. These rights to labor are also threatened by the present measure, and certain rights of management are also threatened by it. How are we going to answer the questions of our fighting men when they come home if, in the heat of passion, we on the home front abrogate rights for which their comrades died?

The struggle for the emancipation of labor—and labor constitutes the greatest single bloc in our population—has been long and arduous. Can we honestly and conscientiously cancel that long struggle by acting here in the heat of passion? We cannot, and should not. I trust that before this day is ended we shall in our calm, mature deliberations, defeat this bill, under which we would adopt the methods of our enemies and again enslave millions of working men and women.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN].

Mr. FLANNAGAN. Mr. Chairman, when reason gives way to passion we seldom see and think correctly, and in such moments should never legislate.

Proposed legislation that springs from passion, if allowed to wait until passion gives way to reason, is rarely ever considered. This, I am persuaded, will be the fate of the Connally and May bills if we defer action until we recover our true perspective.

Back of these two anti-labor, anti-industry bills stands a strong, outstanding personality whose conduct, whether right or wrong, has aroused the passions of our people. In an attempt to strike down that personality these bills miss the mark and strike down two great American principles, free enterprise and free labor. The Connally bill would commandeer industry and enslave labor; and the May edition of that bill would further tighten the shackles around labor.

But suppose the bills would accomplish the purpose that prompted them and strike down the personality at which they are directed, involving as they do free enterprise and free labor, can we afford to pay such a price to accomplish such a revengeful object? No, my friends, we can never afford to sacrifice a principle in order to either save or destroy a personality.

Be not deceived about these bills. Stripped of their legislative verbiage they would in plain understandable English permit the Government to take over factories and run them with forced labor. If this is done, what becomes of our American system of free enterprise and free labor? I answer by pointing to the sad plight of industry and labor in Nazi Germany. Oh, you say, this is America. Yes; that is true, but do not make the mistake of thinking you can adopt Hitler methods without becoming Hitlerized.

It would be a tragedy if, while our boys are on the battle front fighting to preserve, among other freedoms, free enterprise and free labor, we on the home front, in a fit of madness, did that which would destroy them. And so, my friends, while our boys are giving their lives to safeguard and preserve these two great American freedoms, I call upon all true Americans to rally to freedom's banner and preserve them from the well intentioned, though passion-made, usurpers, here at home.

The American way to settle industrial labor disputes is by voluntary agreement, and not by force. In no other way can free enterprise and free labor be preserved. In no other way can we hope to secure the production needed for our war effort.

Soon after Pearl Harbor, the President, industry, and labor, following the American way, entered into a voluntary and unconditional no-strike, no-lock-out agreement. That agreement has worked, and under it the total man-days lost has been less than at any other time in the industrial history of our country. And under that agreement we have put over the greatest production job in the world. Yes, my friends, our war-production effort has far exceeded the expectations of the most sanguine among us and will be recorded by future historians as a miracle in production. Now, when your passions seem to be getting the better of you, just sit down and think how the job has been put over—by the Government, free enterprise, and free labor voluntarily teaming up together and cooperating and working in unison to produce that which is necessary to keep America free. Do this, and I know you will agree with me that it could have been done in no other way.

It was a wholesome sign, an omen that our democracy nere at nome is in safe hands, to see Secretary of the Navy Knox, Assistant Secretary of War McCloy, Secretary of Labor Perkins, Chairman Nelson of the War Production Board, Chairman Land of the Maritime Commission, Chairman Mills of the National Labor Relations Board, and the four public members of the War Labor Board join hands with our great labor leaders in opposing these bills. And it is a warranted assumption that these high-ranking Government officials, who are so effectively directing our war effort, in openly and vigorously opposing the legislation were expressing an opposition shared by our great Commander in Chief, Franklin D. Roosevelt. If this were not true, I do not think they would have spoken.

In conclusion let me say if our democracy during this war reaches the point where in order to carry on further we will have to take over industry and run it with enslaved labor, why, we will then have lost that which we are fighting to retain, and the blood of our boys will have been shed in vain.

There is only one way to continue our unparalleled war production, and that way is to continue to follow the American way of free enterprise and free labor.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Chairman, our processes of democratic government have again reached the forks in the road on their way to the tomb. Frankly, I state to you that unless lawful authority, by some means, can rise above the powers of John L. Lewis and his labor racketeers and gangsters we cannot maintain our sovereignty as a Nation. This is the third time since hostilities that he has defied the Commander-in-Chief and on the two former occasions was granted everything he asked for. His generosity was so great that a few weeks ago he gave the Government a respite of 15 days, but on yesterday, right in the face of this vote he called out over a half million men, it would seem to show his contempt for this effort to place the sovereignty of this Government above that of his "invisible empire."

In approaching a decision on the issues before this body I will not go into details of the bill since its provisions were so ably discussed and explained by my colleague from Virginia. Its provisions are well known to this House, and its purpose should be.

Throughout the length and breadth of this land, from coast to coast, and from border to border, strikes are continuously in progress. Able-bodied men are tieing down defense factories, walking the streets in idleness, continuously spreading discontent, while women and men are working more than 12 hours per day in the fields of this Nation to feed them and their families, while they eat this food and refuse to make equipment for the defense of this Nation, so sorely needed by the boys who stand guard and bleed and die for them in foreign battlefields.

I have given much thought to this matter over many months. The spectacle the last few weeks has presented has been a pitiful one. Lobbyists have worked these buildings and literature has been freely distributed through the offices actually threatening the Members of this body if they do not yield to their dictation. The power bosses have put us all on notice that they were going after us next year and defeat us if we did not jump through the hoop when we were given a command. This, when we are giving the lives of our boys to protect democracy. I presume it is their idea that a dictatorship is fine if they can do the dictating. I here and now put John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, William Green, and all other would-be dictators on notice that so long as I remain in Congress I will remain here with a free voice and free vote. I further accept their challenge and am ready to meet them before the electorate of my State. I had rather suffer defeat than to be coward enough to be driven around by a despot who places his own greed for power and money above the flag that stands as an emblem of all the glory of all the battles fought by the American heroes through the years, and who now is willing to compromise the very blood of the sons of the fathers and mothers of this Commonwealth to further those two selfish purposes.

I am not concerned so much in how long I remain in Congress but more what I do while I am here. I want to leave a record that my friends who sent me here and my children in years to come will look to with pride. If I did not have courage enough to stand up for our boys who are in the armed services while they are fighting for me I would resign and go home. This same gang vowed to defeat me in my last campaign because I refused to be driven around by them. They spent thousands of dollars against me; they spent so much on one candidate to defeat me until it was equal to an extra tobacco crop; prosperity really reigned in the Eighth District of Georgia for a few weeks. Not only this, but they waged an active and filthy slander campaign against me which they did not drop when my people defeated them but have carried on from day to day while I am here giving my Nation my best, a rotten and filthy slander campaign against me.

In the face of these facts many union men in my district supported me, because they knew that I was a friend to labor but a fighting foe of the racketeer who stood ready to sell his Nation for personal gain. The force trying to destroy me came from the racketeers in the industrial sections of the North, where many of them cannot speak the English language to where real Americans can understand it.

Let us analyze the facts as they exist today and forget for a moment Presidential elections, congressional elections, or any other personal interest and dedicate our time, our energy, and our effort to the service of our Nation, those boys who are fighting in desperation on foreign soil, and the mothers and fathers and wives and children they left behind, until this legislation is disposed of.

It is generally considered and accepted as a fact by all that this war will be won or lost by production. This being true, every man-hour that is lost adds to the casualties the youth of this Nation must suffer. Today there are over half a million men roaming about in blank idleness, which has been a continual thing through the months. To these men thousands of American lives can be directly charged. It is and will remain impossible to determine the number of boys who will die the horrible death of the soldier as a result of these work stoppages that this administration has permitted to exist throughout the breadth of the land.

It is a known fact that through the industrial areas where these strikes are prevalent, wages have been increased many times more than the cost of living has advanced. It is very singular that through my section of the State, with the exception of a few defense industries, mechanics and the other laboring class of people have not received but very little increase in wages. However, there has not been a strike or work stoppage of my knowledge in my State, and I want to congratulate the laboring people of Georgia for their loyalty and patriotism in this regard.

Let us presume, however, that in some instances they have grievances. Then, are they justified in striking?

This administration, that labor is daring and defying at every opportunity, passed the National Labor Relations Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act, in which every privilege and right was bestowed upon labor and protected. Frankly, it is my opinion that it was never intended that man, individually or collectively, should enjoy a privilege without discharging a corresponding duty. However, these acts confer every privilege on labor without imposing the first duty. Further, for the protection of labor, the War Labor Board has been set up, to which, under the law, it is provided that any grievance should be referred for adjudication and adjustment. No fair-minded person can ever contend that this Board has not gone out of its way to lean in favor of the requests of labor. In fact, it has very nearly surrendered to labor and made itself subordinate to its dictates.

Let us see where the rights of the taxpayer come in on this question. I have made an investigation and have learned that the pay roll of the National Labor Relations Board for the month of April 1943 was $227,380; that the pay roll of the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor was $753,563.72; and the War Labor Board estimated as an approximately correct figure its pay roll for the month of April 1943 as $350,000; all of which aggregate $1,330,943.72 the taxpayers of the United States of America expended in the single month of April 1943 to provide a legal means by which any grievance, either real or imaginary, that labor may have could be adjusted. Yet in the face of this, these gangsters rise up as monsters and defy the very law that the sons of the taxpayers of this Nation are fighting to defend. April was not a month of exception by any degree, and by the application of a little mathematics, it can be seen that the taxpayers of America spend in these three divisions in 1 year $15,971,324.64 that there may be no necessity for strikes in America, this huge sum in the face of millions spent to operate the Labor Department.

When you taxpayers of this Nation go to pay your taxes I want you to bear these figures in mind and further remember that these same enemies of democracy following defense industries like vultures and assessed the American workman from $50 to $250 each for the right to make weapons for your boys to defend the shores of this Nation; these sums being collected by the agents of this invisible empire who account to no one. It is impossible to estimate the aggregate so collected, but I say to you that it has run into the billions of dollars, which sums come again directly from the pockets of the taxpayers of this nation. Yet, in the face of these outrages practiced upon the people, they have the audacity to tell you and me they will defeat us if we do not yield to their demands. Before I would sell by people short and be a traitor to the causes of American liberty, I would gladly surrender my right to ever hold another public office.

The most unfortunate feature of this whole set-up is the fact that the source of this entire trouble comes from the strong root of the Communist Party which has become imbedded in the precious soils of American Democracy. There can be no doubt that the outrages committed by labor have been planned, directed and enforced by the Communistic influences in this country. It is unfortunate that the same forces are getting a strong hold in the Government departments right here in Washington and it is most distressing to see that the present administration at least condones their acts and connections with the Government, if not purposely and specifically protects them. It is hoped that the recent announcement coming from Russia of the dissolution of the Third International may retard their activities in this country, but I warn the American people of complacency. Frankly, I do not think it will have any effect whatever on the activities in this country for the reason that they have already gotten too strong a hold.

The nefarious and dastardly attempts of the Communist to fool the lower classes, and especially the American Negro, in to embracing them as a Savior and Liberator, is so cowardly, so full of deceit, when anyone that has studied the history of their activities in the past must know that all labor, including the classes just mentioned, would be subjected to absolute slavery if and when they force their form of government over this country. I warn the American people now that unless those of this nation who yet believe in American democracy become active in thought and concerted in effort, that they will communize this Government within the next 10 years. I want to say to American labor that when this happens you will be subjected to the slavery to which you would have been subjected had capital been permitted to run rampant over you. Those seeking to set up dictatorships are very liberal until they get the people under their might and power, and then none except the Big Chief and the Palace Guards have rights above serfs and slaves. They howl about raising living standards. I will admit that all people will be put on one standard, but instead of improving the living conditions, the great middle class will be entirely done away with, and all except the few whip bosses will live in slavery.

The only hope I see to wrest this government from those seeking to destroy it, like John L. Lewis and his kind, is the return of our boys from the Armed Services who have fought through mud, heat, cold and blood in need of supplies and fighting equipment while these people have struck, played and loafed at their expense.

The American Legion has proved itself to be truly patriotic and loyal to the principles of old-time democracy, and I am sure that when these boys return from the present conflict that they, in a joint and cooperative effort with the Legionnaires throughout this country, will so completely awaken the electorate of this Nation that any rat who dares to foster communism and other activities in opposition to democracy will find themselves in such great minority that they will cease to be a threat to American liberty and freedom.

It has been so disgusting to watch John L. Lewis, Philip Murray, and William Green dramatize their play through this war effort until it brings one near to the point of desperation. They claim to be arrayed against each other, and especially against John L. Lewis, but the minute that one steps up and challenges the right of this Government the other two step up and begin squeaking "Amen." The American public need not be deceived; they are going hand in hand, bound by the same purpose and headed to the same destination, if peace-loving and God-fearing people do not stop them. I have so many times heard expressions from them to the effect that this must not be done or that must not be done because it would hurt the morale of the workers. I want you fathers and mothers who have furnished the sons and you wives and children who have furnished the husbands and fathers to fight this war to remember how sensitive the morale of these fellows is who are making $10 and $15 per day in the peace of their homes and protection of their homeland, while your boy or husband is expected to maintain high morale, a steady nerve, and undaunted courage under fire from the land, from the sea, and from the air for 24 hours per day for the sum of $50 per month. I want the mothers who have furnished these sons and wives who have furnished these husbands who toil in the sun for 12 hours a day to make food for these strikers and earn less than $2 per day while they are doing it to remember the men whose morale was so sensitive.

Mr. Chairman, the time has come in America when men must be men, with the courage of their convictions, who can stand face to face with an enemy abroad, or within their midst, face him as an enemy, and fight him unto death. I have and will through the years protect the rights of organized labor, but I will never let a desire to see labor protected or a desire to hold public office cause me to shut my eyes in the face of an enemy, forfeit principle for personal gain, and cast a vote that I know is against the public interest.

To the boys who are fighting today to sustain our flag, to the mothers and fathers who gave them, I pledge you my best now and in the years to come to preserve for you and your children the democracy that produced for us a nation of liberty, justice, and freedom, and on this premise I cast my vote in favor of the bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE].

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, some say if this bill is passed it will mean dissension at home. My prediction is it will mean dissension at home if it or one that will meet its objective is not passed. What is the basis of my prediction? It has been stated time and again that we are in an all-out war—a war in which every patriotic American citizen is supposed to contribute his bit, to make his sacrifice. Somewhere between six and eight million men are in the armed forces discharging their patriotic duty with an inadequate supply of fighting equipment; they are obeying orders in obedience to legislative enactments; they are insisting that so long as they are not being furnished with adequate equipment because of delay caused by strikes the legislative enactments under which they are fighting should be made to apply to those who are supposed to be working; that is, if the law requires them to fight, it should require someone to furnish them with the necessary equipment. This is not an unreasonable contention, and there may be some dissatisfaction and dissension among these men and their families, friends, and relatives running into millions if the proposed legislation or legislation designed to obviate strikes in war production is not enacted. It was no reflection on the patriotism of the young men included and enlisted under the Selective Service Act, and I contend that the proposed legislation is no reflection on the patriotism of our production workers, unless it be those who insist they should not be deprived of all of their peacetime liberties in times of war. What would we think of our soldiers and sailors if they should take this latter attitude?

Some people seem to have the idea that no one is expected to make any sacrifice except those in the armed forces; they seem to think that the display of patriotism should be confined to them alone. Patriotism is a virtue to be demonstrated by patriotic citizens in civilian life as well as those in the armed forces and no valid reason can be given for not doing so.

Some are saying that if this bill is enacted into law it will destroy the morale of people who are being paid for their services in our war production effort. Morale! Morale simply represents the standard of one's patriotism or the extent of one's devotion and loyalty to his country, and when one begins to think more of his personal or selfish interests than he does of his country's interests there is little or no morale left, or it is reduced to the lowest ebb.

Legislation and Executive orders designed to secure the highest degree of efficiency in the use of war equipment does not destroy the morale of trained and patriotic soldiers, and I am unable to see where legislation designed to secure the highest degree of efficiency in the production of equipment should destroy the morale of the trained and patriotic worker, and I cannot believe it will.

There is no necessity to get worked up and excited over this proposal. If it had been included as a part of the Selective Service Act where could there have been any objection? The fighter and the worker would have been placed in the same category. There were many who opposed the Selective Service Act, saying we should have an army of volunteers.

Industry and labor volunteered and said they would see to it that there would be maximum production; they enlisted in the production program as solemnly as our young men enlisted in the Army or Navy; they actually signed up with the Commander in Chief of the armed forces and pledged that they would work to the finish, saying there would be no interruptions, shut-outs, walk-outs, or strikes, and there would be no desertions in the civilian forces. But what has happened? This enlistment agreement with the Commander in Chief has been broken time and time again. Today more than 500,000 have deserted the ranks. In the meantime the Government has spent millions of dollars pleading with these civilian enlistees in industry without avail, and the great mass of the American people are now calling upon the Congress to enact legislation that will apply to equipment makers as well as equipment users; that is, the law should apply equally to the man making the machine gun on the home front as it does to the man using the gun on the battle front. The law will deprive no one in civilian life of greater liberties than those being sacrificed by those in the armed forces, and it will deprive no one of the right to discharge his patriotic responsibilities in civilian life. If I am correct in this interpretation of the proposal, where can there be any reasonable objection on the part of anyone who is ready and willing to discharge his or her unselfish and patriotic responsibilities to his or her country in time of war, because this proposal will not interfere with the rights of any such person in the exercise of such right or in the discharge of such responsibility.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN].

Mr. KLEIN. M Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to this vicious bill, which would castigate and stigmatize millions of laboring people throughout this country for the acts of one person, or one small group of people.

I accuse Mr. John L. Lewis of having brought this situation about. I feel that he should be punished as severely as possible. He is a saboteur just as surely as were those who were recently landed in this country from Germany and who were executed for their acts. He has deliberately brought this situation about, by forcing the coal miners to strike, at a time when he knew it would arouse great public resentment. I believe the gentleman hates President Roosevelt and his administration more than he loves the miners. It is his purpose to embarrass the administration, for his own selfish purposes, and he is using the miners to bring this about.

Undoubtedly, the miners have a legitimate cause for complaint. They are undoubtedly underpaid, and are finding it difficult to maintain themselves and their families in the face of ever-rising prices for the essentials of life. However, the War Labor Board is well equipped to deal with this situation. As a matter of fact, the newspapers indicate that an agreement between Mr. Ickes and the miners, as well as the mine operators, was imminent. There was no need to call the miners out on strike, since they had previously been assured by Mr. Ickes that any agreement reached would be retroactive. If the miners had not been goaded by Mr. Lewis into going out on the strike an agreement would now have been reached, and there would not have been the sentiment for the bill now under consideration.

However, that would have defeated Mr. Lewis' purpose, which was to create great public hysteria, which in turn would have the effect of bringing this bill onto the House floor for a vote.

We who are opposed to this bill have not been able to get any time to argue, on this floor, in favor of our position, yet its proponents have obtained all the time they wished to expound their antilabor sentiments.

In spite of this gag rule, the American people, and particularly the laboring people, may well know that their representatives here in Congress will continue the fight in their behalf, and will, in the long run, win out.

Let us defeat this bill, and thus tell the overwhelming proportion of loyal American laboring folk that they may continue their great work in behalf of our war effort without the back stabbing of vicious and unwarranted attacks by labor baiters.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SAUTHOFF].

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Smith-Connally antilabor bill, because I believe it to be an unfair, unjust, and unwarranted discrimination against the workers of the United States who are doing such a magnificent job in turning out the production needed for the war. This bill, by implication, brands organized labor as disloyal and not to be trusted; and such a misbranding is done in the face of a record that has never been equaled anywhere in the history of the world. It would destroy the splendid structure of organized labor built up through several hundreds of years of death and torture and misery in order to get rid of a few rats that have managed to creep into the building.

On June 2 the Washington News carried an editorial which quoted the Honorable James Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization. Mr. Byrnes showed the splendid war production which American industry and labor have managed to pile up. It is a wonderful record:

Merchant ships constructed in the last 12 months, more than a thousand, compared with 50 2 years ago; and 100 tankers, compared with 22.

Machine-gun production of 1,500,000, compared with 25,000 2 years ago.

Planes, 60,000, compared with 10,000—with the one hundred thousandth in the war-production program coming off the line yesterday.

Fighting ships, 100 in the past 5 months, which was 3 times as many completed as in the entire year of 1941.

But that is not enough. As he warned us: "We are just entering the critical period of the war." We must produce more, much more.

Who built these merchant ships? Labor.

Who built the tankers? Labor.

Who built the machine guns? Labor.

Who built the planes? Labor.

Who built the fighting ships? Labor.

And who will be depended upon to step up this production and give us the goals asked for by our Government? Labor.

There are more than 1,000,000 young men in the armed services of our country who are the sons and brothers of men and women in organized labor. When one considers these facts, it must be apparent that labor is doing a splendid job in aiding the country both in manpower and in production. Why then has this one group been singled out as disloyal to our country in time of need?

BIG BUSINESS

No such stigma has been placed, or is being placed, on big business, and yet there is much in the record of big business that will not bear analysis. Have we forgotten that the subcommittee on rubber charged that the big four in the rubber industry hamstrung our program for a stockpile in crude rubber; or that it played an important part in holding up the synthetic rubber program, even after the Japs had taken Singapore and the Malay Peninsula? Have we forgotten that the charge was made in the Senate that the aluminum trust of the United States had held up the production in bombers, more than all the strikes in that industry put together? Have we forgotten that the charge was made in the Senate that the steel trust had effectively prevented the making of sponge iron which could take the place of scrap iron, most of which we had shipped to Japan? Have we forgotten that 19 big companies were listed by Senator O'MAHONEY in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on February 11, 1943, as having violated the antitrust acts, for which offense indictments were voted against them? Nineteen big companies who violated the criminal laws of this country and against whom no prosecutions have been made, but, on the contrary, have been rewarded with Government contracts, the dollar value of which far exceeds the taxable resources of most of the States. As Senator O'MAHONEY pointed out in his speech on that day:

> These corporations, and the others on the list, with the huge facilities provided for them as a result of these contracts (Government) will be in the position after the war of dominating our peace economy as they now dominate our war economy.

Right in my own State of Wisconsin, indictments are pending against monopoly practices in the cheese and milk industry which have been pending for 17 months, and no action is taken. In fact, several of these gentlemen have been rewarded by being placed in key positions in the Office of Price Administration, where they have been writing regulations favoring their own companies to the detriment of the independents.

Why are the laws nullified in the face of these violations in the case of big business, while labor, which has done such an outstanding job, is being crucified for simply trying to hold on to its rights gained after several hundred years of suffering?

RICH MAN'S CONGRESS

This Congress, to date, has a unique record. It passed a law only yesterday forgiving 75 percent of the tax on war profits. As Mr. Murray, president of the C. I. O., pointed out, this tax bill forgives—

First. Three weeks pay of the average wage earner.

Second. Two and one-half months' pay of every Congressman.

Third. Four years net pay of those in the upper brackets.

What else has this Congress done? It has taken off a ceiling of $25,000 fixed by the President, and last but not least, it is now proposed that a sales tax be passed to make up for the taxes lost by reason of the 75 percent forgiveness. No wonder this Congress is characterized as the "Rich Man's Congress." No stigma attaches to big business nor is there any legislation which puts big business in a strait jacket. On the contrary, all the rewards both in position of influence and in money are going to the heads of big business.

WHO OPPOSES THIS BILL?

Every official holding a key position in the Government connected with war production opposes this bill. The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Director of War Mobilization, Chairman of the War Production Board, the Secretary of Labor, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, and several others protested to the committee against passage of this bill. So we find ourselves in a very unique position with the production the highest the world has ever known, with every responsible official who heads our production in charge lauding accomplishments of labor, with the sons and brothers of labor constituting a very substantial part of our armed forces, of passing legislation which doubts the loyalty of organized labor to its own country, and at the same time passing legislation, almost on the same day, which grants large Government subsidies to those who are under indictment for having violated the laws of our country. If this is not class legislation I should like to know what is.

Great Britain has antistrike legislation and yet the figures show that Britain has more strikes than we have. Furthermore, the responsible leaders of organized labor have pledged themselves not to strike. Why not believe in them and their sincerity?

I am opposed to this bill—

First. Because it is class legislation and stigmatizes one group that has done an outstanding job.

Second. Because every Government official who is charged with the responsibility of turning out war production is opposed to the bill.

Third. Because it will create dissatisfaction, disunity, and strife at a time when we should all pull together.

Fourth. And last but not least, the charge has been made on the floor that no representative of organized labor has been given an opportunity to be heard on this bill. Inasmuch as it affects the rights and questions the character of organized labor, full opportunities should have been given to every labor organization to put in an appearance and be heard on this question.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, the important thing before us is the winning of the war against the Axis. Every one of us, Republicans and Democrats alike, should be agreed on that point. The next question is, Will the passage of this bill help to win the war? The answer is a definite "No." This bill will injure morale, provoke turmoil, and destroy voluntary machinery for the settlement of strikes. I do not have to tell you this. The War Department and the Navy Department have both said so. Both the Army and the Navy are opposing this bill. The chairman of the Military Affairs Committee has come before this Congress with a bill that was not given proper study in the committee—no hearings were held in committee, all opposition was denied the right to be heard or to offer constructive amendments, and then to bludgeon this bill through Congress has even denied the Members of this House who are opposing this bill the right to speak under general debate.

Since when has the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee become so great and learned that he can ignore the recommendations of the Army and the Navy?

The Army and Navy are charged with the responsibility of winning this war. Are they to be ignored by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee? Not only the Army and the Navy but likewise the Maritime Commission, War Labor Board, War Production Board, and the Labor Relations Board—all of the agencies charged with the responsibility of winning the war have expressed their opposition to this bill, and their recommendations have been ignored. Now, to top it all off, even the Members of Congress who are opposing this bill have been muzzled and all speaking time under general debate has been consumed by the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee and those Members favoring the passage of this bill.

I have never witnessed a spectacle like this one, the great Military Affairs Committee trying to write a bill on the floor of the House. An important labor bill being muddled, rash and hashed amendments offered by members of the committee, and committee members so confused and bewildered, with no evidence of thought, understanding, or agreement amongst them. Noise, tumult, and confusion. The great Military Affairs Committee has now become the congressional Tower of Babel. This is indeed a sorry spectacle. Yes; it would be more amusing if it were not so confusing, as one of our modern cartoonists puts it. But this is major legislation; this is important and serious legislation.

I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. To the credit of my chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and to the members of our committee, with all of the important legislation that we have handled, I want to say that we have never brought a bill out on the floor of this House in this condition. We would be ashamed and disgraced if we were to do so. It is unfair to the membership of this House, it is unfair to the people of the country, to bring out legislation in this fashion.

What do we hope to achieve by this bill? To whip John Lewis? Sure, we are all agreed that he needs a licking.

But the Military Affairs Committee concedes and admits that this bill will not affect the coal strike. So what? Are you going to increase war production? No. Again you must admit that with the exception of John Lewis, both Phil Murray and Bill Green have kept their no-strike pledge. Both the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. have delivered the goods and kept their pledge and agreement with the Commander in Chief, the boys in the armed forces, the people of the country, and our allies, the United Nations, to deliver the goods. And how they have delivered the goods. All production records smashed, war armaments, heaps of them, way ahead of schedule. Our production has been the great miracle of this war. It is amazing, it is unbelievable. It has left the Axis dazed and bewildered. Yes; they did not figure that American labor could do it. American labor has a million of its members in the armed forces. Labor is loyal, patriotic, and is winning this war on the production lines.

Now, to reward them would you muzzle them, brow-beat them, chain them, or throw them in jail or concentration camps? Oh, no! Labor is America. Labor is intelligent. Labor is free. Labor has made America great. The boys in the armed forces will be back in the ranks of labor when they return. The social advancement, the social gains that labor has made cannot be taken away this easily.

This bill would destroy practically every right won by labor in a half century.

I made a visit to Detroit and to my district last week end. The Dodge, Chevrolet, Plymouth, Hudson, Chrysler, and all the other plants have been turning out jeeps, trucks, ambulances, guns, and armaments so fast that it would make your head swim. The storage lots and railroad sidings are crammed full of war materials. The great Chrysler tank plant is only operating at 25 percent of capacity. Why? Because they would now be over-producing if they were to work at full capacity. Absenteeism? Manpower? That is not what is worrying us. Our worry is to find steady employment for our labor and to utilize labor's capacity to produce by making it easier for them to transfer from plants that are running low on war orders, to plants that have war orders. There is a real problem. Labor is now frozen to a plant that has caught up with production and is slowing down and labor wants to be transferred to a plant that has production orders but cannot because it is frozen by regulations and restrictions.

Who wants this bill, anyway? Not Detroit industry. At least they have not written to me asking support of this bill. Industry and management in Detroit know that labor has delivered the goods. They know that our U. A. W.-C. I. O. leaders have cooperated in every respect. In fact, this Congress should award gold medals of honor to the Detroit labor leaders for their patriotic and loyal services in keeping down all manner of strikes and disturbances.

We have had no authorized strikes or disturbances sanctioned by our labor leaders. They have kept every pledge and more than fulfilled every promise and agreement, and we in Detroit are proud of them. They are the Nation's officers in our army of production, and they have kept faith with the Commander in Chief. Disagreements? Protests? Walk-outs? Yes; we have had them in Detroit, but they were not authorized by the labor leaders. These walk-outs have been small in number and quickly settled, and always our labor leaders have taken a firm and positive stand that the production must go on, that the pledge must be kept, and our labor record is clean.

Here are some of the things that make labor angry and cause these protests and disturbances. I quote a telegram received June 1, 1943:

Ford Motor Co. has violated agreement with Ford Local 400, United Automobile Workers, Congress of Industrial Organizations, relative to continuous 6-day workweek mutually agreed November 11, 1942. Company instructed several departments of Highland Park plant, producing vital war goods under bid contract, not to work Monday—Memorial Day—despite the order issued by Chairman of War Production Board Donald M. Nelson, that all war plants are to operate on Memorial Day. But the departments under cost plus will work Memorial Day. We protest attitude of Ford Motor Co., which places profits above patriotism.

BEN GARRISON,
President, Local 400.
WILLIAM OLIVER,
Recording Secretary.

I have personally known Vince J. Klein, financial secretary of Chrysler Local 7, U. A. W., C. I. O., for the past 20 years, and I know of no man in the city of Detroit who is more honest, loyal, patriotic, and a respected citizen than he is. Here is what he and Ed Carey, the president of Local 7, have to say in answer to my recent query about the Chrysler walk-out:

UNITED AUTOMOBILE WORKERS
OF AMERICA, LOCAL NO. 7,
Detroit, Mich., May 29, 1943.

Hon. GEORGE G. SADOWSKI,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: To give you a clear picture of what happend in the three Chrysler plants that were recently forced into a shut-down on May 20, 1943, I am writing you to acquaint you with the facts of the matter. These troubles date back to January of 1942.

When the Chrysler plants were finished with automobile production in January of 1942, most of the employees were laid off work from 4 to 7 months. The Chrysler Corporation was one of the last ones to convert, with the one exception of the tank arsenal which was built by the United States Government for the Chrysler Corporation to operate. When the corporation was transferring their old employees from automobile to tank jobs, the union had a lot of trouble with the corporation. They cut the men's rates from $1.20, $1.25, and $1.30 per hour to 95 cents and $1.00 or $1.10 per hour, depending on the smallest hourly wage they could get the men to work. For instance, they cut the fellows who were repairing metal on auto production from $1.37 per hour to metal repairing on tanks which is much more difficult than metal repair on automobiles, to $1.17 per hour.

Before the corporation started the tank plant operating, they made an agreement with all Chrysler locals in the Detroit area that they would hire or transfer their own employees who at that time were walking the streets, first. But they never lived up to any of the agreements with the union. They hired 800 new employees for the new tank plant while their old employees walked the streets and when we protested, they told us that agreement or no agreement, they still can hire whom they want. The outcome of the whole situation was that the tank plant was shut down on a couple of occasions and tank production suffered on account of the company's union-breaking tactics.

Later in the year of 1942, they started the gun plant and we went all the way up and through the same trouble. We will give you one example, because if we tried to list them all, you would be reading them long after the 4th of July. Finish grinders on precision machines were paid $1.27 per hour on automobile production. The same operations in the gun plant to the very same men was $1.03 per hour and the clearance limit was 300 percent closer; in other words, the men were expected to do a 300 percent better job and their wages were cut about 17 percent.

When the boys complained, their answer was, "You are unpatriotic." The answer of the average man was, "If I were sure that the Government would benefit by it, I would be willing to do so, but if it is only to enrich the corporation * * * to hell with that noise."

As an answer to this, Mr. Keller made a report to his board of directors that in his opinion the corporation was never in a better condition in all around resources than at the present time, and that in his opinion he expected to bring in a much better report to the next meeting of the board of directors, regardless of the turn of the United States of America war effort. In other words, he thinks that war does not affect the Chrysler Corporation one way or another. As a matter of information, here is the yearly remuneration for the officials of the Chrysler Corporation for the past year of 1942: K. T. Keller, $101,050, B. E. Hutchinson, $91,100, F. M. Zeder, $85,450. The net income for the fiscal year of 1942 for the Chrysler Corporation was $15,529,013.

If anyone can accuse the workers and union members of these three plants as being unpatriotic to the war effort, tell them the following facts: the 7,800 workers in these plants gave 1,949 pints of blood to the Red Cross blood bank. During the last campaign several weeks ago for contributions, the Red Cross collected $22,822.

The bond pay-roll deduction averages 12 percent, the workers bought $91,000 in extra contributions on top of their average of 12 percent.

If the company would match the workers' patriotism only 50 percent, they would invest more money in bonds than they did, and they would not try to keep it a secret. In short, the Chrysler Corporation, despite their publicity that they have done so much for the war effort, could have done much more if they were half as patriotic as their workers. To prove that, I will give you three examples of how they bargain.

1. For 6 weeks the union complained about safety in the dynamometer room where they test motors going at a speed of approximately 4,000 revolutions per minute. We even made a complaint to the State of Michigan Safety Division of the Labor Department. They did not install any screens to protect the workers until one of our boys was chopped into a thousand pieces by one of the cooling fans. We picked up his body and put it in a metal basket which was about the size of a bushel.

2. One of our boys working on war production, after driving 8 miles to work and having had a flat tire on the way, was 11 minutes late. Despite his importance on the job, they gave him a penalty—the rest of the day off—and he drove home 8 miles more and did not even see the inside of the shop, nor did he get a hearing. Yet they talk about absenteeism by the workers.

3. Some of our boys working on tank turrets noticed the roof in the shop started leaking during recent heavy rains. The steward asked the foreman to get someone to fix it. The foreman answered, "Go up and stop the rain and the roof won't leak." The men on that job handle high-voltage electrical equipment and they were in danger of being electrocuted. The steward, knowing the men's lives were in danger, told them to wait until the line moved up to a spot where the roof was not leaking, and then resume the operation. The company disciplined the steward and told him it was not his job to save men's lives and look out for their welfare.

4. One of our men worked for the Chrysler Corporation 11 years, has an execllent record as an employee. One day by mistake, he lighted a match about 7 to 10 seconds before the shop whistle blew. He was fired, causing disruption in his department, while we, as union leaders, were forced as on many other occasions to enter the shop and patch up the trouble. We were fortunate in getting the man back to work after approximately 10 days' penalty.

The foregoing is just a fraction of some of the things being practiced by the Chrysler Corporation.

If you and the other gentlemen in Congress could only get into these plants, without being recognized and be here for only 1 week, I know you would recommend that the good old United States of America take over these plants and run them, not as a prison, but as free American factories should be run. The only thing that held these men in that long is that we are at war and the workers did not want to endanger the war effort of our beloved country.

All these facts are true and the records in giving blood and money to Red Cross can be secured from the officials of that noble organization. The same goes for bonds. Our local union invested $29,600 of its funds in Government bonds. Every one of our officers is a blood donor and buys bonds and makes a substantial contribution to all of these various agencies, and as I stated before, the Corporation despite its riches did not match our war efforts even one-half.

I hope and we all hope that you will understand our side of this, because it hurts when those who only go through motions of being patriots accuse others who are doing all they can for the war effort. It's a falsehood and no one knows it better than the Chrysler Corporation, namely, Mr. Keller, Mr. Hutchinson, and Mr. Weckler, the men in charge of production for the corporation.

Sincerely yours,

ED CAREY,
President, Local 7, U. A. W.-C. I. O.
VINCE KLEIN,
Financial Secretary.

I have received telegrams and letters from every labor local in the city of Detroit, protesting against this vicious antilabor bill. They are too many and too numerous to mention. I submit here a telegram received from Phil Murray, R. J. Thomas, and others:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1943.
Hon. GEORGE G. SADOWSKI,
Washington, D. C.:

The Connally bill, as amended by the House Military Affairs Committee and now pending before the House of Representatives, constitutes one of the most dangerous threats to the Nation's war program.

This proposed measure, conceived by a few irresponsible Congressmen who are hell-bent on destroying labor unions, would be a stab in the back at labor, which is sparing no effort and which is making heroic sacrifices at home in the interest of winning the war.

As such, the measure would destroy the morale of our soldiers on the battle fronts who, either as members of organized labor or whose fathers and brothers are in the ranks of labor, must resent this fascist strike at home.

The bill does not even purport to make any constructive contribution to winning the war. In its diabolical intent to destroy labor unions, it must be interpreted as an initial step toward weakening the forces which are united behind our Commander in Chief in his demand for unconditional surrender of the Axis.

The C. I. O. calls for the absolute defeat of the measure and also calls on Congress to direct its attention to making a constructive contribution in fulfilling its outstanding commitments to the Nation by adopting concrete and immediate measures toward stabilizing our domestic economy by effective control of prices which must also be rolled back to September 15, 1942, levels, in accordance with the outstanding law enacted by Congress and by adoption of a truly equitable tax program.

Fitzgerald, president, United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers of America; Frank Rosenblum, vice president, Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America; John Green, president, Industrial Union Marine & Shipbuilding Workers of America; Reid Robinson, president, International Union of Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers; Emil Rieve, president, Textile Workers Union of America; Joseph Curran, president, National Maritime Union of America; Allan Haywood, director of organization, Congress of Industrial Organizations; James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer, Congress of Industrial Organizations.

I likewise submit a telegram received from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 1, 1943.
Hon. GEORGE G. SADOWSKI,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

It seems inconceivable that Congress would consider and act upon vicious antilabor legislation such as the Connally-May bill, S. 796, without giving labor a chance to be heard in opposition to said measure. My appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to grant labor a hearing in opposition to the bill was denied. I appeal to the Members of the House to defeat the rule providing for consideration of the Connally-May antilabor bill in order that it may be returned to the Committee on Military Affairs for further consideration and to accord the representatives of the American Federation of Labor an opportunity to present facts and arguments in opposition to said antilabor legislation.

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor.

I quote from a telegram received June 2, 1943, from Richard T. Frankensteen:

Strongly urge your voting against Smith-Connally bill. Great majority American labor is against strike in coal industry, as shown by denunciation of strike voted last night by Detroit Industrial Union Council. The political feuds of John L. Lewis should not be used as pretext for shackling all labor. Suggest you urge Congress to constructively tackle problems which face labor instead of passing provocative legislation.

RICHARD T. FRANKENSTEEN,
Vice President and Director,
National Legislative Department.

This shows how Detroit labor leaders regard John L. Lewis.

Here is a letter that I received from J. G. Luhrsen, executive secretary-treasurer of the Railway Labor Executives Association:

DEAR CONGRESSMEN: If the general public, and labor particularly, were to accept the introduction of various antilabor legislation as emanating from the majority opinion of this Congress it would have to conclude that such action was, apelike, fashioned following the line of inconsistent policies of administration authorities created by Executive orders.

Orders, directives, and instructions go forth daily, only to be changed at the whim and caprice of business interests having powerful influence over these agencies. Whatever sound policies go forth are flagrantly disregarded or violated, with the workers left in the middle, reaping the condemnation of both governmental agencies and big business, without enjoying the benefits of either.

Yet certain dyed-in-the-wool antilabor legislatures introduce legislation striking at the heart of labor, with a view of vitiating even such gains as were enacted by legislative consent.

The Railway Labor Executives' Association is opposed to S. 796, whether it receives either the Connally or Smith provisions consideration, because the necessity for this obnoxious legislation cannot be attributed to labor generally, but, to the contrary, if warranted, should be phrased to correct the evils instilled and brought about by the adoption of inconsistent programs and policies of the several governmental agencies, which have not as yet been able to formulate unified and coordinated action between themselves. The President, alone, cannot carry the load, nor check those in whom he has placed his trust.

Reliance for police power for enforcement is placed in appointments for which huge appropriations are requested, when obviously it is known to all loyal and patriotic Americans that public sentiment is the greatest police power we have, and it will be gratefully volunteered, once logical and sound reasonings reinforce the issues of systematic programming in the total war effort.

Practically every daily issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as well as innumerable transcripts of hearings of investigations, prove that "buck passing" is the adopted slogan among governmental agencies, and final and resolute responsibility and authority is assumed by none. How can labor, or the general public, as a whole, escape criticism and condemnation when the leaders themselves digress in every direction without leading to the definite goal of the first essential—"win the war."

Our association resents the lack of recognition on the part of Congress of the fundamental facts which are working destructively rather than constructively, and then feign a friendship for either labor or the general public so that a return to the Congress may meet with greater assurance.

The application of mere common sense, without deep study, if conscientiously sincere, leads to the logical conclusion that you cannot cure an evil by substituting a greater evil, more destructive of morale and patriotism, and that is what S. 796 does. The root of the evil rests elsewhere than labor and the attack should be made in the direction that these roots are taking in our war program.

First, develop an all-out war economy as a substitute for the failure to plan and coordinate the various phases of our war effort, and estop the policies of today which permit the war to be run primarily on the basis of business control and business-as-usual. Labor will not be found lacking in supporting such legislation as will bring about the necessary change which will expedite the winning of the war.

We urge the defeat of S. 796.

Very sincerely yours,

J. G. LUHRSEN,
Executive Secretary.

From the letter of Nathan E. Cowan, legislative representative of the C. I. O., I quote:

As the Nation prepared for the final attack on the continent of Europe, it faces literally the most crucial period in its entire existence. In this crucial period the enactment of a bill such as S. 796 would be a disastrous error—an error which would play into the hands of our national enemies both at home and abroad. It is particularly tragic that at a time like this groups and individuals who for years have sought this kind of legislation in times of peace should be so reckless of our national welfare as to attempt to take advantage of our present war crisis to achieve their ends.

Mr. Chairman, without hearings, the bill was brought onto the floor of the Senate in the heat and hurry of the critical situation which then appeared to be developing with respect to the coal mines. On the floor of the Senate and during the course of debate, a substantially new bill was written and passed, containing provisions which went far beyond the original Connally bill and covered the operations of the National War Labor Board generally, including a provision which apparently called for and permitted dilatory court review of Board decisions.

When the bill reached the House the Military Affairs Committee, still without hearings—and in fact refusing to accede to the pleas of labor organizations and many others for an opportunity to discuss the bill—simply and literally struck out the entire bill as passed by the Senate and inserted a completely new bill of its own. This new bill substantially embodied most of the features of the Smith bill of 1941. It is for this reason that in its present version the measure has come to be referred to as the Connally-Smith bill.

By way of brief summary, it may be said that the bill comprehends five major subject matters:

First. It prohibits strikes except after 30 days' notice to the employer and the Secretary of Labor, and until the Secretary of Labor has taken a secret ballot of the employees involved.

Second. It contains a number of outright prohibitions on various types of activities in connection with a strike and on various kinds of strikes, including refusals to work on nonunion products.

Third. It provides for the enforcement of the foregoing restrictions and prohibitions by Federal injunctions regardless of the terms of the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act.

Fourth. It requires labor organizations to file statements indicating the companies with which they deal, the initiation fees, dues and assessments, and number of paid-up members, the exact votes in elections, and full financial statements.

Fifth. Provisions governing the operations of the National War Labor Board, including a provision outlawing the granting of union security in any form.

The entire statute as so revised is offered as a wartime measure to be terminated 6 months after the end of hostilities.

Mr. Chairman, the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. within 1 week after Pearl Harbor in 1941 met in voluntary and joint session with the representatives of management and the public and made a pledge to the Nation that every effort of labor would be turned toward the maintenance of continuous and uninterrupted production. That pledge was not taken out of any fear of penalty. There was no penalty to fear. The pledge was made because labor in America has recognized this war as one in which the working men and women in this Nation have the greatest stake, one in which the working men and women of this Nation must seek victory for the preservation of themselves and their labor organizations.

Regardless of the barrage of propaganda to the contrary, the simple fact attested by all of our war production agencies is that the no-strike pledge has been fulfilled not merely to a miraculous extent, but to an extent which no penal sanction could have made possible. All available data has indicated a net loss of man-hours averaging each month in the neighborhood of .03 of 1 percent.

That record was achieved out of the free volition of American workers and because American workers had the fullest faith that their Government could accord to them in this crucial period, full justice and equity in the adjustment of the many grievances which American workers still have in the performance of their jobs.

That record has been achieved in the face of great difficulties—difficulties in the form of reckless provocations and annoyances inflicted by management at all levels—management conscious of the grim determination of American workers not to leave their jobs in protest.

The record has also been achieved in the face of the terrific pinch to which American workers have been subjected with constantly spiraling food costs while wage levels were being substantially frozen by Presidential decree and War Labor Board directive.

It is an unfortunate fact that in recent months the sharp pressure on the food budgets of American workers has approached critical proportions. O. P. A. has virtually admitted, on the one hand, that price ceilings have not been fixed at levels calculated to prevent substantial food-price increases, and, on the other hand, that enforcement has in some areas been so ineffective that prices have actually prevailed at levels as much as 40 and 45 percent above ceiling prices.

In these circumstances nevertheless both the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. held firm to their no-strike pledge. More important, the C. I. O. and the A. F. of L. have pointed to their membership the direction of sound solution to these problems—the direction of a national demand and insistence on a real roll-back of prices to levels which will enable war workers to maintain their health and continue to function effectively at their war work.

The fact remains, however, that these conditions have also ripened the possibility for the operations of groups in our country willing to engage in tasks helpful to the Nation's enemies. These conditions have furnished ripe soil for the sowing of enemy propaganda as well as for the growth of influence of persons willing to take advantage of the resulting discontent.

The C. I. O. under these critical circumstances has followed the path of constructive action toward continued and ever more effective contribution to the war effort. The C. I. O. has urged and fought for the expansion and strengthening of our price-control system and for the roll-back of prices to the necessary low levels. The C. I. O. has also fought for a program of action which would render the instruments of government, and particularly the War Labor Board, ever more effective for the prompt removal of the just grievances of American workers.

That kind of a program would constitute an effective demonstration to American workers, organized and unorganized alike, of the fact that democratic processes of our Government today are available and effective for the solution of their problems and of the fact that misleaders are counseling lines of action dangerous to the welfare not merely of labor but of the Nation. That kind of a program would strengthen the fabric of our democratic structure, would solidify the ranks of American workers and of the American people generally, and would permit national concentration on the single task of military victory abroad.

That kind of a program is, of course, not the program followed by Hitler or Mussolini. We have received in this country reports of widespread shootings of striking workers not merely in occupied countries, but in parts of Germany itself. We hail these reports as evidences not of the strength of the Hitler regime but rather as evidences of its weakness. We recognize that a strong nation is strong to the degree that its people are united in support of its war effort and not to the degree that it is forced to resort to shooting to keep its people under control.

That is precisely the issue that the offer of this Connally-Smith bill presents to the Nation today. This Nation has performed miracles of production because its people are working; its people are working not because any bayonet is held at their backs but because they want to work. A statement at the present time by the Federal Government that it is now necessary to resort to criminal statutes and penalties and force would have at least two disastrous effects. First, it would be construed by friend and enemy alike as a confession of weakness, of the inability of the Government of the United States to say to the workers of America, and particularly to the coal miners, that their grievances and problems can and will be adjusted through the machinery of Government. It will be used, secondly, by the very same evil forces which we are now combating abroad, in their attempt to increase their own strength and influence, by citing it as evidence of the fact that the American Government instead of taking the road of alleviation and adjustment of grievances takes the road of Hitler and Mussolini, the road of compulsion and brute force.

It is for this reason that the C. I. O. opposed the Connally bill in its original form. For this and other reasons the C. I. O. opposes the Connally bill in its Smith form.

The real answer of Congress and the Nation to John L. Lewis should be the answer of the roll-back of prices, the more effective enforcement of price control, the adjustment of the miners' real grievances. Unfortunately, some groups in Congress have chosen the kind of tactics and program which are calculated to play right into the hands of John L. Lewis by aiming direct and provocative blows not merely at the millions of organized American workers, but at all American working men and women and at the entire population of the Nation. These are the groups which have chosen to attack and interfere with and impede price control and rent control. These are the groups which have conducted hearings such as those of the Smith Subcommittee on Rent Control, calculated to bring pressure on behalf of landlords and their associations to prevent a real control of rents. By the same token, the groups supporting the Connally-Smith bill are supporting a step which stigmatizes and attacks the more than 11,000,000 C. I. O. and A. F. of L. workers who have given and maintained and will maintain their no-strike pledge.

As a matter of fact, the actual contents of the Smith version of the Connally bill reveal that the bill cannot even really make the pretense of being a war measure. In 1941, while this country was not at war, Mr. SMITH proposed these same provisions. He proposed then, as the bill now proposes, that there be a requirement of certain kinds of notice and certain other requirements before a strike could be called. He proposed these measures then as a permanent and unlimited statute. He proposed it then in a frank attack on basic labor rights. The insertion of a provision limiting the continuance of the bill to the duration of the war cannot camouflage the fact that this is still the original bill.

The C. I. O. in its no-strike pledge has made no qualifications with respect to any question of advance notice, of any question of appropriate procedures for calling a strike. The C. I. O. has declared emphatically that it will countenance no strikes. Under these circumstances the reintroduction of the original Smith bill, with its provisions for advance notice and secret ballots and other technicalities related to strikes, is not merely meaningless but is obviously a barefaced attempt to use present circumstances as a basis for carrying through a private labor policy which its sponsors were unable to carry into law in time of peace—a labor policy which has no relationship to and makes no contribution to the solution of present-day problems, while at the same time initiating a provocative attack on basic rights of millions of organized working men and women who, through their organizations and as individuals, have been contributing so much to the miraculous production record of this Nation.

By recklessly seizing this opportunity to attempt to rush his bill through the House under the provocation of John L. Lewis, Mr. SMITH and those sponsoring his bill could not have more effectively done the work of our enemies than if they had been working hand in hand with Hitler and John L. Lewis.

With respect to the provision requiring registration and filing of detailed information by labor unions, labor has repeatedly stated its position. This is not a new proposal; it is not a wartime proposal. It has nothing to do with any current issue before the Nation. It is a proposal which requires labor unions to reveal to the employers with whom they are negotiating the exact number of members in the union, the exact financial strength of the union. It is a proposal which weakens the union in its collective bargaining negotiations with employers. The C. I. O. now discusses and has discussed in the past the evils of this kind of a proposal. But once more it should be emphasized that the ruthless and invidious attempt to insert this provision into a bill coming before the House under the circumstances of the Connally bill is a provocative and reckless gesture of defiance to the people of the Nation, a gesture of insistence at all costs and under all circumstances on seeking the enactment of measures oft debated and constantly repudiated in times of peace. The House should undertake to rebuke decisively tactics of this kind and to insist that this is not the time for the pressing of divisive tactics or for back-room maneuvers at the expense of the Nation.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. D'ALESANDRO].

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Chairman, the actions of John L. Lewis have, no doubt, aroused the American people, but we must bear in mind that President Roosevelt has recently reported that America is producing more fighting planes than all of the enemy nations combined. Secretary Knox announces that virtually an entire new Navy was launched in the first few months of this year and that implements of war, unsurpassed in quality, are pouring forth from American factories. Production has reached such staggering quantities that Donald Nelson announced that there is no further need for expanding plant capacity.

The War Department, the Navy Department, the Labor Department, the War Production Board, the Maritime Commission, the War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board are among the agencies that protested against the enactment of this type of legislation at this time.

Democracy may be destroyed by the autocracy of a labor leader who is unwilling to place the safety of our Nation above all else. Why must false leadership destroy the good that has been accomplished and why must all men and women in industry be punished for a few small men in high places who vent their spleen and their personal animosities against the President, above the safety of our Nation? This legislation will not prevent strikes but would retard production.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY].

Mr. ABERNETHY. Mr. Chairman, the time has long since passed when the National Congress should have, by appropriate legislation, guaranteed the uninterrupted production of essential war materials. That long awaited legislative measure is for our consideration today.

From every section of this Nation, yes, from all parts of the world, the eyes and ears of the masses—of the mothers whose hearts bleed for their sons somewhere on the field of battle, of the fighting son himself, of his wife, of his children or his sweetheart—are turned toward this Capitol City of Washington. They eagerly await the verdict which we personally, as legislative jurors, are privileged to return.

Washington today is the focal point of the Nation's millions who earnestly beg of us to shackle those who would sabotage the war effort with nonessential strikes in war industry.

Hitler, Mussolini, and Tojo boast that democratic government is unequal to an all out, all manpower war effort. What shall be your verdict?

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I have no quarrel with organized labor. Quite to the contrary is my attitude. Collective bargaining is right, fair, and just. With labor I stand foursquare in all of its legitimate rights and fair undertakings. I concede to it the right to organize, the right to bargain collectively, the right to picket peacefully, the right to petition its Government for redress, the right of peacetime strike. Yet I have no patience with the labor racketeer, nor the capitalistic racketeer and profiteer. Their unnecessary and unreasonable demands, forced walk-outs, shut-downs, and strikes are retarding our progress in this fight and simultaneously adding unreasonable risks to our fighting forces and the perpetuation of our Republic. Incidentally, I come from a labor town. Those people are my friends. I know and am happy to report to you that they are patriotic. So are the other men of labor in my district. They, I can assure you, are doing their utmost. But they and hundreds of thousands of other patriotic labor affiliates, because of the unconscionable conduct of a few selfish, racketeering, sabotaging leaders, are being humiliated and embarrassed, and their brotherhoods and orders are nearing the chasms of disrepute. This legislation is as essential to vital war industry as Selective Service is to the armed forces. It does not deny to labor the right to strike. It continues for them that privilege under prescribed reasonable conditions even in Government operated war industry.

Many arguments have been currently advanced in defense of John L. Lewis closing down hundreds of coal mines. None of them are reasonable; none are feasible; none will stand the test. They argue that labor is doing a good job. Yes, indeed, a commendable job, I agree. They also argue that because patriotic labor is being embarrassed with isolated strikes, we should not enact this legislation and thus further embarrass the patriotic laborer; that it would be a reflection upon him. Only those who violate the law are embarrassed thereby. No, no, my dear friends, this would not embarrass the patriotic war worker. On the contrary, he would most assuredly welcome it. Why? Simply because it would put his house in order and eliminate the scurrilous activities of the unpatriotic.

Others say that antistrike legislation would affect labor's morale. Well, goodness me, what about the morale of the people as a whole? What of the morale of the young man in uniform? Does not their morale merit your consideration? Every day they see these strikes headlined in the press. What a terrible tonic for them. It makes good reading for no one. It has positively brought the spirit of our people and fighting forces to the breaking point.

Frequently I receive letters from parents of servicemen, from the servicemen themselves, begging and pleading for legislation to put a stop to the unnecessary strikes in war industry. I know that you have received the same. Only a few days ago a young man from my district, a soldier of Uncle Sam, sat with me in my office and related in no uncertain terms the attitude of the American soldier on this question. He stated that the boys do not understand why it is that they, by a law of Congress, are drafted and forced to fight when at the same time the Congress neglects to enact legislation that would guarantee the utilization of a maximum of manpower in the production of war essentials. I agree with them. As long as blood flows in my veins, I shall stand by and cast my vote for them, the threats of John L. Lewis upon my political future notwithstanding. It is not fair for a man back home to go on strike in war industry when the soldier is looking to him for weapons to defend himself and this Nation. God pity the man of this House today who casts a vote of political expediency in favor of John Lewis.

This historic Capitol Building and the House Office Buildings have, in this solemn hour, been descended upon by scores of Lewis' cohorts. They have shuffled from office to office, from building to building, pouring out their threats of political reprisal against those who would support this bill. But no one is here, except you as their Representatives, to represent the masses, patriotic labor and their soldier sons. They are at home putting in a day's work and the soldier a day of war. He cannot secure, nor does he seek, a furlough from north Africa, the South Pacific, Guadalcanal, or Attu to plead his case with you. Oh, no; duty urges him to remain at his post, and God knows he is glad to do it. He offers a service at the possible cost of his life, while Lewis' emissaries scramble for unprecedented power over the workingman and the almighty dollar. Then, please, my colleagues, while Johnny Doughboy offers his life, will you not forget politics and plead his cause today before this body? He needs your help; he will be so grateful and his morale will be so enhanced.

There are but two choices today—John Lewis or Johnny Doughboy. John Lewis is a man who gets along with no one. Several years ago he, being disgruntled, separated his mine workers and himself from the American Federation of Labor. He organized and affiliated with the C. I. O. and thus became its head. More recently he was ousted as its president, and still more recently, again having been disgruntled, he separated his mine workers and himself from that body. Having drifted along for awhile attached to neither of these large labor organizations, he wants to go back to the A. F. of L. He tied on to our President in 1932. Although Lewis was favored, in every conceivable manner, by President Roosevelt, he turned upon him like a rattlesnake in the election of 1940. He cares only for power and more power. His record certainly teaches you that he cannot get along with anyone. He will love you today and bite your hand tomorrow. And so on. That is John L. Lewis.

On the other hand, you have Johnny Doughboy. He is a fighting Yank. He is driving the Japs slowly but surely from the tropical Pacific isles, from Kiska and Attu, and the Germans from the barren wastes of north Africa. He eagerly awaits his opportunity to hie ole Fritzy back into his fatherland and give him the licking of his life. He is step by step pinning Old Glory to the mountain peaks of every field of battle. He is making the good ole U. S. A. secure for me, for my wife, for my little girl, and infant son. For you he is doing the same. Yes; even for John L. Lewis. He does a job at the risk of his life, often without rest or sleep, food or drink. Wages and hours mean nothing to him and a strike is unthinkable. His commander never thinks of ordering one. Contrary to John L. Lewis, he gets along with every one except, of course, the Japs, Italians, and Germans. And his inability to get along with those rats is certainly not difficult to understand.

Now, my colleagues, with whom are you this day taking your stand—John L. Lewis or Johnny Doughboy? I will take mine with the latter and his home front companion, the patriotic laborer. I shall support this legislation. I hope you will do the same.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PACE].

Mr. PACE. Mr. Chairman, there is only one question before the Congress at this time, and that is, are strikes justified in time of war, and, if not, should the Congress consider appropriate measures to bring them to an end?

In considering this question there are certain things we must keep in mind.

First. That our Nation is now engaged in a great world war; that our national safety, our liberty, and everything we hold dear is imperilled.

Second. That this Congress enacted the Selective Service Act, authorizing and requiring the induction of millions of our young men into the military and naval service of the Nation, without their consent, and at rates of pay much less than that now received by the miners and industrial workers who enjoy the safety and comforts of their own homes.

Third. That thousands of our American boys have already given their lives, and millions of others are offering their lives in defense of our country and in defense of the rights and liberties of the American people, including the organized workers.

Fourth. That the failure to supply our military and naval forces with adequate munitions and implements of war would not only result in the loss of millions of lives, but will seriously endanger the entire war effort.

Fifth. That just last week in a speech in Constitution Hall in Washington, Mr. Green, President of the American Federation of Labor, said:

> Immediately after Pearl Harbor I called together the officers of all our affiliated national and international unions and informed them that the emergency called for drastic action to assure maximum and uninterrupted war production. Without a moment's hesitation they agreed unanimously to support the solemn no-strike pledge which the American Federation of Labor gave to the President of the United States.
> Only a few days ago, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor issued an official declaration reaffirming the no-strike policy for the duration. No matter how sharply we may disgree with some of the wartime restrictions imposed upon labor, the council said, the no-strike pledge holds good for us. I say to you here and now, without reservations of any kind, that no strike will be authorized, approved, or condoned by the American Federation of Labor and its affiliated unions until the enemies of America have been crushed into final defeat.

Notwithstanding this statement by Mr. Green, there are today numerous strikes in existence by workers of the American Federation of Labor, and only yesterday the Progressive Miners, an affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, left their work and joined the strike of the United Mine Workers led by John L. Lewis.

Sixth. That on May 2 the President of the United States stated in a public address to the American people as follows:

> A stopping of the coal supply, even for a short time, would involve a gamble with the lives of American soldiers and sailors and the future of our whole people. I say to all miners—and to all Americans everywhere, at home and abroad—the production of coal will not be stopped.

Yet it appears that the President of the United States has had to swallow his words, nearly 600,000 miners are on strike, and the production of coal has stopped.

Seventh. That the National War Labor Board has been set up as an agency of the United States Government to hear and determine all disputes between management and labor where they have not been adjusted through collective bargaining or conciliation. This Board has demonstrated that it is friendly to labor and there is no good reason why labor should not be willing to submit its case to said Board.

Eighth. That John L. Lewis has defied the American flag, the President of the United States, the Congress of the United States, and we are faced with a serious threat of a break-down in Government.

Under these conditions, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that I would truly represent the people of my State or be entitled to serve as their Representative if

I did not raise my voice against these unjustified interruptions in war production, against these injustices to our boys out on the battlefields of the world, and if I did not do everything in my power to bring these strikes to an end and prevent their occurrence during these critical times.

Some labor leaders have said that Congress should take no action, that anything Congress does will enslave labor. They forget that the great rights which organized labor holds today were granted them by the Congress and that if they fail to do their full part in the prosecution of the war it may result in their enslavement at the hands of some foreign enemy. No one has any desire to enslave labor—certainly I do not—and labor should have no desire to try to take advantage of this emergency and thereby run the chance of the enslavement of all our people.

In fact, Mr. Chairman, if all organized workers of the Nation had shown the same degree of patriotism and loyalty as that demonstrated by those living in the district which I have the honor to represent, no legislation on this question would be necessary or even thought of. Since the national-defense program was first started about 3 years ago, long before Pearl Harbor, up until this good hour, the workers, organized and unorganized, in the Third Congressional District of Georgia have not lost the first hour from their work. There have been no strikes, no stoppages of work, and no slow-downs. I have worked with them and I know there have been times when they had good cause to complain, when they were not treated fairly as to wages or working conditions, but they have taken it on the chin, remained on the job, and have produced results in construction which are used today by the Army and Navy as examples of what can be done. Those workers have done those things because they love their country, they know its safety and their lives and liberty are at stake in this World War. They understand and appreciate the hardships their sons, their brothers, their friends, and their neighbors are having to undergo out on the battlefields of the world and they intend to support and sustain them at any cost or sacrifice. Last year Harry Garrett, president of the Central Labor Union in Columbus, Ga., volunteered and is now serving his country in the far Pacific.

This record of service by the workers of my District is a source of great personal pride to me. It has caused me to be doubly careful in all matters and legislation that affects their welfare. But I have concluded that if my own people can make such a record, if they are willing to do their full part and stay on the job in fair weather and foul, then the workers in other parts of the country should do no less, and if they refuse to work while our Nation is at war it is my duty to consider measures which will restrain their leaders in calling strikes and encouraging slowdowns.

I believe that the workers of the Nation are just as loyal as any other group.

The overwhelming majority of them want to have some real part in winning the war and are making a magnificent contribution to the successful prosecution of the war. The industrial production of America, for which the workers are largely responsible, is turning the tide. This production, along with the matchless courage of our boys at the front and the high character of our military and naval leadership, gives us the assurance of victory.

But here and there in the ranks of labor, as in the ranks of other groups, there are some who would take advantage of this emergency, who withhold their best effort as a means of forcing compliance with their personal demands and for their private gain. This should not be permitted in times like these. I am convinced it is brought about for the most part, if not entirely, by a small and irresponsible group of doubtful patriotism and with selfish aims. If the ranks of labor will not voluntarily rid itself of this element and drive out the racketeers and grafters, then certainly the Congress should try to reduce and restrain the influence of this element.

I firmly believe that 99 percent of the workers want to work, to stay on the job, to give their all for victory, and that there would be no stoppages of work if the agitators would let them alone. That the workers themselves are not pleased with the present situation is clearly indicated by the following report of a survey recently made among their members:

WORKERS ARE POLLED ON UNION PRACTICES

(By George Gallup)

PRINCETON, N. J., May 29.—The practices and policies of labor unions by no means meet with the approval of the majority of American workers, or even of labor-union members themselves.

A survey among workers in war industries shows a clear majority holding the view that unions should change some of their ways of doing things. In fact, the number who favor alterations and house cleaning of unions is twice as large as the number who think no change needs to be made.

Even among labor-union members nearly one-half believe modifications in union practices are in order.

The two things complained of most often by the workers interviewed in the survey are graft and racketeering on the part of union management and the use of the strike weapon in time of war.

SIXTY-FOUR CITIES POLLED

In conducting the survey, the institute, through a Nation-wide field staff, interviewed workers in war industries in 64 cities throughout the country. The cross section included a full complement of labor-union members.

Each worker was asked:

"Would you like to see labor unions change their way of handling things?"

The following table shows, first, the vote of both union and nonunion workers in war plants, and second, the vote of labor-union members alone interviewed in the survey.

Total vote:	Percent
Yes	53
No	23
Undecided	24
Union members:
Yes	45
No	38
Undecided	17

SPECIFIC COMPLAINTS

The 53 percent of workers who replied in the affirmative were asked to state in what way they thought unions should change.

The results are illuminating as a list of what labor itself thinks is wrong with labor unions.

The items listed below fall under two main categories: (1) complaints dealing with the shortcomings of union leaders, such as graft and racketeering, lack of interest in the men, and the elimination of radical influences in unions; and (2) complaints that unions hold up war production through strikes, through union rules on worker production, and through jurisdictional disputes.

I have said before, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat here again, that I think the most important job on earth for me today is to support and be helpful to those men and women who have entered our military and naval services and who are offering their lives in defense of our country and in order that you and I might live and be free.

My duty to them is not only to see that they are properly cared for in training and in battle; not only to see that the sick and wounded receive the best treatment in the world; not only to see that they are properly fed and housed; not only to see that their loved ones at home are provided for and not neglected; but, above all, to see that they are supplied with ample munitions and with adequate quantities of the best guns, the best tanks, the best planes, and the best ships which American skill and a grateful people can provide.

I cannot sit by or stand silent when these American workmen, enjoying the highest pay, the best food, and the most comfortable homes of any workers on earth, lay down their tools and endanger the chances of our forces being properly supported and supplied out on the far-flung battle lines. I am ready to take any measures which will make sure that never again will there be too little, too late.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ARENDS] 15 seconds.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ELMER].

Mr. ELMER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. MORRISON] attacked this bill as unconstitutional. He is right. If he had not waxed so eloquent about the war, gallantry of American soldiers, and praise of his fourth-term candidate for President, he might have given his reasons. I presume he is in the right in some respects. I can agree with him on two of his paens, that of war and soldiers. I charge this bill, by its terms and in its purpose, conflicts with that amendment to the Constitution relating to involuntary servitude. That amendment says:

Section 1. Slavery prohibited: Neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall exist within the United States or any place subject to their jurisdiction.

Section 2. Enforcement of prohibition: Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

It is under this provision the Supreme Court upheld the right to strike, quit work, or refuse to work. So long as the mine owners operate the mines, either for themselves or for the Government, they are the employers and direct and pay the employees, and just so long do the miners have a right to strike, refuse to work, and the constitutional provision above protects them. Neither the Government, President, nor War Labor Board can force or compel a miner to work for a coal company. Congress cannot pass a valid law compelling such service. If this service could be enforced, just that instant involuntary servitude begins. We are back to slavery, this time whites as well as blacks. Nor can any of the above agencies compel such service for 30 days or 30 minutes. It stands prohibited absolutely, unqualifiedly. The shortest space of time is just as violative of its mandate as a year. The argument we are at war and the soldier who carries the gun cannot strike, therefore the workman who makes the gun cannot strike, is not in point, not parallel, not based on the same premises.

The soldier is sworn in under a general law held to be constitutional; he is in the Army of the United States, under the commander. He is working for his Government that has the inherent right to require him and all others to come into its service, for its protection. That service is not involuntary servitude, because rendered for the Government. But it is altogether a different matter for the President or his agencies to order a man outside the Army to work for a third party. The President has no such authority and his orders are corum non judice. I challenge any lawyer to disprove these conclusions. A lot of things have been done from necessity. We have heard so much of it lately. It is the mother of tyrants. A necessity that compels an involuntary servitude here for a moment wipes out every act, every sacrifice, every life of an American soldier abroad and reduces our country to the level of the worst. No amount of eloquence, sophistry, or sympathy can dress this tyrant up and make it look like a Bill of Rights or the "four freedoms."

The President has not asked this power. Some of his close advisers oppose it. There must be a reason. Why ram it down their throats? He can order every miner who strikes reclassified under the Selective Service Act. They are classified now in lower brackets. Does it lend any credence to the reports circulated over the country that, for years, the labor unions are not subject to the draft, through Presidential agreement and that is why the subject is so touchy.

This law will not touch the present strike. It is on now. Already called. This law can deal only with strikes to come. The situation that calls this bill up now is peculiar. It is announced the Labor Board was flouted—this means the President because the Labor Board is his personal creation—it has no statutory basis. No law has been flouted. If so, why prepare this one? If the operation of the mines is in the hands of the owners, then they and the miners can negotiate before the Labor Board. If the mines are in the hands of the President, the Labor Board cannot act as a mediator because it and the President are the same and the owners are not adverse parties. In such event the President deals direct with the miners or their representatives—representing the Government and workers.

It strikes me there is a bug under the chip in this bill and that is section 1:

(b) War contract means—

(1) A contract with the United States by officer, employee of the Department of War, Department of the Navy, or United States Maritime Commission.

(2) A contract with the United States entered into in pursuance of a law entitled "An act to promote the defense of the United States."

(3) A contract, whether or not with the United States, for the production—

And so forth, of—

(a) Weapons, munitions, aircraft, vessel, boat.

(b) Army building, structure, or facility.

(c) Army machinery, tools, material, supply, article, or commodity.

(d) Any component material of above and the production of which is found by the President as being contracted for in the prosecution of the war.

(e) War contractor means contractor or person producing * * * any articles which are required in the prosecution of the war or which are useful in connection therewith.

Under this act anyone making materials which are contracted for by the Government or an individual making materials for another individual whether the Government is a party to the contract or not, is a war contractor, and the manufactured products are subject to the powers of the President to declare same contracted for in prosecution of the war. This covers all articles required or useful in the war. This covers everything—even lead pencils. The Government does not have to take over any plant to exercise this authority. Just declare it to be necessary. The original bill used the words "may be" in lines 22 and 23. The amendment substitutes the word "are" in both lines. These amendments make no change in the meaning of the section.

The remaining sections prescribe the procedure and prohibits strikes in all plants of contractors within the meaning of the definitions.

This plainly violates the provisions of the Constitution above mentioned because it prohibits a strike in privately owned and operated plants and in plants wherein the Government is not interested even by direct contract. This forces an employe to work for a private employer against his will. It is involuntary servitude. In addition, the bill authorizes the President to take over any plant he may desire if the material it makes is useful in the war. This bill is not what most Members think it is—just to outlaw strikes in Government plants in wartime. If it was I would support it.

If this bill covered only plants taken over and operated by the Government it would be legal to prevent strikes, but it goes far beyond this principle, and covers all plants wherein is manufactured anything that is useful to the war program. It cannot be determined now whether the Government has taken over the mines so the strike is against the Government, or if the mines are still operated by the owners, so the strike is against them—there is confusion on this point and it is the decisive point involved.

It is my opinion that the President can handle the strike situation better under existing laws and policies and that this bill will merely clutter up the program. I think he should be required by the Congress and the people, in view of his past utterances, to handle this situation. There is a lot of hue and cry now for this bill, but it will fade away in due time in face of the facts. This bill must be substantially amended before I can support it.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Chairman, I yield now to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, what is labor? Who is its friend? These are two questions which all of those who earn a living through their own efforts should consider. Especially should those of us who are Members of Congress consider these questions. Much has been said on these points, but I believe a few generalizations can still be drawn and are appropriate at this time. As background for these observations let me enumerate the major provisions of S. 796, the bill before us, as amended by the House Committee on Military Affairs and by the House of Representatives sitting as a Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. These provisions are:

First. To prohibit any strike or lockout called prior to expiration of a 30-day cooling-off period and before the conduct of a secret strike ballot supervised by the Secretary of Labor. Violations of these provisions constitute grounds for a civil suit for damages by the injured parties, and temporarily suspend the advantages of the National Labor Relations Act.

Second. To require registration with the National Labor Relations Board of every labor organization representing employees of any war contractor. The registration data is to include a list of union officers and their income from the union, amount of initiation fees, dues, assessments, intelligible financial statements, date of last such statement given members and method of circulation used, and a copy of the constitution and bylaws of the organization. Any labor organization failing to so register will be disqualified from acting as the representative of employees in collective bargaining for such time as the failure shall continue.

Third. To prohibit unions from making political campaign contributions to influence election of national officers, just as corporations and national banks have been prevented. Violation of this section carries a fine of $5,000 or a year in prison. Union members could still contribute as they saw fit, individually.

Fourth. When a war plant is taken over by the Government it shall be returned to the owners as soon as practicable but in no event more than 60 days after termination of the conditions requiring the seizure.

Fifth. To grant the War Labor Board statutory authority to intervene not only in cases certified to it by the United States Conciliation Service but also to exercise jurisdiction over any labor dispute that has become so serious that "it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort." Specific provisions are made for hearings for both sides to a dispute and for protection of the rights of labor under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and similar laws. The W. L. B. is prohibited from handing down decisions that "require as a condition of employment that any individual become or remain a member of a labor organization."

Sixth. The W. L. B. is also given power to subpœna witnesess and compel production of records relevant to the inquiry.

Seventh. The W. L. B. is empowered, after it has taken jurisdiction in a case, to prohibit the calling or continuation of a strike or lock-out or of the practices giving rise to dispute. Such orders shall not exist for more than 60 days. The act specifically guarantees the right of individuals as follows:

No order of the Chairman (of the War Labor Board) or process of any court under this act shall require an individual employee to render labor or services without his consent.

Eighth. When a plant producing war materials is taken over by the Government, it is unlawful to lead a strike, slow-down, or a lock-out in it, or to pay strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating in it. Violations are punished by a $5,000 fine or 1 year imprisonment. No individual violates this section by simply quitting work or refusing to accept employment.

Ninth. The law is for the duration of the war only and not to exceed 6 months thereafter.

It should be noted that the bill makes no provision for enforcement or court review of W. L. B. decisions. Presumably compliance with Board decisions would be obtained, as at present, by public opinion or Government seizure and operation of plants.

Mr. Chairman, on several occasions during the past few years Congress has set out, after extensive public hearings, to write into law a definite public policy defining the obligations and responsibilities of organized labor. Each attempt to substitute a rule of law for the vacillating policies of executive agencies of government and political expedience as it affects the President has been successfully thwarted by those same officials whose own failures have been largely responsible for each new crisis. It should be remembered that present Government labor policy consists of two things: First, a political alliance between the party in power and leaders of organized labor, and that this alliance makes necessary the handling of labor difficulties on a personal basis by the President to keep up his labor political fences. This has, in turn, necessitated, second, administration opposition, and opposition of leaders of organized labor, to any move which might take adjustment of labor relations out of the hands of the President and require disputes to be settled and abuses corrected according to law enacted by the representatives of the people in Congress. This simple explanation is back of the consistent refusal of all labor leaders and administration officials to support any labor legislation to cope with war strikes.

Mr. Chairman, I believe in organized labor. Had it not been for unions, the rule of Government by big business and Wall Street would have continued. But now we have a labor government, pure and simple. I think the time has come to strike a balance and give the Government back to the people.

PRO AND CON

I have mentioned the real reason why all labor legislation is opposed by the political alliance now running the Federal Government. Now, I want to give the arguments which are used by this political alliance to maintain its power. The arguments are simple and all of the same pattern. Any legislation which seeks to do any of the things covered in the present bill is branded as a move to destroy organized labor and all the social gains labor has made in America. When asked to point out the specific provisions of the bill which would bring this result, the reply is to launch into a loud tirade against big profits, fascism, labor baiters, and reactionaries. It is obvious to anyone who reads this bill that it could do none of these things vocally feared by organized labor leaders and the administration. The penalties assessed against those leading war strikes are mild, indeed, compared to those which would be inflicted upon a soldier if he struck against his Government. But enactment of this legislation would, I think, go a long way in convincing some people that we are all in this war and have just as much to lose as the man in uniform unless we win it. The present labor policy may not cause us to lose the war. But no one can deny that war strikes have greatly delayed our winning of the war, and in so doing have caused the death of thousands of American men. This to me is sufficient justification for enactment of this wartime measure. The administration in opposing the bill thus far is paying too high and bloody a price for a little political fence building.

"Oh," it is said by organized labor leaders, "we have outlawed strikes for the duration. The only strikes in progress are outlaw strikes over which we have no control." All honor to those who have outlawed strikes for the duration. But it is against these unauthorized strikes that action must be taken by legislation. If everybody behaved we would not have to pass laws against murder. Certainly a law against murder does not hurt anyone who does not intend to commit murder. The same principle applies to anti-war-strike legislation.

"Oh," say some of these leaders, "such a law does indeed hurt all of the patriotic workers who do not want to strike. It will hurt their morale. It will create disunity and foster strikes." Poppycock! How will these things happen if there is intent to obey the law? Ah, therein, my colleagues, lies an interesting point. President William Green, of the American Federation of Labor, recently sent a communication to all unions affiliated with the Federation and stating as follows:

I specifically direct that the officers and members of State federations of labor and of all unions functioning in the States named (those where labor legislation has been passed by State legislatures) refrain from complying with these laws until a court of last resort has passed on the validity of said statutes.

Here, Mr. Chairman, we are confronted with the leader of millions of organized workers advising them to break the law in a nation at war. I submit it would be better citizenship to urge all Americans to obey the laws of their country unless they are found unconstitutional and that to break a law before it is tested in the orderly way provided by the Constitution is criminal. Yes; there is an element in this country which regards itself as more powerful than the Government of the United States because it regards itself as that Government. Is it? The people alone can answer that question. They will answer it when in possession of the facts.

It is said that this act would deprive workers of the right to strike or quit work and thus bring about a condition of involuntary servitude or slavery. Point out the provision which does it, if you can. No one has yet been able to find it. The act, of course, does no such thing, but specifically prohibits it. If the act does not prohibit war strikes then why have it? The answer to that is it is assumed most war-plant workers are patriotic Americans, and will not strike if given opportunity to vote on the question. They will let their dispute be settled on its merits in the way provided by the law. The minority which still prefers to sabotage the war effort by leading an unauthorized strike in a plant taken over by the Government will be dealt with as the act provides. Victory requires sacrifice by all. To lead a strike in a war plant run by the Government stops production just as effectively as an enemy bomb. It is akin to treason.

It is said that the bill is undemocratic. Is it undemocratic for unions to hold honest elections and to vote as to whether their members shall strike? Is it more democratic that a strike affecting half a million men and the life of a nation can be called by the twitch of the bushy eyebrows of one ambitious man?

It is said, without foundation, that all labor violence is the result of stubbornness of employers. But, even if so, do two wrongs make a right?

Under this bill can collective bargaining be denied a union which obeys the law? Will the bill destroy organized labor? Has any similar law passed by a State legislature destroyed labor in that State?

It is said that unions already give account to their members of what they do with their funds. The record, however, shows otherwise. A few well-run unions do make such accountings. Certainly a provision requiring them to do so will not hurt these unions. Dishonest or improperly run unions ought to be forced to divulge this information. The court records of this country, and of my own State of Missouri, show the convictions of many labor leaders who put the fees and dues in their pockets and tell nobody. Not all of these crooks have been convicted. But, with the provisions of this law they could not retain a position which permits graft and racketeering because of the glare of publicity, which would make much easier the apprehension of those who seek to prostitute the labor movement for personal gain and to cover up careers of crime. One bad apple will spoil a basketfull. It is peculiar that labor does not make an effort to clean its own house and demand such legislation as this. This measure protects labor. It is a Bill of Rights for industrial peace, progress, and victory.

Mr. Chairman, I am tired of seeing the Government blackjacked and browbeaten by pressure groups. Further, it is time we spoke to the dictators, gangsters, racketeers, and saboteurs at home with the same courage we speak to those 3,000 or more miles away. I repeat, I am for organized labor. I think it serves a useful purpose. I have supported in this session many measures desired by organized labor. I have opposed measures it has opposed. I want to see it preserved. But, the only thing which will preserve it against the wrath of the soldier boys when they return is some such law as we have before us to put the irresponsible minority in the organized labor movement in the war with the rest of us.

WHAT IS LABOR?

Mr. Chairman, there has lately grown up in this land a sentiment that only those who belong to organized labor unions are the laboring people of our country. Nothing could be further from the truth. There are 135,000,000 people in the United States. Only about 12,000,000 of our citizens are members of organized labor.

The farmer is a laboring man and works probably harder for less profit than any other class of our laboring people. School teachers are laboring people. The small businessman is a laboring man. Most of these people are not organized in the sense that union labor is generally understood. So when some labor leaders, professional leaders, say they speak for labor we must understand that they speak only for a minority of the laboring people of the United States, powerful though that minority may be. The dictionary defines "labor" as toil or exertion, physical or mental. Professional people are laborers. Very few of them are organized into labor unions. I am a lawyer. I am a member of my local and State bar associations. In a sense, therefore, I am an organized worker. But there is a wide difference of opinion between the leaders and spokesmen of the bar association on one hand and the American Federation of Labor and the C. I. O. on the other about the kind of legislation we should have for those who labor.

Members of Congress must vote on many measures which affect labor. We are voting on one today. Apparently it is opposed by leaders of the organized laboring groups. It has strong support by many patriotic groups whose sincerity cannot be questioned and who are disinterested parties. Congressmen represent many and divergent groups. The votes we cast cannot possibly reflect the sentiments of all these groups but they do affect all of them in many cases. What kind of a standard must guide us? From a practical standpoint this is very important to a Member of Congress who seeks both to serve his country and to be reelected because he is either listed as a friend or foe of organized labor, and therefore, by inference, of all working people. Many votes are decided thereby. So let us consider for a moment another question.

WHO IS A FRIEND OF LABOR?

Who is a friend of labor? That question is an easy one to answer from the standpoint of the typical labor union leader. His friend and the Congressman he will support is the one who opposes any measure which in any way is designed to restrict the activities, lawful or otherwise, of organized labor. I have discussed the reasons behind this. You cannot just be for organized labor 99 times and against them once and be the friend of the typical professional leader who makes his living by working the worker. No, indeed. These unions, many of them, maintain highly paid lobbyists in Washington, D. C. They do not want to have to explain or justify the vote of some Congressman who goes against them on an issue. It is obviously good business for them personally if they can make the rank and file believe congressional opposition to the views of any labor leader is opposition to the best interests of all labor. Some of these leaders have a racket which cannot be protected in any other way. This attitude, which back in western Missouri we would call "whole hog or none," is running organized labor into public disfavor. It is an attitude which every reliable poll, and the vote in many congressional districts, including my own, shows is not shared by the rank and file of organized labor. By way of example let me call your attention to the Gallup poll of May 27, 1943. This poll asked the question:

> Would you approve or disapprove of making it a crime for anyone to urge workers to strike in companies taken over by the Government?

In answer to that question, which is directly on the provision of the bill now before us, 78 percent of the American people are reported as favoring such a law. Those who disapprove of this idea are 14 percent and those undecided 8 percent. The vote of union members on the same question was: Approve, 67 percent; disapprove, 22 percent; undecided, 11 percent. Does this look as if the professional labor leaders were representing their members? No. It shows them completely out of step with public sentiment. A recent Gallup poll revealed something even more interesting. In answer to the question, "Should strikes be forbidden by law in all war industries for the duration, not just those taken over by the Government?" the results were: Approve, 81 percent; disapprove, 13 percent; and undecided, 13 percent. Gallup polls have shown as high as 85 percent of the American people, including 80 percent of the members of organized labor, favor enactment of a bill requiring public reports of union receipts and expenditures, such as corporations have long been required to submit. Even higher percentages favor prohibiting union officials from contributing huge sums from union treasuries to political campaign funds, without approval of their members. The rank and file of labor thinks for itself. It is not herded along in the European follow-the-leader fashion. It fears that some day a public outraged by labor abuses may burn down the barn to get the rats. It does not want that. I do not want it either.

The organized unions of this country collect approximately $300,000,000 per year for which they need make no accounting even to their own members and on which they pay no taxes. A considerable portion of this money is used to influence the election of yes-men to Congress. The financial troubles of a Member of Congress can be few and far between if he is a political friend of some of the leaders of organized labor. Let me call your attention to a statement of the executive council of the American Federation of Labor appearing in news dispatches of May 18, 1943, in the official Federation clip sheet which is sent to labor papers throughout the country to keep them in step with the labor party line as it is developed by professional labor leaders in Washington, and repeated on the radio May 23 by William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. The statement is as follows:

> The American Federation of Labor calls upon Congress to defeat the Connally-Smith bill. We will demand a record vote on this measure. Regardless of whether it is killed or adopted we shall endeavor to vote out of office any Member of Congress who supports it. Into this effort the American Federation of Labor will pour every resource at its command.

Think that over. The statement continues—

> It may be recalled that some years ago the American Federation of Labor undertook a similar campaign against Members of the United States Senate who voted for confirmation to the Supreme Court of a Federal judge who had upheld "yellow dog" contracts. This appointee was not confirmed but the American Federation of Labor did not forget those Senators who voted for him. Within 10 years not a single one of them remained in the United States Senate. We trust that the Members of Congress are cognizant of the fact that the political strength of the American Federation of Labor has increased many times since then.

Is labor willing to be patriotic only for a price? Here, Mr. Chairman, is an arrogant challenge to the people's representatives in Congress to jump through the hoop or be smothered under a union labor slush fund in a future election. Think that over, those of you who want to play politics. This bill will be vetoed by the man in the White House "who has supped at labor's table," to use the words of John L. Lewis, who contributed $500,000 to his campaign fund, and who in spite of personal differences on some matters with the President still gets his demands met in one way or another because of his political power as head of an organized pressure group. John L. Lewis "knows where the body is buried."

I have been talking about the kind of Congressman the typical labor leader will support. There is another kind of a friend to labor, but he does not get a favorable rating on pre-election slates and score cards of many unions because he is not a yes-man for any group. He is the kind of a man who believes in unions, collective bargaining, reasonable hours, good pay, the right to strike except in wartime and against the Government, and approves the working conditions which have steadily improved because of the influence of labor unions. This man does not believe that any citizen should be forced to join a union or forced to pay a fee for working on a tax-supported project. He is opposed to monopoly and special privileges of any kind. He does not believe in war strikes, sit-downs, and slow-downs when Americans in uniform are dying for lack of equipment from the home front. This man does not believe that just because an individual holds a union card he should be exempt from the laws regulating robbery, extortion, and racketeering. This man represents not only the organized worker but the millions of unorganized workers I have referred to. He believes that with the increased power organized workers have achieved for themselves comes increased public responsibility and that it is to the benefit of all workers this be recognized. That is the kind of a friend to labor I seek to be.

THE GREATEST UNION

I have never asked for, and, so far as I know, I have never had the endorsement of many professional labor leaders. I do not spurn their endorsements, but as long as a political alliance between these people and the New Deal exists I am not likely to get it, because I am a Republican. But I do enjoy the personal friendship of a great many of these men in my own congressional district. They are loyal American citizens, Most of the restrictive legislation proposed in Congress would not affect them. However, a Congressman must legislate not only for his district but for the whole country. His votes affect the whole Nation. I enjoy the confidence and the support of most of the rank and file members of organized labor in my district. Their record of war production, purchase of War bonds, and sacrifice of their sons will bear inspection. I hope that I may continue to merit support of these good people. I know them. I live among them. I share their hopes and their sorrows. A union card in the pocket of a laboring man does not set him apart in the great fundamental things which are important to this country. We are all members of the finest and biggest union in the world, the United States of America. We are all willing to contribute, each in his own and most effective way, so that the Stars and Stripes can continue to wave over this land where all who do an honest day's toil can hope for the greatest rewards which can come to a freeman. God, save this Republic.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 4½ minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I imagine that every Member of this House received a telegram from William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor. I received one under date of June 1. In that telegram to me Mr. Green said:

My appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to grant labor a hearing in opposition to the bill was denied.

I desire at this point to read to the House a letter I addressed to Mr. William Green, president, American Federation of Labor, on March 25, 1943:

DEAR SIR: The House Military Affairs Committee has started hearings on H. R. 2239, commonly referred to as the Smith bill, to amend the Selective Training and Service Act, and for other purposes, and also the Austin-Wadsworth bill relating to mobilization of manpower, and the Fulmer bill, proposing the deferment of agricultural workers under the provisions of the Selective Training and Service Act; and the Colmer bill, H. R. 992.

As the head of your group, I am writing you this letter to suggest that if you desire to be heard either for or against either of these bills, the committee will be glad to hear you at your convenience either the coming week or the week following.

Yours very truly,

A. J. MAY, Chairman.

An identical letter went to Mr. Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., and to John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

In the printed hearings on pages 775 to 790 will be found the testimony of Lewis G. Hines, national legislative representative of the American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C. He came to the committee and requested to be heard. Likewise Mr. Hushing came. He found it impossible to appear and asked permission that Mr. Hines be permitted to testify. That was permitted, and he was requested to say whether or not he had other witnesses he wanted to present.

Now, here is a part of his testimony:

I desire to be as brief as possible; I appreciate the fact that there is quite a number of people yet to be heard. I should like to talk about three bills that are before the committee, namely, H. R. 1742, H. R. 2239, and H. R. 992.

H. R. 2239 is essentially the principal portions of the Connally bill and the Smith bill.

In addition to that, he placed in the record a written statement in opposition to the legislation by Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor.

I put that in the RECORD to show that the telegram you received from him is not true and that it is not in good faith. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein my letters to William Green and John L. Lewis and their answers thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

All time has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc.—

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, does a motion to offer a substitute take precedence over an amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. No. A perfecting amendment takes precedence over a substitute amendment.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, I have sent to the desk a preferential motion to strike out the enacting clause. Does that take precedence over the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

Mr. CELLER. I offer that preferential motion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. I make the point of order that I was recognized to offer an amendment and I did offer it before the gentleman offered his motion, and being a committee amendment it should be considered first.

The CHAIRMAN. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky the Chair will state that the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] wa on his feet and he now offers a preferential motion. He is entitled to recognition.

The Clerk will report the motion offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preferential motion offered by Mr. CELLER: Mr. CELLER moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CELLER. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Is the gentleman's motion in order, since there has been no debate on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment stage has been reached and, therefore, the motion offered by the gentleman from New York is in order.

The gentleman from New York is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Chairman, this bill, beyond peradventure of doubt, should have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, since it primarily involves matters concerning labor injunctions and disputes involving labor, which subject matter heretofore, as far as legislation is concerned, has always been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I am quite convinced that if that committee had some control over this bill we would have avoided the confusion involved in the pending version of the bill. We would not have had inserted in the bill, for example, section 6, entitled "Enforcement." I have studied that section very carefully and I want to warn members of the committee that section 6 gives us back again the obnoxious labor injunctions which were banned after many years of striving and struggle, by the passage of the Clayton Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Remember we had consigned labor injunction to limbo. Now they are to be brought back to plague labor. Concomitantly there is being brought back to life the infamous yellow dog contracts, where an individual employee was coerced by his employer to sign a contract that he would not, during the term of his employment, join a union. The courts throughout the land, with wisdom, or I should say lack of wisdom, went to the greatest extremes to enforce that contract—the yellow dog contract—which coerced and held as a peon or slave or serf the workingman. The "yellow dog" contracts, remember, were implemented and strengthened by the labor injunction. Whenever any attempts were made to have the yellow dog employee join a union, he was enjoined and restrained by ex parte injunction. Unions and union leaders were restrained.

The courts granted the injunction on the ground that there would be irreparable damage to the employer. I said briefly yesterday and I shall elaborate in my extension of remarks some of the abuses concerning the issuance of these dreaded and dreadful labor injunctions in support of these "yellow dog" contracts. Now that is all to be revived because the court under section 6 can enjoin violations, aye, threatened violations, of any of the provisions of sections 2, 3, 4, and 5 which refer to jurisdictional disputes, boycotts, sympathy strikes, violence, intimidation, strikes, and lockouts. After 50 years of striving, of travail, of uttermost difficulty and suffering, labor was enabled to assert its rights and to assume some dignity by being able to strike, and to boycott, and to lock out, and to refrain from dealing in unfair goods. That shall now be wiped out by a mere wave of the hand. I hope, Mr. Chairman, before the Congress does that the Members of the House will pause and tarry long with reference to section 6 on injunctions.

In days gone by, practically everything attempted by unionists to preserve their organizations from wrongful acts of employers seeking to destroy them has been restrained by the courts. Most injunctions are issued on ex parte hearings.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CELLER. I cannot yield at the moment.

The abuses were so cruel and the criticisms so grave that both the parties in their platforms denounced the evils against which labor struggled and denounced specifically labor injunction. This bill would hunt and hound labor by making possible the return of the "yellow dog" contract and the vicious labor injunction.

THE CASE AGAINST INJUNCTIONS IN INDUSTRIAL DISPUTES

It is well to keep in mind that the use of the labor injunction is a legal violation of specific rights to protect individuals who stand accused before the court. Particularly in the granting of temporary restraining orders of the ex parte application, the right to a hearing before execution of the judgment is denied. Thus, judgment may be rendered after taking testimony that may be unwritten and the defendant denied the opportunity of confrontration of witnesses or the opportunity to ask a single question. Ofttimes, the proof offered by the plaintiff is merely by way of affidavit.

Federal Judge Amidon has expressed a very definite opinion on the trustworthiness of affidavits. Categorizing affidavits as "an untrustworthy guide for judicial action," he pointedly states, "This is the case in all legal proceedings, but it is peculiarly true of litigation growing out of a strike, where feelings on both sides are necessarily wrought up, and the desire for victory is likely to obscure the moral questions and poison the minds of men by prejudice."

Certainly, it is true that most of these affidavits are made by detectives and guards, overzealous to impress their employers with efficiency and, perhaps, indispensability. Experiences in litigation have shown time and time again that when both sides have had their say, affidavits have been proven to be packed with falsehoods or, worse, with half-truths that, in the matter of industrial disputes, are more deceptive than deliberate falsehoods. Upon this form of proof, the courts have denied citizens of their inalienable rights to strike, for in most cases the preliminary injunction, the ex parte injunction, without notice or hearing, has decided the fate of the strike.

The use of the labor injunction violates other fundamental rights as well, namely, formal indictment, presumption of innocence, requirement of proof beyond reasonable doubt, right to be confronted by witnesses, and, probably most important of all, jury trial. The individual enjoined can be punished by the judge issuing the injunction. There is no limitation upon the judge or the punishment. The offender is punished without trial by jury. Testimony given by Mr. Gregory, former president of the American Bar Association before the United States Commission on Industrial Relations (1912-1916) was vehement in its denunciation of the evasion of jury trial and other constitutional safeguards. He stated:

The obvious wisdom of permitting 12 men drawn from the body of the people to pass on questions of fact has so far commended itself to the wisdom of our legislators and jurists to such a degree that it has become a permanent feature of our jurisprudence. It cannot be denied that the wielding of the club of ex parte injunctions is contrary to the Bill of Rights.

Moreover, courts of equity in granting injunctions and enforcing their orders can be said to be entering the sphere of activity of the executive branch of the Government. To assure compliance, in the old labor strikes it was necessary in many instances to direct the regular police officers or United States marshals, as the case may be, to swear in a large number of deputies. Often, this amounted to placing an army of men at the disposal of the court. The Debs case, the shopmen's strike of 1922, and the coal miners' strike of 1928 can be cited as instances.

The judiciary should not hold both the sword and the purse.

There is more than an implied assumption of executive powers when the courts in industrial disputes directed orders against "all other persons" and "all other persons whomsoever" by enjoining acts which have not been declared to be unlawful by the legislature or any other authority, and by substituting their judgment for the judgment of the legislators on matters of social policy.

The most significant misconception encouraged by the courts in the granting of the labor injunction was the placing of property rights above personal rights.

There was no balancing of the two, especially so since jury trial, which might give more adequate consideration to personal rights, is denied in the contempt proceedings. As Samuel Gompers has aptly stated:

The injunction, as used in industrial disputes, is a preposterous weapon of oppression, used without authority of the law or the Constitution, and an instrument forged by cunning and usurpation for the benefit of the possessors of property to the detriment of humanity.

It cannot be questioned that injunctions cause industrial unrest. It will have that undesired effect in reference to the bill before us. Organized labor considered the use of the injunction as an unreasonable and unwarranted interference with the right to collective bargaining. It still thinks so. More than one authority has expressed the opinion that much of the bitterness manifested by workingmen in labor disputes arose from this cause. As a source of friction and complaint, the injunction ranked among the most serious of problems in industrial relations. Certainly because of it the courts had suffered a loss of prestige and with it a distrust of law and the courts. That is mischief enough. Shall we renew that mischief with new ex parte labor injunctions?

No less a person than Miss Jane Addams of wide social sympathies had said in 1908:

I should say perhaps that the one symptom among workingmen which most definitely indicates a class feeling is a growing distrust of the integrity of the courts, the belief that the present judge has been a corporation attorney, that his sympathies and experience and his whole view of life is on the corporation side. Either this distrust is growing rapidly or the statement of it is being more distinctly made every day.

Mr. Justice Brandeis had this—and most justifiably—to say of "government by injunction":

Through such proceedings a single judge often usurped the functions not only of the jury but of the police department; that, in prescribing the conditions under which strikes were permissible and how they might be carried out, he usurped also the powers of the legislature; and that incidentally he abridged the constitutional rights of individuals to free speech, to a free press, and to peaceful assembly.

Can it not be said that in the use of the injunction in industrial disputes that the employer under the guise of protecting property rights was seeking sovereign power?

Furthermore, section 4 and section 5, among other things, prevent picketing, boycotting, and sympathy strikes. The right to strike and picket is an inalienable right. It is well to note the case of American Federation of Labor v. Swing (312 U. S. Repts. 321) held that a State statute could not countervene the right to picket peacefully. That was the case wherein a beauty parlor was picketed by a union of which the employees of the beauty shop were not members and the Court held:

Such a ban of free communication is inconsistent with the guarantee of freedom of speech. That a State has ample power to regulate the local problems thrown up by modern industry and to preserve the peace is axiomatic. But not even these essential powers are unfettered by the requirements of the Bill of Rights.

The framers of the instant bill care little about constitutionality of their brain child.

I could spend hours upon other unfair features of this bill, but time will not permit.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. What is the parliamentary situation at the moment? Does a vote come on this privileged motion before another amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 5 minutes in opposition to the motion.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Chairman, the motion and the argument of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] are good samples of the type of opposition to the pending bill. There are those who allegedly opposed it because it was not considered or reported by the Committee on Labor; others asserted they opposed it because of their criticisms of the hearings or lack of hearings on the part of the Committee on Military Affairs. Such opposition is nothing more nor less than an excuse. None opposing either consideration of the bill or opposing the bill has said that no matter by what committee this bill had been reported, he would have supported either the Connally or the Smith bill or any other antistrike bill.

Mr. Chairman, we must be practical. There is one thing the entire membership of this body knows, and that is that the only opportunity the Members of the House have had or will have to express themselves and vote for regulatory or restrictive labor legislation is on voting for or against this bill. Members advocating labor control should vote for consideration and for the best bill that can be obtained in the committee. To vote against the bill is to vote against antistrike legislation. We might as well be frank about it. If we wait until the Committee on Labor reports a bill, we shall wait in vain, just as we have for the past 4 years.

It is not now a question of the rights of labor or of the right to strike or the right of collective bargaining; the issue transcends the rights of labor unions, the issue transcends the rights of organized labor.

The demand of William Green that the Members of this body vote against both the Connally bill and the Smith bill with the threat of defeat to any Member voting for either of said bills is an affront to the red-blooded membership of the Congress and an insult to the red-blooded American constituencies they represent.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Gladly when I complete my statement.

John L. Lewis hates Franklin D. Roosevelt, President and the Commander in Chief of the Army and the Navy of the United States, with such venom that his judgment has been bitterly warped and his patriotism has been seriously impaired, if not practically destroyed. We might as well face the issue. When the coal miners' strike was called and the President took over the operation of the coal mines, John L. Lewis contemptuously and insultingly said to the American people: "Now we will bargain with our new employer, the United States of America."

What is the issue? The issue is striking against the United States when the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, has taken over the operation of the coal mines or other war industry. The issue is the right to strike against the flag. If it comes to the issue that I must either vote for the labor unions or for the Government, with me the Government comes first and I vote for the Government. The issue is whether Congress will support John L. Lewis, who has defied the Government, or the President of the United States, who has taken over the operation of the coal mines. We are either for our Government or against it.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Just as soon as I finish my statement. The issue here, we might as well understand, stripped of all camouflage, stripped of all excuses and pretenses, is that this is the only opportunity at least for some time the Members of the House will have to express themselves or vote with respect to labor legislation. We have passed the buck to the Senate, the Senate has passed the buck to the House. There has been enough shadow boxing. We are either for antistrike legislation or we are against it. The issue is: When the production of steel is being impaired or stopped by the strike of 500,000 miners at the instigation and upon the demand of John L. Lewis, whether this Congress will take its stand for labor unions and John L. Lewis or for the Government. For my part, Mr. Chairman, I am for the Government of the United States of America.

It is time for dictatorial labor leaders, who demand that Members of Congress vote as they are ordered "or else," to be emphatically rebuked. It is time for John L. Lewis, who has openly and contemptuously defied the National War Labor Board and the President of the United States in the operation of the coal mines, to be put once and for all in his place. It is time for Congress, which can pass legislation to promote organized labor, to pass legislation that will prevent dictatorial labor leaders from strikes in war plants and from strikes in any plant under the operation of the Government.

Mr. Chairman, I extend my remarks to say the Connally bill was passed by the Senate on May 5, 1943. It was an amendment to section 9 of the Selective Service Act and authorized the President to take over war plants where there are strikes or labor disturbances, and to operate said plants. The Connally bill made it unlawful for any person to coerce or instigate strikes in such plants and provided for the punishment of violations of the provisions of the act. The bill also approved by statute the National War Labor Board, established by Executive order, and put teeth into the operations of the National War Labor Board.

The House in the Seventy-seventh Congress in December 1941 passed the so-called Smith bill. It died in the Senate. When the Connally bill came to the House it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and this committee amended the bill by striking out the Connally bill and inserting in lieu thereof the principal provisions of the Smith bill, passed by the House by a vote of 2 to 1, as stated, in December 1941.

The purpose of the Smith bill is to prevent strikes or lock-outs in war plants during the war.

Section 1 of the bill provides for definitions.

Section 2 requires a 30-day notice or cooling-off period before there can be any strike or lock-out. A similar provision obtains in the legislation for the railway brotherhoods. No strikes can be called by the brotherhood until there is a cooling-off period. The section does not authorize a strike but it provides that strikes cannot be called until there is the cooling-off period.

Section 3 provides for a secret ballot. A strike cannot be called without such a ballot.

Section 4 is to protect employees from violence and intimidation. Professional strikers are prohibited.

Section 5 makes unlawful jurisdictional disputes and sympathetic strikes.

Section 6 provides for enforcement and penalties for violations.

Section 7 provides for the registration of labor organizations. It requires publication of the annual dues, the method of election, financial statements, with copies of constitution and bylaws. Congress requires financial statements from political parties. Such statements should be required of labor unions.

Section 8 legalizes the National War Labor Board, established by Executive order.

Section 9 puts teeth into the powers of the National War Labor Board.

Section 10 authorizes the maintenance of the status quo, and Section 11 provides for regulations of the Board.

Section 12 deals with the power of the Board with respect to wages, in Government-operated plants, and I think might well be eliminated.

Section 13 prevents the interference with Government operation of plants.

Under section 14 the act is to be enforced during the war and for six months following the war.

THE PURPOSE

The labor unions announced, following Pearl Harbor, there would be no more strikes. The people praised both organizations. Sometime after Pearl Harbor, however, jurisdictional strikes arose in the Kaiser shipyards involving 100,000 men and nearly $3,000,000 in dues. As I recall, the A. F. of L. had the contracts and the C. I. O. was trying to get them. All efforts to stop the contest failed. The Wagner Act was invoked, but under the Wagner Act the question of jurisdiction can be raised. Strikes resulted. There was delay in production. Strikes have multiplied. There were 395 strikes in April 1943. There were 2,968 strikes in 1942. The purpose of the bill is to prevent strikes in war plants. John L. Lewis has defied the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy. He has defied the National War Labor Board. He has constituted himself as judge and jury in disputes between miners and operators. He has defied the Department of Labor. He has defied his Government. It is time for a show-down. It is time to put John L. Lewis in his place. No man should be permitted to impede the war effort.

THE RULE

A desperate effort was made to defeat the rule. The bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. While no specific hearings had been conducted on the pending bill, the Committee on Military Affairs had conducted exhaustive hearings on strikes in connection with the utilization of manpower. More than 1,000 pages of testimony had been taken. The representatives of labor had been heard. The views of the labor leaders were known. Congress had already passed the Smith bill 18 months ago. I asked those who opposed the rule, because they alleged that the labor organizations were not heard by the Military Affairs Committee, just one question. I asked, "Would the opponents of the rule vote for the rule if hearings were conducted and substantially the same bill were reported?" All responded they would still oppose the bill. The plea that there were no hearings was invalid. It was really an excuse. Those who voted against the rule because there were no hearings, when repeated hearings had already been conducted, are against the bill. The plea of no hearings is a smoke screen and does not rise to the dignity of an excuse for opposing the bill.

VOLUNTARY COOPERATION

It is said that it is constitutional to conscript men to die for their country, but it is unconstitutional to conscript labor. While the conscription of labor is not involved, I believe that both men and labor could be conscripted if necessary for the defense of the United States and for the successful prosecution of the war. Moreover, I think that if men can be conscripted, property can be conscripted. But, I repeat, the bill does not involve the conscription of labor. It involves the protection of honest labor. The bill guarantees the right of collective bargaining. It is intended to prevent dictators in labor just as democracy is intended to prevent dictators in government. The purpose of the bill is to prevent racketeering and subversive leadership. The purpose of the bill is to prevent and eliminate strikes that impede the war industries. It is said that the proper solution of our labor problems is voluntary cooperation. But labor has heretofore admitted that voluntary cooperation was ineffective. The labor organizations appealed to Congress to enact labor legislation. Labor itself abandoned voluntary cooperation to secure protection for labor. It has appealed for statute after statute, and Congress has responded by passing statutes to protect the rights of labor. If statutes are necessary and essential to protect labor in its rights, statutes are essential to restrict labor and to prevent strikes in war plants during the war.

LEADERS

Again it is said that all labor organizations should not be punished because of the arbitrary unpatriotic demands of some labor organizations. John L. Lewis is without a defender. There is general consensus of opinion that he should be put in his place, but it is urged that because a few labor organizations promote strikes there should not be legislation that would affect all labor organizations. There is no occasion for criminal statutes for the great body of people. They are essential for the few criminals. The regulation of utilities and of exchanges was made necessary because of the violations of the few. Subversive and racketeering leaders and wholly unjustifiable strikes by the few make legislation necessary to prevent any strikes or racketeering by all.

CLEAN HOUSE

It is time for labor to clean house. Excessive fees by unions, undue assessments upon members, excessive salaries, demand relief. Laborers themselves are not objecting to legislation to prevent unreasonable fees, unreasonable assessments, or to prevent racketeering.

We have heard a lot about absenteeism, but absenteeism is not the real heart of labor difficulties, nor is it responsible for the slow production of war materials. I oppose absenteeism. It should be penalized, but my point is that penalizing absenteeism is not enough.

For almost 4 years the people of the United States have urged that labor clean house. Voluntary methods and cooperation have failed. If legislation can promote, legislation can restrict labor. I repeat it is time for a show-down. The Congress must provide that John L. Lewis is the servant and not the master of the United States. The time for name calling has passed. It is time for action. I trust that the Smith bill, as a substitute for the Connally bill, may be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CELLER) there were—ayes 37, noes 133.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAY:

On page 8, line 22, after the word "which", strike out the words "may be" and insert the word "are."

Line 23, after the word "which", strike out the words "may be" and insert the word "are."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HARNESS of Indiana: Page 7, line 12, strike out all of the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SECTION 1. As used in this act—

"(a) 'Person' means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, or any organized group of persons.

"(b) 'War contract' means—

"(1) A contract with the United States entered into on behalf of the United States by an officer or employee of the Department of War, the Department of the Navy, or the United States Maritime Commission;

"(2) A contract with the United States entered into by the United States pursuant to an act entitled 'An act to promote the defense of the United States';

"(3) A contract, whether or not with the United States, for the production, manufacture, construction, reconstruction, installation, maintenance, storage, repair, mining, or transportation of—

"(A) Any weapon, munition, aircraft, vessel, or boat;

"(B) Any building, structure, or facility;

"(C) Any machinery, tool, material, supply article, or commodity; or

"(D) Any component material or part of or equipment for any article described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C);

"the production, manufacture, construction, reconstruction, installation, maintenance, storage, repair, mining, or transportation of which by the contractor in question is found by the President as being contracted for in the prosecution of the war.

"(c) 'War contractor' means the person producing, manufacturing, constructing, reconstructing, installing, maintaining, storing, repairing, mining, or transporting under a war contract, or a person whose plant is equipped for the manufacture, production, or mining of any articles or materials which may be required in the prosecution of the war or which may be useful in connection therewith; but such term shall not include a carrier, as defined in title I of the Railway Labor Act, or a carrier by air subject to title II of such act.

"(d) The terms 'employer,' 'employee,' 'representative,' 'labor organization,' and 'labor dispute' shall have the same meaning as in section 2 of the National Labor Relations Act.

"NOTICE TO STRIKE OR CONDUCT LOCK-OUT

"SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for a war contractor to conduct a lock-out until after the expiration of 30 days from the date on which such contractor gives to his employees or their representatives and to the Secretary of Labor written notice of his intention so to do, together with a statement of his reasons for such intended lock-out, or for employees of a war contractor to strike until after the expiration of 30 days from the date on which they or their representatives give to such contractor and to the Secretary of Labor written notice of their intention to do so, together with a statement of their reasons for such intended strike.

"Strike ballots

"SEC. 3. It shall be unlawful for employees of a war contractor to strike until after the Secretary of Labor has certified the result of a secret ballot taken, under the direction of the United States Conciliation Service, of the employees employed at the plant, plants, mine, mines, or other place, or places of employment, or in the bargaining unit or units, with respect to which the notice under section 2 applies. At any time after the employees of a war contractor, or their representatives, give notice under section 2, such employees or their representative may request the Secretary of Labor to take, through the United States Conciliation Service, a secret ballot of the employees at the plant, plants, mine, mines, or other place or places of employment, or in the bargaining unit or units, with respect to which such notice applies, for the purpose of determining whether such employees favor or oppose such proposed strike. Upon receiving any such request, the Secretary of Labor shall direct the United States Conciliation Service to take forthwith such secret ballot, and after the taking of such ballot the Secretary shall by order forthwith certify the results thereof, which shall be open to public inspection.

"SEC. 4. (a) Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 2 or 3 shall be liable to a civil suit to any person injured thereby for damages resulting from such injury.

"(b) Any person who violates any of the provisions of sections 2 or 3 shall on and after such violation cease to have and cease to be entitled for a period of 1 year to (1) the status of a representative or labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act; (2) the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purposes of section 4 of the act of March 23, 1932, entitled 'An act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.'

"(c) In case any individual who violates any of the provisions of sections 2 or 3 is an officer or representative of a labor organization, then or and after such violation and so long as such individual is an officer or representative of such labor organization, such labor organization shall cease to have or be entitled to the status of a labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act and cease to have the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purposes of section 4 of the act of March 23, 1932, entitled "An act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes."

"Registration of labor organizations

"SEC. 5. (a) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this act and annually thereafter every labor organization in which employees of any war contractor participate, through its president or other authorized officer, shall register its identity with the National Labor Relations Board and shall state under oath the following information: The name of the labor organization; the address at which it has its principal office or does business; the names and titles of the officers; initiation fees; annual dues charged each member; assessments levied during the past 12-month period; limitations on membership; number of paid-up members; date of the last election of officers; the annual salary of each officer, including bonuses, travel, and other expenses; and the date of the last detailed financial statement furnished all members and the method of publication or circulation of such statement. With such information shall be filed under oath detailed and intelligible financial statements and a copy of the constitution and bylaws of the labor organization.

"(b) Every labor organization established after the date of enactment of this act in which employees of any war contractor participate shall, when established and annually thereafter, register with the Board and furnish the information required of existing labor organizations under the provisions of subsection (a).

"(c) Any labor organization which fails to register with the Board and file the information required by this act shall be disqualified to act as the representative of employees in collective bargaining for such time as such failure shall continue: Provided, That in the initial registration only if information on a particular point is lacking, the statement 'no information' or 'no record' shall be considered an answer.

" 'SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. For the purposes of this section "labor organization" shall have the same meaning as under the National Labor Relations Act.'

"SEC. 7. When possession of any plant, mine, or other property has been, or is hereafter taken by the Government under authority of section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, or otherwise, by reason of a strike, lockout, threatened strike, threatened lockout, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable but in no event more than 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

"Termination of act

"SEC. 8. Except as to offenses committed prior to such date, the provisions of this act and the amendments made by this act shall cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date (prior to the date of such proclamation) of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective."

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS]?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, you will have observed, if you listened carefully to the reading of this substitute, that section 1 is identical with the committee bill.

Section 2 is identical with the committee bill and provides for a 30-day cooling-off period or 30 days' notice before strike.

Section 3 is the same as the committee bill and provides for a secret ballot to be conducted by a Government agency in the event notice has been given to strike.

Section 4 is a part of section 6 of the bill. Section 4 of this substitute is the penalty provision. Subsection (a) of section 4 of the substitute provides as follows:

Any person violating any of the provisions of sections 2 and 3—

Sections 2 and 3 are the strike-notice and the secret-ballot provisions—shall be liable to a civil suit to any person injured thereby for damage resulting from such an injury.

And that would apply to corporations who have a lock-out, and if any workman were locked out of the plant because of the action of the officers of the corporation he would be entitled to damages in a civil suit against the corporation. It also would apply to labor unions or individuals of labor unions. Anyone who was damaged as the result of a strike in violation of this act would be entitled to file a civil suit for damages.

Subsection (b) provides that any person who violates any of the provisions of these two sections shall on and after such violation cease to have and cease to be entitled for a period of 1 year, first, to the status of a representative of a labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act, and, second, the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purpose of section (a) of the act of March 23, 1932, which is the Norris-LaGuardia act.

Subsection (c) is about the same as subsection (b) and applies to an officer or representative of a labor organization who violates any of the provisions of those two sections. Then or after such violation, and so long as such individual is an officer or representative of such labor organization, such organization shall cease to have or be entitled to the status of a labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act, and shall cease to have the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purpose of section 4 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

Section 5 of this act is very similar to one of the sections of the House bill which provides for the registration of labor organizations. This provision of my substitute does not go into as much detail as the House bill does, and requires only the necessary information, such as the amount of dues charged the member, the number of paid-up members and the salaries of the officers, including bonuses and traveling expenses, and a detailed financial statement of the organization.

Section 6 of this substitute amends section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act and merely adds the words "Labor organization" to that act. That act, as you know, prevents a corporation or a national bank from making political contributions.

My amendment would broaden that act to cover labor organizations.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HANCOCK. I wonder if the gentleman has overlooked the fact that the Hatch Act, passed in 1940, contained a provision prohibiting political contributions in excess of $5,000 in any one year, and in that act persons are defined as including individuals, unincorporated groups, partnerships, associations. That is not aimed at labor unions, but all unincorporated groups are limited under the present law to a contribution of not to exceed $5,000 per year. I wonder if the gentleman had that in mind in drafting that provision.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. No; frankly, I did not have it in mind, but this does prohibit contributions by a corporation, a national bank or a labor organization.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I understand from the statement of the gentleman that his bill only deals with three things: what may be classified as a cooling-off period, contributions to political campaigns, and the disclosure of receipts and assets and their distribution.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. And the secret ballot.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is the cooling-off period.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. The gentleman's bill deals with those three questions.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. There is one other section that I have not got to yet, section 7.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. All right.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Under section 9 of the Selective Service and Training Act the President has the power to seize certain plants and industries if the management of those plants fails to cooperate with the Government in this war program, but he has gone beyond that authorization and he has seized industries. He has seized the mines, for example, not because management has not failed to cooperate but because the President and labor leadership are waging a bitter personal feud.

Section 7 of my substitute provides as follows:

When possession of any plant, mine, or other property has been or is hereafter taken by the Government under authority of section 9 of the Selective Service and Training Act of 1940, as amended, or otherwise, by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event for 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Your substitute does not deal at all with jurisdictional disputes?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. It does not.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Does the gentleman have any opposition to accepting an amendment to the substitute dealing with jurisdictional disputes?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Yes; because I do not think it is necessary if you have sections 2 and 3 of this bill, and I believe so firmly that if you will give to labor in the plants the determination of whether there is going to be a strike there will be no strike.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. In order that the Committee can thoroughly understand the issues before it, the gentleman's substitute then merely deals with the cooling-off period, the secret ballot in relation to the determination of a strike.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And contributions to political campaigns.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is right.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. And a disclosure of how much they take in, how much is paid out, and where the money goes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. A financial statement.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. A financial statement, plus seizure after the plants have been taken over by the Government.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is as far as the gentleman is willing to deal with the question?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is as far as I think we should go on this question.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I just want the Committee of the House to thoroughly understand the extent of the gentleman's amendment so we will know exactly the difference between what he is proposing and the committee bill.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for bringing that out so clearly.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. I suppose the last section of the gentleman's bill, and I have not read the amendment, carries out exactly what the committee adopted in section 12 of its bill.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is correct.

Mr. MAY. It requires that within 60 days after the causes which brought about the seizure of the plant have ceased to exist, it may be returned to its owner.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is section 7 of this proposed substitute.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LANDIS. I understand that most of the strikes that we have had before were unauthorized strikes or jurisdictional strikes. Does not the gentleman believe that if a secret ballot is provided, which will also give a cooling-off period, it will eliminate all of these unauthorized strikes and the so-called jurisdictional strikes?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is just exactly what I said a few moments ago, regarding sections 2 and 3 in this bill. I agree exactly with the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Indiana may proceed for 5 additional minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHORT. Now, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. I wish to take advantage of this opportunity to express my own personal gratitude and appreciation for the valuable work which the gentleman from Indiana has done in the consideration of this measure, and I think his substitute offers a very clear plan, and while it may not solve all the difficulties, I shall be glad to vote upon it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Does the substitute prohibit secondary or sympathetic strikes?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I think it would eliminate them. If you give the men and women in labor the right to determine whether or not there will be a strike, if they can vote secretly on the question of a strike, there will be no strikes in this country, because American labor are patriotic and want to cooperate. As I said a while ago on this floor, the only reason we have had strikes is that labor has not had a source of reliable, dependable information, and that they have been misled and misinformed by certain labor leaders.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Will the gentleman explain what his substitute would do in the case of an individual's inciting a strike in a plant before the expiration of the 30 days, or after the expiration of the 30 days if the workers in the plant had voted not to strike?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. They just could not do it. It would be unlawful under this bill.

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. What would be the penalty?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. There is a penalty for it, which the gentleman will recall that I described just a few minutes ago.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course the gentleman does not attribute any fault at all for these strikes to any of the operators?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I did not say that. I am not defending the coal operators at all.

Let me make this observation: This is no time for this Congress to write on the statute books more drastic legislation than this substitute I have offered. When we try to enact legislation here toda, while the coal strike is on, it is an indication that this House in the past has failed to look the facts in the face and put on the statute books the needed legislation to prevent this situation. If we should pass this section 12, or 13, making it an offense for anybody to instigate a strike in a defense plant taken over by the Government, it would not apply to this mine situation, for it would be ex post facto as far as the mine strike is concerned. I do not believe this is the time to enact any such legislation as that. If you will take this simple substitute—friends of labor should support this substitute—it will stop practically all of the labor disorders in this country in defense plants, in my opinion.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. GATHINGS. Under the gentleman's substitute proposal, he would strike out all of the provisions that have to do with the War Labor Board?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Yes, I would take out all of the provisions about the War Labor Board. I do not want by law to recognize the War Labor Board as such. It has been appointed and is functioning under an Executive order, and I want to let it continue to operate that way.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Did the gentleman submit his substitute to the committee for consideration?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. We discussed every section in this bill, time and time again.

Mr. SADOWSKI. What action did the gentleman's committee take on his substitute when it was presented to the committee?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I did not offer it as a substitute in committee.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Why not, may I ask?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Because I just got it written this morning.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. If this substitute is adopted and then passed by the House, could you under the bill deal with the present coal strike?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. No, this would not deal with the present strike. I say we cannot pass any legislation here today that will affect the present strike in the coal fields.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. There is no way you can legislate on it.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. There is no way we can legislate on that at all.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. There is only one person who can deal with that, and that is the President of the United States.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is right. The President of the United States has the power under the Constitution to deal with that.

Mr. SHORT. Pour the oil where the squeak is. The squeak is in the White House.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is right. Put the blame where it belongs.

Mr. SADOWSKI. If the gentleman will yield further, does the gentleman feel that the War Department and the Navy Department would support his substitute amendment? Would it meet with their approval?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I do not know. I am satisfied in my mind of this, that the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy and every general officer under either of them would support every single provision in this bill if they had their own way about it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. It is a fact that the present bill is not supported by the War Department and the Navy Department?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. No; that is not true.

Mr. SADOWSKI. The point I wish to make is, Will they support the gentleman's substitute?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, this is a most unusual procedure that the gentleman from Indiana has suggested. He was a member of the subcommittee that recommended the bill to the full committee, and he assisted in the drafting of the very bill that is up for consideration at this moment. He voted for the rule on that bill. Yet now, when we have concluded the reading of the first section of the bill, he submits an entirely new bill of four single-spaced typewritten pages, which has not been submitted to the chairman or a single man on the majority side, and I am not sure that it has been submitted to all the Members on the minority side, a bill the draft of which, he says, was just completed awhile ago, too late to submit to anybody. I claim that is not a very safe way to legislate on a bill which is as important and controversial as this is.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Is there anything in this bill that the gentleman and every other member of our committee has not discussed by the hour for the past 10 days?

Mr. THOMASON. That is the very reason why I insist that this House proceed along orderly lines and read the bill now under consideration, section by section, so that we will know what this is all about, because I am sure the gentleman appreciates that if this amendment which he offers, which is an entire bill in itself, should be adopted, to use a slang expression, "church is out," because that is the end of the bill. The simple question the House would have before it would then be voting it up or down. There are some things in the original bill which I am not for, and there are things in the bill under discussion that I am for, but I want to know why a matter so controversial as this, when the country is so vitally interested in it, should not be considered in an orderly way, section by section. Let us debate these things, instead of simply saying by a vote "yes" or "no," that we will either accept or reject this substitute.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. The gentleman knows as well as this House knows, and as well as anyone else knows, that we could take this substitute up, section by section, and debate it.

Mr. THOMASON. If we are going to do that, I cannot understand the procedure, and I am a little bit suspicious about the procedure the gentleman is about to follow. It sounds like politics to me. I prefer an open frank way of meeting every issue in the bill face to face. I am sure I speak for the chairman of this committee when he says that he never heard of this substitute until 20 minutes ago, and that is true of every man on the majority side of the committee. Why not go ahead and face the issues in the committee bill, as presented, because I am going to offer some amendments myself. There are some things that I am opposed to, and some things that I am strongly in favor of, but I repeat what I undertook to say this morning, and that is that the big issue right now before the country is who is running the country, a certain individual and a group of men or the President of the United States. That is the heart of the bill.

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. BECKWORTH. And the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] had a perfect right to offer his substitute in the committee and had plenty of time to do it, had he not?

Mr. THOMASON. I will be frank with the gentleman and say I think that I remember one or two sections that my colleague the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] referred to, and he asked the gentleman from Indiana if he was going to support them, and he said "Yes." It seems to me that we ought to go ahead in a regular way, and meet the issue in every section.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. And does the gentleman think that the gentleman from Indiana would have had an opportunity yesterday morning, in view of what happened in the commitee?

Mr. THOMASON. I will say to my friend from Ohio, that the gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] spent a long time in preparing the original draft, and then it was gone over and debated section by section and never did I hear the gentleman propose this substitute in its entirety.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has referred to this as an unusual procedure. There have been a lot of unusual things in connection with this whole procedure, and is it not true that the bill as originally written and reported out by the committee has since been amended by the committee, or that the committee will seek to amend it?

Mr. THOMASON. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. And that you add a lot of things to it.

Mr. THOMASON. That is all true; but those amendments were placed in the RECORD yesterday, but now the gentleman from Indiana seeks to bring in an entirely new bill here and offer it as an amendment to the bill which, if adopted, is the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Committee to pay particular attention to exactly what is tendered in this so-called substitute. I believe that calmly and dispassionately I can show to the Committee that the adoption of this substitute is in truth and in fact a defeat of the entire proposal. It consists of nothing other than the present section 2 and section 3 of the bill, and then some provisions which do not touch wartime strikes—top, side, nor bottom. These consist of a prohibition of contributions to political campaigns, require registration and reports by unions, and other collateral matters. In Committee on Military Affairs a motion was made to strike sections 2 and 3 from the bill. Their elimination was recommended by the Army, by the Navy, by the Maritime Commission, by the War Labor Board, and by the National Labor Relations Board. All of those agencies expressed no objections to the bill, outside of some perfecting amendments, if sections 2, 3, and 12 were eliminated from the bill.

It is the first time that I know of that the agencies charged with production for the war and the conduct of the war have agreed upon legislation on this subject. Sections 2 and 3 instead of strengthening the committee bill as an antistrike bill, actually weaken that bill, for this reason: It is provided in section 2 that no strike shall be called except after 30 days' notice. Section 3 provides that no strike shall be called in a war plant until after a secret ballot, the result of which shall be declared by the Secretary of Labor. At the present time all of the unions are under a voluntary agreement not to strike. True it has been violated, but in most instances it has been observed. At least you and I and the American people demand that organized labor do observe and respect the voluntary agreement that they made. If you adopt this provision you say by legislation that in a war factory no strike shall be legal except when it is called after 30 days' notice and after a secret ballot. That is the positive effect of sections 2 and 3 of the original bill, and are the only provisions of this so-called substitute which touch strikes in war plants. By express statutory enactment they legalize a strike in a war plant, called after 30 days' notice and after a secret ballot.

The present coal strike did not come off until after about 90 days of so-called cooling off. These provisions should be stricken from the committee bill. May I say to you that in the Committe on Military Affairs a motion was made to strike them, and upon the original roll call the motion carried by one vote. I am sorry to say that thereafter another member was recorded which resulted in a tie vote. That is the margin by which they remain in this bill. Everybody on the committee who gave particular attention to the matter, and who sincerely desires to secure antistrike legislation during times of war, agreed that those provisions should go out. The Army, the Navy, the Maritime Commission, the War Labor Board, and the National Labor Relations Board agreed they should go out. Here we come now with a substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana. In the committee I was wondering whether he would support the bill and I asked him. He felt somewhat insulted because I did ask him. But this is not the first labor bill that we have drawn in the committee, and which certain members have served in drafting, which some have failed to identify as their child when it came to the floor. There has been some question of the paternity in the past. For that reason I was anxious to know how my friend would vote.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. You helped draft this child that is now on the floor.

Mr. KILDAY. You and I; yes, sir.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. And you helped me and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN].

Mr. KILDAY. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. And now you are standing here arguing against the two most important sections of a bill that you helped create.

Mr. KILDAY. I have not yet voted against any bill that I helped to draft and report. I have assisted in perfecting legislation as I am now doing. These two provisions were placed in the bill originally. I do not claim to know it all. I am willing to listen to men who have dealt with this subject. Hindsight is better than foresight. I ask you to realize that when you come to adopt sections 2 and 3 of the present bill or the provisions of this substitute, you are going backward. You are not outlawing strikes, but you are legalizing those that are called in a certain way. You are placing a club in the hands of every labor leader, to work within his organization during the 30-day period, in order to line up his men to vote for such a strike. Should this provision become law he could truthfully contend for the legality of a strike in a war plant called in accordance with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and for the purpose of propounding a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his request.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 30 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. KEEFE and Mr. HARNESS of Indiana objected.

Mr. MAY. I withdraw the request, Mr. Chairman, and I ask for recognition in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], did not advise me earlier with respect to this proposed amendment, and yet I have no criticism for his having offered it. He had a right to offer that amendment or any other amendment he wanted to offer to this bill. That is what the rules of the House provide. I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment for the reason that it strikes out all the provisions of the original committee bill relating to the National War Labor Board. I undertook to have included in this legislation a provision that would strengthen the arm of the War Labor Board so that they could deal with a single individual in this country who is sitting either in New York or the United States Capital City and dictating to 600,000 men as to when they shall quit work and when they shall commence work.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. MAY. Yes; I yield briefly.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Surely the gentleman would not argue that the bill before this House would have anything to do with the present dispute in the coal industry?

Mr. MAY. I take the position that in this time, although a strike has heretofore been called in the coal industry and called off, and another has been called and is under way, that it will apply to the strike that is under way now, and commenced before the legislation is enacted, because when it is once a strike it continues to be a strike, and it would continue to apply. The doctrine of ex post facto does not apply. The War Labor Board can, when this bill becomes law, subpena the presence of anyone.

The reason I oppose the gentleman's amendment is that it takes from the War Labor Board power to deal with the situation that now confronts us. The bill as reported by the House committee provides that when somebody is subpenaed or requested to come before the Board, that the Board may issue a subpena, and if it is disobeyed, they can apply to a district court of the United States for the purpose of an order enforcing obedience to it. That would reach Mr. John L. Lewis today if it were the law.

Let me now reply to some of the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Texas, who objects to sections 2 and 3 of the bill. So far as the committee bill is concerned, that is a good provision, because it is the only part of the legislation that actually has any teeth in it, yet there are a few members of the Committee on Military Affairs who, I think, would like to take some of the teeth out of the legislation. I am not one of those in this Congress or on the House Committee on Military Affairs who takes orders from either the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy—neither of whom appeared before the committee, but both of whom were invited—or from any other bureau head in Washington. I think legislators have a few functions of their own to perform, and I am standing here today in opposition to the amendment that will be offered by the gentlemen who passed these sections 2 and 3. If the Labor Relations Board can be restored to the amendment to be offered by the gentleman as a substitute, I will support the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana, and I do not think it will be necessary to go any further than to accept his own statements in order to find a basis for the opposition. He says it will not affect the coal strike.

We are faced today by creeping paralysis with reference to our war effort, due to the inactivity of the coal miners. It is not going to solve the problem to get up here and cuss John Lewis, and it will not solve the problem to pass the Harness substitute. In my judgment, it will not solve the problem to pass the committee amendment. If the Harness substitute is voted down, I expect to offer another substitute which in substance is the Connally bill as it passed the Senate with the deletion of section 3 to which such objection has been raised and with the addition in section 6 (b) of words which will tie up the War Labor Board activities with the stabilization program. I expect to add in section 4 (b) of the Connally bill, after the reference to the statutes ending with "October 2, 1942" the words: "And the regulations and orders issued under such acts." That will give this House the opportunity, in my judgment, to pass legislation which will be accepted by the United States Senate and will become law and will contain language which will deal with the coal strike and will enable this Government to say to the miners' union:

"You cannot pay strike benefits; you cannot pay unemployment compensation to these men as long as they are not working; you cannot aid, counsel, or guide this work stoppage."

Under section 4 (2), on page 4, of the Connally bill that is prohibited, and it is the only chance insofar as I can read these legislative proposals that are before us that offers the United States Government any opportunity to deal with the coal strike which, as I said, threatens paralysis to the war effort and a stoppage of supplies to our men on the battlefields throughout the world.

I am not willing, good friend of labor as I have been, to stand in the Well of this House and defend stoppage for a single minute in the war industries of this country, and I think we ought to pass something here that will reach the immediate problem instead of shadow-boxing about labor problems that have no connection with this vital work stoppage.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I am sorry; I have not the time.

We have a last chance, as I see it, to help solve this coal problem. We are not going to solve the coal strike by making labor unions register or hold strike ballots, because these men are not at work now; they have already gone out. The only thing that is offered in either bill, so far as I have been able to find, is on page 4, section 4 (2) of the Connally bill, where provision is made to stop strike benefits, unemployment compensation, and to stop the officers of the United Mine Workers from contributing, aiding, guiding, or counseling these workers who have gone out. That is action; you can get that through the Senate tomorrow; you can get it enacted into law and we can help put these miners back to work.

I hope this House will vote down the Harness amendment and adopt the substitute I am going to offer. Let us take some concrete action here. We have shadow-boxed about labor questions for years. One year we pass one thing and the Senate passes another; the two get tied up in conference or killed in committee; but today we have a chance for the first time to get the United States Senate on the dotted line on something they have already agreed to on a record vote. It will help stop this strike. It will help put these miners back to work. I think that is what we ought to do.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. As I understand it, the gentleman's proposal would be a remedy in the present crisis. The substitute amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] seeks to modify existing basic labor law. I prefer the course offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. PLOESER to the Harness substitute: Page 3, line 15, section 5, strike out the words "each member" and insert after the word "period" a semicolon and the words: "Provided, however, That it is not the intention of this section to require any State, sectional, or local reports of individual life-insurance benefit assessments."

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of offering this amendment is to clarify what I think to be a possible chance for misinterpretation of section 5.

I believe most sincerely in the basic principle of registration of labor unions and financial accounting on their part. Members of labor unions are entitled to know where and how their money is spent. It is the finest possible protection that can be afforded members of the labor unions, but it is quite possible that we are letting both the Government and the labor unions in for an enormous amount of bookkeeping which I assume was not intended by either the author of the substitute or the author of the original bill.

I hold in my hand here a monthly dues receipt from possibly one of the greatest labor unions of all times, the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, on which there are seven items. One is a tuberculosis fund, another is a fund for the payment of dues of members who have gone away to war and who cannot pay their dues, another is for accident and health payments, and another one for life insurance benefits, and others. With approximately 195,000 members in this one union, they would be required under this bill, if so interpreted by the administrator of the act, to make some one and one-half million monthly items of accounting in their reports on matters which are not of concern or of interest to the purpose of this legislation. Why should these labor unions be burdened with such voluminous extra bookkeeping? Why should the Government require such information? Such action on the part of this House would not only be abusive but would go far to mimic the myriads of foolish bureaucratic regulations today imposed on business. So the sole purpose of my amendment is to eliminate that unnecessary reporting and unnecessary accounting which benefits neither the labor unions, the Government, nor the public.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts to proceed for 10 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I realize and appreciate the fact that the Members of the House have different opinions in connection with the pending legislation, the substitutes and the amendments and other substitutes that will be offered. But there is one thing that I consider to be of paramount importance, and that is this is the time when the House should proceed with deliberative care and caution. If we legislate in anger we are going to repent at leisure.

We are legislating to meet the present situation and we should not, in my opinion, legislate to punish 100 percent for what less than one and one-half percent are doing. We must also realize that a great majority of those out on strike are unwilling strikers.

On the other hand a situation exists that is dangerous to the best interests of the country. That means labor as well as industry, agriculture, and every other economic group in America; that means that the present situation is dangerous for our men, young men and ladies of our armed forces. A continuance of this situation is dangerous for the institutions of government we possess and love.

On the other hand it is our duty, without regard to personal results, to meet this present situation so that a future recurrence will not take place. On that we should not forget ourselves or go too far legislating against all of labor when the vast majority are innocent.

In my opinion this is a time for reason and not emotionalism on our part. During the past year America has given to the world a production record that is unequalled. In turning over from peacetime to wartime economy and the vast production of weapons of war, we have accomplished what we first thought was not possible a year ago. I add I was one of those who did not think it was possible.

Let us give credit where credit is due for this great accomplishment. Congress is entitled to its share of the credit. We have promptly appropriated the money necessary and has given to the Commander in Chief and the executive branches, the power necessary to bring this about. But, that is not enough. Men and women in industry have given their ability and experience to the Government in this great accomplishment. Management has played its important part, but without labor playing its very important part in the teamwork necessary, this production record so necessary to win the war would not have been accomplished. In other words, at this time, we should not legislate to penalize 99 innocent to get at 1 guilty person. Once started, and in this case unnecessarily, no one knows where repressive legislation will end. So far as I am concerned I am opposed to repressive legislation against management as well as against labor until all reasonable means and efforts for voluntary cooperation have been exhausted. We are living in a democracy.

So far as the coal-mining situation is concerned, the time has arrived for action. That action should be confined to this situation. There is no justification to legislate against all labor to meet the present situation. We are not justified in permitting a stoppage of productive activities for war purposes.

Our boys on the far-flung fronts and our allies must be kept supplied with those things necessary to win this war. The amazing thing is that men would even think of striking when our manhood are dying that our country and what it stands for might live.

This is the time for Congress to legislate by action, not by reaction. Legislation by action means meeting the present situation itself. Legislation by reaction means condemning all of labor for what the strikers are doing.

Donald Nelson said yesterday:

Steel production will drop sharply late this week unless the flow of coal to steel plants is maintained and practical paralysis of the production program will follow and serious curtailment of coal supplies.

Wayne L. Morse, the public's member of the War Labor Board, said:

This strike has no parallel since Pearl Harbor insofar as a reckless and wanton disregard of the no-strike agreement is concerned.

He further said:

Viewed from the standpoint of its damage to the war effort and its serious threat to the maintenance of Government by law and order, this strike probably has no parallel in American history.

That comes from a man highly respected by all elements of organized labor.

American manhood, wearing the uniform, is performing its duty to our country. A free labor depends upon a free America. These men on strike owe a duty to our country, and that duty is to go back to work at once. Everything America stands for depends upon winning the war. The leaders of these men owe a duty in this crisis to our country. Every right we possess carries with it a responsibility to preserve that right. The right of citizenship carries with it the responsibility of preserving that citizenship.

We, as Americans and as Members of Congress, owe a duty to our country. That duty now is to act courageously, in a deliberative manner, to meet the present situation. It would be improper, unwise, and unstatesmanlike to convict all of honorable labor for the actions of those engaged in the present situation so dangerous to the best interests of our country.

That comes to the point that I am going to suggest. We have got to meet the coal strike. We do not want to inflame the minds of over 40,000,000 men and women who have been a part of this great productive program. Sixty thousand airplanes produced in a year; tanks and weapons of war and supplies that we thought was impossible.

The amendment as presented goes too far. It indicts all and convicts all and fails to consider the present threat, the present danger in the coal strike.

The committee bill goes too far.

The proposal made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], in my opinion, meets the present situation. If we pass that bill we will give to the President of the United States, not a Republican or a Democrat, but the Commander in Chief, the necessary powers implemented by what he has, to meet the present situation. I hope that this substitute will not be adopted, and the substitute that will be offered if he can do so, by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] will be adopted. That will be the constructive way for us to act in this body today, to meet the present crisis by meeting the situation as it applies to those who are guilty, by doing our duty as Americans and as Members of Congress, and not convict 99 honorable members of organized and unorganized labor in order to get at one member who is failing to do his duty to our country at this particular time.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the substitute that has been offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS]. This substitute, contrary to some of the suggestions and intimations that have been made, has been given a lot of study and a lot of careful consideration by a number of us. I think it deserves the very careful and sympathetic consideration of the members of the Committee.

The majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] made a splendid speech, as he always does. However, as for myself, I wish to suggest that I am not approaching this matter in any high emotionalism. I am not approaching it, and I do not believe the Members of the House generally are approaching it in any spirit of hysteria but rather in a spirit of cool and calm judgment and determination as to what properly should be done with this bill that is presently under consideration having regard to numerous facts now existing and which have existed for some time.

I spoke for the adoption of the rule yesterday. I said then that I thought that the House of Representatives was under compulsion to take up this bill and to consider and determine it. I said in my remarks that there are certain provisions of the bill that I do not deem necessary or desirable at this time. But I said there are other things in the bill that seemed to me to be desirable and necessary. My view of it is that this substitute just about represents what a majority of the membership would like to do. If the bill should come on for final vote as at present written, I know that many Members will have trouble choosing between the weight pro and con.

Some question has been raised as to certain provisions in the committee bill having to do with the War Labor Board. Personally, I have no objection to those provisions going back in so long particularly as they do not give rise to the abuses of injunctive action about which so much question has been raised and so long as certain other vigorously contested provisions which are not really essential could be left out.

The majority leader argues for another substitute that will be offered later by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]. While I am not altogether familiar with what is in that substitute, I do not believe it anywhere near approaches what the Members of the House want to do in connection with this legislation.

We may as well be practical about it. We have passed some bills here in the House before. They have gone to the other body and have not been acted upon. That may well be the cause of some of our present difficulties. I do not know what will finally come out of the conference action on these two disagreeing bills, but I hope that something of benefit to the country, and, yes, of benefit to labor itself will come out of the bill that will be passed here today or tomorrow.

The substitute strikes certain things out of the bill, so there is not much use talking about them, but what does it leave in the bill? It leaves in the bill that provision that has been called a 30-day cooling-off period. But primarily it simply means that before you can have a lock-out or a strike, notice must be given and then, before a strike may be had, a strike ballot of the men who are in the union shall be held to determine how many of them want to strike. What is the matter with that sort of a thing? Is is not true, that under the Railway Labor Act that is on the books today, strike ballots are held before strikes are called? It is a matter of representative, democratic action to give the man who is going to strike the right to say something about it. This provision does not undertake to outlaw the right to strike because after the ballot is had the minority can still strike if they want to.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The gentleman's statement a while ago to the effect that we ought to pass something that would in effect meet with the approval of the Senate does not mean, of course, that he wants the House of Representatives to delegate its authority to the Senate and pass just whatever they want?

Mr. HALLECK. No, of course, the gentleman knows I do not mean anything of the sort.

Mr. MAY. Certainly.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman has been in Congress much longer than I have. He undoubtedly recognizes the practicalities of some of these situations. It certainly is not any abdication, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from New Mexico.

Mr. FERNANDEZ. In the gentleman's substitute, subsections (b) and (c), as I understand, take away certain rights from the unions or officers of the unions. I do not understand who determines whether a violation has occurred. Can the gentleman advise me about that?

Mr. HALLECK. Part of the penalty for striking before the ballot is held is to withdraw certain of the protection or advantages or what else you might call them that are provided in certain Federal statutes. The National Labor Relations Act is one of those. I take it that if certain rights were sought to be enforced under that act, and the defense was made that a strike had been held in violation of this provision, such defense would be effective. I think it is evident that after a strike ballot is held, if it is disclosed that the strike is not supported by a majority, even though the minority should elect to strike, it probably would not be a very effective strike. And may I suggest that already a great many unions have that sort of procedure; in other words, they have recognized that it is a fair, representative, democratic procedure.

Something was said here by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], I believe, to the effect that some of the department heads opposed this provision. As I got their contention, it is that this will void the no-strike pledge and even, as he suggested, will legalize strikes. It does not do anything of the kind. It does not supplant the no-strike agreement; it simply supplements it. It does not run counter to it in any way. If no strikes are proposed, no votes need be taken. Certainly, I cannot see how the responsible leaders of labor who say that many of these current strikes are unauthorized could object to the enactment of this provision.

As to the matter of the registration and accounting of union affairs and union funds, the substitute took out some of the details contained in the committee bill. I do not believe any of the witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Military Affairs the other day objected to that. I understand Madam Perkins approves it. I do not know why anyone should object. What is wrong in saying to the man whose money is being paid in, "You have a right to know what is happening to your money."

It may be said to their credit that a great many of the unions in the country already have that sort of a provision and enforce it.

Then there is the prohibition against political contributions. That is no more than the prohibition against corporations and banks, and so forth. It is simply an amendment to the corrupt practices act. If a union member wants to contribute, he has the same privilege as any other individual. His money could not be used politically as he would not want it used.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. HALLECK. I am sorry, I would like to proceed. There are some who suggest that possibly some of our present difficulties may stem in part at least from some contributions that were made some years ago. I do not know whether anyone could say with any degree of definiteness as to that. In conclusion I just say this. I hope the substitute offered will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PLOESER] is merely a clarifying amendment, to which there is absolutely no objection. I hope the committee may vote on that amendment now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri to the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia to the amendment offered by Mr. HARNESS of Indiana:

After the title "Registration of Labor Unions" insert the following:

"NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

"SEC. 8. The National War Labor Board (hereinafter called the 'Board'), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes,' and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"(a) Whenever the United States Conciliation Service certifies that a labor dispute (excluding any matter coming within the purview of the Railway Labor Act) exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board such a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(b) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Board; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; the act of October 2, 1942, hereinbefore referred to; and the regulations and orders issued under such acts; and where no law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case. In no event shall the Board have power under this act, or otherwise, to require as a condition of employment that any individual become or remain a member of a labor organization.

"(c) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"POWER OF BOARD TO COMPEL ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

"SEC. 9. The National War Labor Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, which it deems relevant to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

"MAINTENANCE OF THE STATUS QUO

"SEC. 10. (a) After the Board has taken jurisdiction of a dispute as provided in section 8, the Chairman in order to effectuate the purposes of this act shall have power to issue an order (1) requiring any person to refrain or cease and desist from calling, or assisting in any manner, a strike arising out of such dispute; or (2) requiring the employer, who is involved in the dispute to refrain or cease and desist from practices which change the situation existing at the time the dispute arose, or which by changing an existing situation led to the dispute, and which the Chairman shall deem prejudicial to the prompt settlement of the dispute. No order of the Chairman or process of any court under this act shall require an individual employee to render labor or services without his consent, nor shall any provision of any such order or process be construed to make the refusal to work of an individual employee a violation of such order or process or otherwise an illegal act.

"(b) Such order shall be effective for such period as the Chairman shall determine, but shall, in any event, terminate within 5 days after the findings and recommendations of the Board or within 60 days after the date on which the order was issued, whichever first occurs. Any further order issued under subsection (a) in connection with the same dispute shall not extend beyond the termination date of the original order but terminate at the same time as such original order.

"REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD

"SEC. 11. The Board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind regulations providing appropriate procedures for carrying out the powers vested in it by this act.

"Whenever any such plant, mine, or other property has been or is hereafter so taken by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event more than 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

"INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS

"SEC. 13. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or other property is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slowdown, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or property, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or property by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, though I shall not object, because I am glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from Virginia. I am reserving the right to object because I do not want the gentleman to have his 10 minutes, and everybody else have 10 minutes, and then perhaps later have the chairman of the committee move to close debate.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. If I can get 5 minutes, I shall withdraw the request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Did the gentleman consider section 12 of the bill to be read as a part of his amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Only that part with respect to the property being returned to the owners as soon as practicable.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. That is the same as the provision in the substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Then I ask unanimous consent to strike that part from my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, legislation, after all, is a matter of give and take, a matter of compromise, particularly legislation of such controversial character as this. We do not all expect to get everything that we ask for, and somebody has to give up something. I think it is a fair consensus of this body to take the Harness bill as proposed and to put back in it the powers of the War Labor Board. The War Labor Board is something created by Executive order. It has no legal status. Personally I never favored it, I thought that Congress ought to exercise the function of setting it up. However, the fact remains that it is already set up, as a Board, and that Congress has appropriated money for it, and I do not think we ought to refuse to recognize it. So I have offered this amendment to put back in the Harness amendment the powers contained in the bill, with this exception, that I have cut out that feature of the Board which authorizes the Attorney General, notwithstanding the Norris-LaGuardia Act, to proceed by injunction to enforce the orders of the Board. In other words, we do not interfere in this section with or attempt to suspend the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Not at this point. In this concession you will notice that the Harness amendment strikes out certain sections of the bill as reported by the committee. It strikes out that section which prohibits violence and intimidation. I think it ought to be in there, but I do not expect to get everything I ask for, and so the violence and intimidation provisions go out; also the provisions against jurisdictional disputes, boycotts, and sympathy strikes. I think they ought to be in the law, but you cannot get everything that you ask for and they go out under this proposed amendment.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Will the gentleman just give me a moment or two to sum up for the benefit of those who have not heard the amendment? To sum it all up, you have the bill you are now considering minus section 4 on violation and intimidation, and minus section 5 on jurisdictional disputes and sympathy strikes, and minus the provision over toward the end of the bill which authorizes the Attorney General to proceed by injunction to enforce the orders of the Board, notwithstanding the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act. I think that is about right. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ELSTON of Ohio. Does not the gentleman's amendment also eliminate section 12, except the last paragraph which provides that the property shall be returned within 60 days?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes; it eliminates all of section 12. That part about the return of property is already in the Harness amendment.

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MAY. As I understand the gentleman's amendment it restores to the bill those sections of the committee bill that were omitted by the Harness substitute, relating to the War Labor Board, and at the same time giving them to power to subpena and compel the attendance of witnesses and the maintenance of the so-called status quo?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Well, I do not think I have any objection to that.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The gentleman, however, reinserts all of the language in the last sentence of the first paragraph of the committee bill on page 17?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The committee has reported an amendment striking out that language. That is the language that deals with the closed shop, collective bargaining, and so forth.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield to me for an explanation?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman give us an answer on my question?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I did not reinsert it. It is already in the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. There is a committee amendment striking out that language.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. The committee amendment does not strike out any language until the House acts on it.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Yes, it does.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. You cannot strike it out until the House acts on it.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I would like to say to the gentleman from Virginia, while I am not altogether in agreement with the amendment he has offered, I feel just as he does, that we want to get some place, and I would have no objection to the part of the amendment that the gentleman has offered, if it can be acceptable to the House. I think in view of the fact that the committee, by unanimous vote on day before yesterday, moved to strike out the last sentence in that section on page 17, that is, the last part of subsection (b)——

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Wait a minute. We traded horses before I got to the middle of the stream.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I would like to get straightened out in my mind just where the committee is at the present time. I would like to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLASON. If the so-called Harness amendment should be adopted as a substitute for the bill, either with or without the Smith amendment which has just been offered, is it still going to be possible for the chairman of the committee to bring up committee amendments which have been arrived at in committee and which have not at the present time been proposed?

The CHAIRMAN. If the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is adopted, then the further committee amendments to which the gentleman from Massachusetts refers would not be considered. The adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is a substitute for the pending committee bill.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Are we still on section 1 of the bill as far as committee amendments are concerned? In other words, was committee amendment No. 1, on page 8, agreed to?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky was agreed to, as a perfecting amendment to section 1 only of the bill.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMASON. Are further amendments to the Harness amendment still in order?

The CHAIRMAN. As soon as the pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to the substitute amendment is disposed of, yes.

Mr. THOMASON. As soon as the Smith amendment is disposed of, amendments will then be in order to the Harness amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

The gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, recently the majority leader came into the Well of the House and made a speech relative to the situation as he understands it on this bill. He indicated how he felt personally, and he said he planned to support an amendment which is to be offered as a substitute by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK], who is the whip of the majority party. It therefore would appear that the leadership of the majority party in this House has agreed upon the kind of a bill which they would like to see acted upon this afternoon. It seems to me that in all fairness to all of us, as we are considering the Harness amendment, the Smith amendment, the committee amendments, and the bill which has been offered by the committee, that this bill which apparently has the sponsorship of the administration perhaps, but at least of the two leaders whom I have mentioned in the Democratic Party, should be read to the House at this time in order that we may understand where we are. I would propound a further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman, whether or not it would be possible to have that read at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It may be read for information by unanimous consent.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

The CHAIRMAN. No request has been made at this time.

Mr. CLASON. Mr. Chairman, I would make the unanimous-consent request that the gentleman from Georgia at this time read for the benefit of the House the substitute which he intends to offer as an amendment, in order that all of us may have clearly before us the position of the leadership on the majority side of this House on this subject.

Mr. RANKIN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CLASON] is recognized.

Mr. CLASON. In my own time, then, if I am permitted to do so, I would ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] to be kind enough to read his substitute amendment.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLASON. I yield.

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is not necessary for me to read anything in order to explain to the membership of the committee what I expect to do.

I expect to offer the Connally bill with section 3 as it passed the Senate stricken out, and I expect to substitute for section 4 (b) of the Connally bill similar language in the House bill which is section 8 (b) of the House bill. That is all there is to it, but if anybody wants to find out what it is, all he has to do is take a copy of the bill and look at it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. That is already in the bill before us?

Mr. RAMSPECK. It is.

Mr. DEWEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. CLASON I yield.

Mr. DEWEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that section 3 of the Connally bill was stricken in his amendment?

Mr. RAMSPECK. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the Harness substitute and the Smith amendment to the substitute and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. FOGARTY and Mr. BROOKS objected.

Mr. McCORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in the great confusion that has been created by substitutes, amendments to substitutes, and other amendments that are to be offered as substitutes together with the bill that we have before us it is a very hard matter for a man to clarify in his own mind just what we are driving at; but of all things in the world that we are interested in, the prime purpose of our being here as Representatives of a sovereign people of a great nation, is to offer such protection to those people that we may go along in our effort to win the war, and the winning of the war is retarded by a condition that exists in this Nation at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise here only to emphasize the importance of sane, reasonable legislation in an effort to bring order out of chaos, to put our mines in operation again so that every other element of business necessarily dependent on them may be advanced with the least possible delay.

The Nation today awaits with feverish anxiety the outcome of a strike of a half million men which may determine the destiny of millions of men under arms. In advocating the passage of the bill under consideration, we cast no reflections on honest labor or the rights of men to organize in their trades or vocations, but we do insist that the power which one individual is exerting at this time is more power than a good man would want and a lot more power than a bad man should be privileged to exercise. Under the leadership of one whose selfish desire for power and wanton lack of consideration for the success of our arms, the war effort is being retarded.

We, as a nation, are demanding of the Axis Powers an unconditional surrender. Are we, then, to cringe on our knees in cowardly fashion before an unscrupulous dictator in this country and beg for a negotiated peace? Every day, every hour these mines remain closed means the lack of support those men on the battle fronts have a right to expect from us. Are we to permit the souls of those men in the uniform of the American soldier to be bartered for the selfish advancement of an unscrupulous, selfish leadership in our own country? Let us rededicate ourselves to a program of conduct under a government by law. Let us assert in our own country the ideals we are fighting for in other continents.

There is but one answer to the question that is in the minds of many people today as to whether or not any individual is bigger than the United States—that question must not go unanswered—and the answer to that question is to be made by the Seventy-eighth Congress. Let us measure up to the standards of patriotic Representatives of a people who look to us for an order of leadership that will bring a peace in all disturbed relations of the world.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, I have endeavored several times to show my liberality by asking to have additional general debate on this bill, but the pending amendment has been under debate now for about an hour and a quarter and I think we should agree to some limitation of time.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the Harness substitute and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SADOWSKI) there were—ayes 137, noes 53.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. THOMASON. Assuming that this entire hour shall be consumed in a discussion of the Harness amendment together with the Smith amendment, will there be any time left for discussion of other amendments now at the clerk's desk, because I have an amendment there to strike out sections 2 and 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to understand the gentleman. The gentleman speaks of an amendment to strike out sections 2 and 3 of the committee bill?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment pending that will strike out sections 2 and 3 in the committee bill, and they are also in the Harness amendment; therefore it would constitute an amendment to the Harness amendment, but if the entire time is to be consumed in discussion of the Harness amendment, will I be heard on my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will give the Chair his attention, the Chair will endeavor to analyze it. Is it the gentleman's intention to offer his amendment to strike out those sections of the pending Harness amendment?

Mr. THOMASON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the limitation applies. The motion was to limit debate on the Harness amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. How much time does that allow each one of us the Chair has listed?

The CHAIRMAN. About 2 minutes.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Some Members of the House have spoken five or six times on this amendment and on the bill. There are others of us who have not had 5 minutes. In the distribution of the remaining time, could not the time be given to those who have not spoken?

The CHAIRMAN. A limitation was fixed by the Committee. The Chair did not fix it. The Committee fixed it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. If the Smith amendment is adopted and if the Harness amendment is adopted, could amendments then be offered to the bill as so amended so that these amendments which might be offered to the pending substitute would then be offered to an amendment which has been adopted?

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is adopted with amendment or without amendment to it, no further amendments to the committee bill will be in order because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana is a substitute for the committee bill.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Could amendments to the substitute which had been adopted then be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. They could not. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] is recognized.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I have been waiting since 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon to speak against this bill. I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs for his generosity in not allowing those who have been opposed to this bill any time. He has refused to give the labor leaders of this country an opportunity to be heard on this measure, then he brings the bill into the House and with steamroller tactics, without allowing anybody in opposition yesterday afternoon or today to have any time, not even the distinguished gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], chairman of the Labor Committee, he then tries to shove this legislation down our throats. I state to him and his colleagues right now that I do not want the 2 minutes allotted me. I say, let them have it all if that is the way he wants to bring this legislation in here. If that is the way he and his committee want to legislate, if he wants to be all hog, let them take all the time, let all of the proponents have the time and when this amendment is acted on then give us a chance or an opportunity to express our own feelings upon this bill and to express the feelings of the laboring class of people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Chairman, the two issues before the House are very plain to me. First, I think it is all wrong to pass general regulatory legislation affecting all those men who have loyally stood by their jobs, even though War Labor Board decisions went against them, such as was the case with the aircraft workers of the west coast, and put them in exactly the same position as those who have violated the no-strike pledge. I think it will be a mistake which the House will regret if we pass such regulatory legislation under the kind of an emotional stress which every Member of the House is under today. The Harness amendment, plus the Smith amendment, is general labor legislation.

For one thing, it requires registration of labor unions, and the furnishing by them not only of financial reports, but of a great mass of additional information as well. For another thing, it has a provision in it that will invalidate 40 percent of all the agreements between management and labor arrived at under the War Labor Board.

There may be virtue in both registration of a reasonable sort and in some of the other provisions, but if they are to be enacted into law it should be done only after the mature and careful consideration, and not under circumstances such as surround this bill today. The second issue is the pressing immediate one. It is the issue between John L. Lewis and this Government. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], when he addressed the House this morning was right when he said that when a plant has the United States flag over it no man has the right to strike in that plant. Congress cannot, with justice, pass a law that would compel one man to work for another's profit, but when the Commander in Chief has been compelled to take over in the name of the Nation a mine or a plant, then any strike becomes a strike against the Government and Congress has the right and, I believe, the duty to declare such a strike unlawful. I say that as one who has supported labor with all his heart since I have been a Member of this body. The way for the House to meet the real issue before us is for the House to adopt the amendment that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] is going to propose, and to say that so far as this House is concerned, it takes the position that a strike is unlawful in a plant taken over by the Government, and that it proposes to uphold the hands of the President in this critical time. That amendment will do one other thing; namely, strengthen the hands of the War Labor Board and give it power to require parties to disputes to come before it. If we do that we will take a strong position and we will not be taking advantage of a grave crisis in the course of this war in order to pass general labor legislation in the manner in which this bill has come before us. If there is to be constructive labor legislation in the nature of a labor code, and I believe we ought to consider such legislation, it should be carefully and maturely devised, and it should be of such a character that we know for certain it will not retard the flow of production on which our war effort depends. Remember, too, the production achieved by American labor in the months since Pearl Harbor has been nothing short of a miracle.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. The vital issue in the present emergency is whether or not a strike against the Government, against the flag, against the welfare of our soldiers and everybody else in the country is to be legal or illegal.

Section 4 of the Senate bill made such a strike illegal. Section 13 of the House bill makes it illegal. The amendment to be offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] will make it illegal; that it should be illegal to strike against the Government is the view expressed by the majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] inserts that essential provision in the Harness substitute, which does not now carry that provision. With that included in the Harness substitute the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] says that, while it does not go as far as he would like to see it go, legislation is a matter of compromise and he would accept it. I am willing to follow his leadership on that, with assurance we would have a bill that would meet the present emergency. No bill that does not say that those who incite or induce a strike against the Government have committed a crime will meet the present emergency. The Smith amendment does not compel anyone to work and it is not retroactive. It is inconceivable to me that any Member of this House will go on record as saying that it shall be legal for anyone to lead, incite, or induce a strike against our Government that may paralyze our war effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON].

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I too have been trying since this bill was brought up in the House yesterday to get time to address the House. I went to the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee, who is now the presiding genius of labor legislation, and asked him if he would give me some time to discuss this bill and he refused to give me any time. I asked him if he thought it was quite fair to refuse the chairman of the Committee on Labor time to discuss a labor bill, which, of course, this is. He replied that he had no time. What he meant was he had no time to give anyone opposed to his authority. When I asked the Speaker of the House why this bill was sent to the Military Affairs Committee he said, "Well, it is amending the Selective Service and Training Act and properly belongs in that committee." I asked the members of this committee today, Do you think there is anything in the Smith bill we are considering that has anything at all to do with the Selective Service Act? This is a Smith perennial. There are just a few people in this House, and I am ashamed to say many are on my side of the House, who are attempting to use pretty dictatorial tactics. I believe the time has come to do something about such procedure. I think we ought to be ashamed of ourselves here today to be discussing a bill of this kind, when the workers throughout the whole country are doubling, more than doubling the war production that was anticipated. Are we helping to win the war by writing legislation that will place them in a strait jacket? What kind of justice is that? I want to say to the Members of this House that if we adopt this bill today we will commit a greater crime than John Lewis has been guilty of, and I hold no brief for what John Lewis has done nor do I contend that what he has done is proper, but is that any reason why we should strike back at labor because John Lewis happens to be doing a thing that we all disapprove of? Is it not true that the very provisions of this bill were before the House long before we got into war, and since that time machinery has been set up on a voluntary basis to handle strikes and, with one notable exception, has proved to be effective? Why confuse the issue? The only difference now is that they wrap the bill with the American flag.

Is there any man here who would dare to vote for such a bill? I say when the men and women of this country are giving everything they have, their heart and their soul, in the war effort, I dare you to pass this bill.

Industrial relations rest essentially upon concepts of equity and their successful application can be on no other basis than that of voluntary cooperation between employers and employees. All of the advancement which our country has made in bringing about understanding and workable relationships between employer and employee has been only through voluntary cooperation in adjusting inequities and wrongs. Nothing in peace or in war can or will be gained in either weakening or abandoning what has become both a formula and a fundamental concept.

While I am in favor of doing everything possible and necessary to speed the war effort, I am opposed to any legislation which would interfere with the program of the President, the Army, Navy, and the War Production Board. They are responsible for the conduct of the war.

I deeply regret that another attempt is being made to create trouble in the ranks of labor, when harmony is so important in the prosecution of the war program. This is not the time to divide our forces. The men on the assembly lines and in the factories and industrial plants of the Nation are just as necessary as are the soldiers defending our country in many parts of the world. It is the whole combination that will win this war and one cannot function without the other. Continual picking on the workers of the country is not going to increase output nor improve morale. It is human to make mistakes. We make plenty of mistakes. The workers of the country have made some mistakes and, no doubt, will continue to do so. The employers of labor have many mistakes to their credit but you seldom hear much about their mistakes in this Chamber. When we have failed to control the profits in war industries and the salaries of top-ranking officials, is it logical to say to the workers, "Your wages and your actions must be controlled." What does such injustice do to the average worker? It destroys his morale. It breaks his spirit. It takes his heart out of his work and no human being can do effective work when the spirit is weak.

There is nothing new about this bill nor is it before you today because of the war. The fight on labor unions did not start with the war. Oh, no. It is an old battle, and the war is now being used to confuse the issue and destroy hard-won labor legislation.

Section 2 of the bill prohibits strikes for a 30-day cooling-off period. Why is this necessary when organized labor has already and voluntarily given up the right to strike and the records prove that less than one-half of 1 percent of the workers have disregarded that sacred agreement.

Section 3 of the bill requires a majority vote to engage in a strike after the 30-day "cooling off" period. This provision definitely denies to minorities their rights. Because they disagree with the majority is certainly not a good reason to deny them their constitutional right to bargain collectively. I am not a lawyer, but this provision just does not seem to me to make sense.

Section 4 forbids force or violence in connection with a labor dispute in a war plant. This seems a ridiculous provision, since we now have laws controlling force and violence. The whole bill is wrong in principle and unnecessary.

It is unjust in application and is an insult to millions of American workers who are contributing every ounce of energy they possess to help win the war.

It is also an invasion of the rights of the more than a million organized American workers who are now serving in the armed forces. If you put labor in a strait jacket while these men are fighting and dying for the survival of freedom and democracy, what do you think they will do when they return, many with broken bodies? What answer will you give them when they ask why we permitted the favored war contractors to become rich on war contracts but refused to advance the wages of workers employed on these contracts. We might as well face this issue. Peaceful industrial relations cannot be maintained unless and until we play fair with the workers of America who are now supplying the implements to win this global war.

The penalties prescribed in this bill are so drastic they would completely disrupt voluntary collective-bargaining agreements in war plants, and if there happened to be an unauthorized outburst in a plant, they would be penalized by having the protection of the national labor relations law and the Norris-LaGuardia Act withdrawn from all the other members and local unions affiliated with the group guilty of the outburst. Is that what Congress wants to do to men and women responsible for war production that is the envy of the world? Would you pass a law to punish all for the sins of a small minority? All of the information I have been able to get goes to prove that production in practically every industry is far beyond schedule and has exceeded even the most optimistic expectations.

When the President called a conference shortly after Pearl Harbor, labor pledged complete cooperation.

The War Labor Board was set up to deal with industrial relations. While this Board may not have a perfect record, it has a very good record to its credit, particularly when we consider the great problems it must deal with. Then, of course, we have the Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission dealing directly with their own labor problems. This method of dealing with labor relations rests upon a voluntary agreement of employers and of labor leaders of organizations and their members. It has proved very effective. The record discloses that from the beginning of 1942 until the present trouble with John Lewis the number of man-days lost in strikes never exceeded six one-hundredths of 1 percent of man-days worked. I believe no other country can compare with this record of voluntary production.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Labor, the Maritime Commission, and the War Labor Board and the War Production Board are all opposed to this bill. They are responsible for war production. They are in a position to know the ramifications of this unnecessary bill. They do not want their extremely difficult task to be complicated at a time when good labor relations are the most important consideration in winning the war and bringing peace to the world. All of their administrative functions would be affected and confused if this bill becomes law.

From what I have heard from several industrial leaders who are cooperating wholeheartedly with their employees, they do not want this bill. Generally speaking, they are satisfied with prevailing conditions. They expressed the view that where there were good labor relations between labor and management, there has been very little trouble. They also expressed the fear that under section 12 of the bill, strikes could be engineered in such a way that the plant would be seized and the employees could bargain directly with the Government. They do not want this to happen. I deplore strikes at this time, but I am optimistic of the future. Human nature being what it is, we may expect a strike here and there, but they will not be serious. Blowing off steam once in a while will not hurt production too much, and it probably will relieve the feelings of some. It is an old American custom and will continue as long as America is a free country.

I have no fears about American workers. They always have and they will continue to be the backbone of our great country. Their patriotism is unquestioned. Their contribution to this war is not only one of sweat, labor, and sacrifice, but more than 1,000,000 of their membership is serving in the armed forces. They are asking for simple justice. If we fail them or through punitive restrictive legislation destroy their faith in government, the reaction might well be something far more difficult to deal with than a strike here and there. Remember, there are 12,000,000 organized workers in this country. Including their families, this group would average 36,000,000 people. Remember, we here in Congress represent that great patriotic group. They have voted to send us here to represent them. We cannot betray them in a fit of hysteria over John Lewis and his coal miners. They represent less than half a million men, and this bill affects more than 11,500,000 other loyal, faithful American workers.

Necessarily extreme and aggravated instances arise in which we are urged to throw aside tested and proven rules and revert to punitive legislation or the use of force. It would be one of the great mistakes of our generation to allow the vaunting ambition of one individual, or of a small number of willful individuals, to shake our faith in the structure of industrial equity that has been built over the span of a century.

I prayerfully hope the Committee will vote down this bill and permit the Army, Navy, Maritime Commission, and War Labor Board to handle the war production. Labor unquestionably has a great responsibility at this critical time. The members of the great labor organizations realize this responsibility. They are doing everything possible to promote the war effort. If once in a while we would praise their courage and devotion instead of constantly criticizing, the country would realize big dividends in improved morale and even a greater flow of everything it takes to win the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR].

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, all afternoon I have been seeking to get recognition to speak against these bills of confusion. I don't suppose that I can add anything to what has already been said but it seems clear that this is a private party going on here today between the members of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House. No one else need apply. This is happening in presumably the most representative and greatest deliberative body in the world. I doubt if these is a single person, man or woman, who has been permitted to get the floor this afternoon who was opposed to the passage of this mess of bills—first one kind of bill and then another kind and then amendments to each. I am now serving my seventh year. This is the worst I have seen yet. Maybe it is the weather. Probably we should get out of here. The country would be better off if we are going to pass legislation in this fashion. Who is asking for this bill or any of them. The Commander in Chief of our Army and Navy certainly is not. It is to him that every man, woman, and child looks in this country. The Congress makes the appropriations. He runs the war. Yet we are doing something today, or trying to, that every one of his subordinates has asked us not to do. As the fellow would say "what kind of business is this?" Is it a House of Representatives or is it a bunch of men who are seeking to pinion millions of men who are not only saving their lives but their children's children's lives in their production which is the highest in the history of the world. It is unfortunate that hysteria has taken possession here. I say again that maybe we had better go home.

Let us go further.

Mr. Chairman, I am unalterably opposed to this bill. To my mind it is the most unnecessary and most ill-advised piece of legislation to come before this House in the many years I have been a Member. Nor, am I alone in my opinion of this bill. When I say that this bill is unnecessary and ill-advised I am reflecting the sentiments of the heads of those departments most responsible for the successful prosecution of this war. May I mention just a few of them: James F. Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization, who, in a speech last Monday, and, no doubt, having this bill in mind, said:

> When you condemn the few who strike, do not forget that the great mass of the workers, and with rare exceptions, the leaders of organized labor, are doing as much as any of us, and more than many of us, to see that there is no interruption of war production.

He went on to say:

> Do not forget that during 1942 only one-twentieth of 1 per cent of the time of workers engaged in war work was lost on strikes. The striker in war industry is almost as rare as the slacker in the Army.

Now, mark you, Bill Green or Philip Murray did not say that—it was said by a one-time respected Senator and member of the highest court of justice in the land and a man who is now—next to the President—the man who is carrying the heaviest burden of this war upon his shoulders and doing a good job of it, too.

Then we have Donald Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board; Navy Secretary Frank Knox; Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor; Emory Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission; the Assistant Secretary of War, John McClay; the Chairman of the National Labor Relations Board, and the four public members of the War Labor Board—do you know that those public officials just mentioned look upon this bill as so unnecessary and so untimely and as likely, if enacted, to result so unfavorably on the morale of the American worker that they have signed a public document addressed to the Speaker of this House, our majority leader, and Chairman MAY, of the House Military Affairs Committee, in which they earnestly plead with this body not to enact this nefarious legislation.

They point out in this unusual communication that the bill, if enacted, would "interfere with the production and procurement of war materials by inciting industrial unrest" and would "impair existing machinery for orderly settlement of labor disputes." They go on to say that this is a very poor time to experiment with an untried substitute—that the present policy and program is not only working but working better than it was ever thought it would work.

This year we will double the size of our fleet—that accomplishment alone is without parallel in our history. Only a short time ago the one hundred thousandth airplane was manufactured just since the beginning of our war production program. I am sure you remember back just a short time ago when President Roosevelt said we would, in a short time, build 100,000 planes, and with what laughter Hitler, Goebbels, and Goering received that news.

To add to the praises of labor, just a short time ago, Admiral C. H. Woodward, Chief of the Incentive Division of the Navy, stated that American labor made possible the defeat of Rommel. He publicly stated that "but for the superhuman production of our workers, Rommel might, by now, not only be master of Egypt, but might already have effected a meeting with the Japs in India, and the United States might be advancing deeper and deeper into the shadows of defeat." He stated that " 'miracle' is the word for the kind of job that labor is doing in the common cause" and went on to state that it was his conviction that the American workers would see the job through at whatever cost."

James G. Patton, president of the Farmers' Union, has this to say on this question:

> Freemen have made the weapons that have freed North Africa and Tunisia. It is unthinkable that this freedom, our greatest strength in this war, is to be abridged.

The A. F. of L. and the C. I. O. both strongly oppose the bill. In a straight-from-the-shoulder statement they let it be known that the enactment of this bill into law would be "the surest way to hamstring America's war effort and destroy the morale of the Nation's soldiers of production."

Gentlemen, a quarter of a century ago, during the last war, I was back here in Washington and saw the prevailing hysteria of that day put through a bill which was to cost this country millions of dollars in useless enforcement and untold grief and suffering in its consequences before it was removed from the statutes. I refer to the National Prohibition Act. I am sorry to say in passing that there are those among us yet who would visit the same unhappy calamity upon us again. It seems that some never learn from experience.

There is little doubt but what the second coal strike is, as the saying goes, "the straw that broke the camel's back." Nobody deprecates this occurrence more than myself. That it will interfere with our war production no one doubts. My blood is on nearly every front. No one is more interested than I in winning this war as quickly as possible.

As a practicing attorney for many years it has been my experience that there are always three sides to a lawsuit. The jury, or judge, before whom the case is tried, who both parties litigant deeply criticize, always find another side. The three sides to all controversies are your side, my side, and the right side. Each one of these determined representatives of their respective interests have set their stakes. The stakes can only be brought together by some individual or some agency strong enough to do this. Each one has to give and take. Were I to have my say I would say give Ickes the power to bring these stakes together. The hatreds of two men should not be permitted to make goats out of our soldiers, the American people, and the public interest. This thing has gone far enough. The Government, if we are going to function as a Government, should place this matter in the hands of a man who has the intestinal stamina and the brains to do the job. I feel neither side has a monopoly upon the patriotism of this country. If they did have they would either sacrifice or concede. We know the man does not work quite so well with a gun pointed at him as the voluntary man who likes and respects his master. We know we will get more coal in a voluntary manner than we would by force. There is an old saying that we must never forget, "You can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink."

You ask me why not shackle free labor? I'll tell you why. I am against it and therefore against this bill by pointing to another system—that system of forced labor that prevails in Hitler's dominated Europe. Look at that system and compare it with our system of free and unforced labor. Over there we have half a continent striving to compete with us and they have failed miserably and by that failure have caused Hitler's once powerful juggernaut to be slowed down. The American worker has been able to out-produce his Nazi-dominated counterpart because the American worker is a free worker—the Nazi worker is a forced worker. These heads of these departments who have asked that this legislation not be passed—they know the answer to continued successful production, and it isn't by passing this bill.

Gentlemen, I have sat through a good number of votes and discussions on bills of this kind since I've been in Congress. I have sat and held my peace and voted as my conscience dictated, but the time has come when someone in this House has got to get up on the floor and call a spade a spade. This type of legislation is as vindictive as it is unnecessary, it is inspired by an incessant and mad desire on the part of a few who foolishly expect to profit at labor's expense and downfall. Those few are either so devoid of principle or so ignorant of history that they cannot see the natural consequences of the passage of an act of this kind.

Look at history. Who put Hitler in power? The German people? No! Not the German people but a tycoon named Fritz Thyssen and some more like him. Do you know what Hitler's part of the bargain was in that deal? Well his part of the bargain called for the trade-union movement of Germany to be wrecked. Hitler kept his word, the labor movement in Germany was wrecked. Its leaders were either jailed or shot. These industrialists who had engineered this didn't have long to rejoice however for Hitler soon turned on them and destroyed them. That, my friends, is the lesson we learn from the last attempt to shackle a free labor movement. It resulted in a world war.

In closing I know of no better thought to leave with you as to why this legislation should be defeated than the lesson we should take to heart for the cause of this last World War with the lesson that those who would destroy another are soon the victims of their own act. A little saying by Thomas Paine best brings home that thought. He said:

He who would make his own liberty secure must guard even his enemy from oppression, for if he violates this duty he establishes a precedent that will reach unto himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the confusion that exists among the members of the Committee on Military Affairs right now indicates what happens when a committee acts without knowing what it is doing. At the moment the condition is a bit ridiculous because the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs himself was forced to admit to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole a few minutes ago that he did not know what the parliamentary situation was with respect to the dozen or so amendments which have been proposed.

When we pass finally on this bill today, outside of those who sponsored the amendments which may be in the bill not a man in this House will know what he is voting on. We are going to enslave 13,000,000 American workers and their families, who constitute the greatest group, if not the majority, of the citizens of the United States, and we are going to do it without the voice of those who oppose this bill being heard, because the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has so little confidence in the justice of the cause he is advocating that he did not dare give time to those who oppose this bill.

When we pass on this no one will know what he is voting on, because no one knows what is in these various amendments. I hope the newspapers carry to the country tonight that we are going to pass on legislation of this kind without an opportunity for those who oppose it to be heard. Then they can judge whether those who advocate this really are sincere or whether they are simply and truly "union-busters."

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I wonder how many Members of this House know they are outlawing the closed shop by this legislation?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. There is not a Member on the floor right now who has any idea of what the Harness amendment stands for, what the amendment of Mr. Smith is, or any other amendment that has been discussed here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in these few moments I shall attempt to explain an amendment I have at the Clerk's desk and that I expect to offer later. It would strike out section 6 of the Harness substitute, which is the section having to do with campaign contributions. I shall offer the amendment in the hope of strenghtening the bill, and leaving it less vulnerable to attack. As I heard the reading of the section, it merely includes labor unions with national banks and corporations, which are now prohibited by the Corrupt Practices Act from making contributions in connection with Federal elections.

This identical provision has been before the Committee on the Judiciary and the subcommittee thereof of which I have been a member for some time, as a separate bill. We have rejected it for two reasons.

In the first place, it is discriminatory. It would prohibit labor unions from making any contributions in connection with political campaigns, while leaving other nonincorporated associations free to make unlimited contributions, except for other provisions of law. In other words, this section of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], applies only to labor unions and does not apply to the Townsendites, the Anti-Saloon League, the Manufacturers' Association, veterans' organizations, trade associations, and innumerable unincorporated associations which spend money in an effort to influence voters and control elections. That is reason number one.

Reason number two is that the Hatch Act which was passed in 1940, known as Hatch Act No. 2, has a general provision applying to all unincorporated groups, limiting their annual contributions for political purposes to $5,000. I think that is satisfactory as it stands. Any new legislation is not necessary. The Harness proposal would be discriminatory, it would weaken your bill, and it would leave it open to legitimate attack. The notorious $500,000 campaign gift by John L. Lewis made from funds exacted from the meager wages of hard-working miners in 1936 would be a crime under the present law.

For your information I quote the provision of the Hatch Act to which I have referred. It is in the Criminal Code, title 18, United States Code:

61M. FINANCIAL AID TO CANDIDATES

(A) CONTRIBUTIONS

(a) It is hereby declared to be a pernicious political activity, and it shall hereafter be unlawful, for any person, directly or indirectly, to make contributions in an aggregate amount in excess of $5,000, during any calendar year, or in connection with any campaign for nomination or election to or on behalf of any candidate for an elective Federal office (including the offices of President of the United States and Presidential and Vice Presidential electors), or to or on behalf of any committee or other organization engaged in furthering, advancing, or advocating the nomination or election of any candidate for any such office or the success of any national political party. This subsection shall not apply to contributions made to or by a State or local committee or other State or local organization.

(B) DEFINITIONS

(b) For the purposes of this section—

(1) The term "person" includes an individual, partnership, committee, association, corporation, and any other organization or group of persons.

(2) The term "contribution" includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution.

Violation of this section is punishable by a fine of $5,000 or by imprisonment for 5 years.

Its difficult to determine the line between free speech and pernicious political activities, but we need not attempt to decide that question now.

This bill is not exactly as I would have it. I am sorry it was not sent to the Judiciary Committee, which has considered other bills of this character and brought them before the House without serious internal dissension and in such form that you could clearly vote on the principal issues involved.

However, present conditions are intolerable. We must pass the best legislation we can agree upon to curb strikes in industries vital to this life or death struggle in which we are engaged. The arrogance and selfishness of one individual, or several, must not be permitted to jeopardize the success of our entire war effort and the lives of our boys.

I am going to vote for this bill. So would a vast majority of those good Americans demagogs would like to place into a distinct class known as labor.

I want to see secret and honest votes on strikes and annual elections of union officers, which should also be secret and honest. In other words, I want the workers to have the same right I have to give free expression to my opinion without intimidation. If this could be made effective, many of the present labor dictators would be looking for jobs. I think I know the American workingman and I have boundless faith in him. Present labor laws work for the protection of the dictators of labor. Democratize labor and there will be a different story.

I realize I have wandered from the point. I believe my proposed amendment will improve the bill and I hope it will be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER].

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I rise merely to quote a telegram I received from my district this morning. It reads:

We will not forget those who opposed the rule on the Smith-Connally bill Wednesday. We have two sons at Guadalcanal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FURLONG].

Mr. FURLONG. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this Connally-Smith-May bill, known on the calendar as S. 796, in its entirety.

It appears that for the past several years certain groups and individuals have tried to give labor the knockout blow, but not being able to accomplish this in peacetime, have chosen this critical war period in which they hope to slaughter labor.

Labor, to whom this Nation is so largely indebted for all it has been in the past, for all that it is today, and for all it may hope to be in the future.

Labor created wealth and capital. Capital and wealth could never have existed if labor had not first existed.

I believe this bill is so designed that if enacted it will agitate and demoralize labor and will destroy all the honest gains made by labor in the past 50 years that are beneficial to all. It will hamper the harmonious progress and achievements attained by labor and management. Labor should be rewarded, not punished, for its meritorious contributions to the war effort.

The Connally-Smith-May bill is a mistake. If labor is forced down, remember, industry will also go down.

If such legislation as this is ever enacted, it will create two distinct classes of people in America that was never intended by our ancestors—the slave and aristocracy. No nation can exist very long, one half slave and the other half aristocracy.

I hope the good Lord will show unto every Member of this Congress the way to decide this for the benefit of all humanity in the United States of America.

For—

To every man there openeth a way,
And the high soul takes the high way,
And the low soul climbs the low.
And in between on the misty flats
The rest drift to and fro.
But to every man there openeth a high way and a low,
And every man decideth the way his soul shall go.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to state that in my judgment, derived from many years of experience in industry, something like 40 years, this legislation will not do what you expect it to do. It will do harm. I am sure of that statement.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WEISS. I can say that I do not believe there is a better authority in this House to speak on the bill before the House, because the gentleman is a mine operator employing several hundred workmen, and he has five sons serving in Uncle Sam's forces, one in the African theater of war at the present time.

Mr. KELLEY. I can say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania that they also carry union cards, two of them in the United Mine Workers, two in the Steelworkers, and one in the American Federation of Labor.

I object very strongly to the steamroller method used, and especially the method proposed by some of the proponents of this measure. They have even challenged the patriotism of Members of this House who are opposed to this legislation. I for one object to that sort of thing. It is a shame that Members of this House of the Congress of the United States would have to stoop to that sort of thing in order to put over a measure. If they have to do that, certainly the measure is not worth very much.

Fortunately, no particular group has a monopoly upon patriotism.

The charge has been made that those who are opposed to this method are opposing the Government of the United States. The question has even been raised that it must be a choice between the Government and labor. This is not true. It is a question of protecting the rights of the people as provided under the Constitution or invading those rights.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished majority leader urged in his speech just a few moments ago that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], as amended by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], would constitute an indictment against all of labor and all laboring people in this country; but he went a little further and narrowed his argument and put it upon the basis that what we need is a special indictment of the United Mine Workers of the United States, who are now not working.

I take the view that this body is not undertaking to pass a special law applicable to any particular group. The law we propose is general in its terms, and applies to all. And this is as it should be. We are not here to make fish out of one and fowl out of another. The law plays no favorites. It was so thoroughly recognized after we got into this war that it was an all-out war, which was to be fought on the farms and in the mines, and in our transportation systems, and in all industrial plants and on the battlefields, that it was so fateful in its consequences, the leaders of all organized labor pledged there would be no strikes during the war. Well, there are 130,000,000 people in this country, and they are different each and all one from another just as we Members differ. A very distinguished Member of this body this afternoon said that if he were President he would seize the mines and then shoot the miners. That will not solve the matter. Dead miners could not mine coal. The truth is the miners have boys, brothers, and others near and dear to them by the thousands in this conflict. And I believe this difference can and will be settled on a basis that is fair to all concerned. But settled it must be before our war effort collapses.

This Harness amendment provides machinery for a vote by the men themselves on the question of whether there shall be a strike. It outlaws lock-outs in war industry. It provides reasonable penalties against those who violate its terms. Supplemented by the other amendments that will be offered, it sets up machinery for the adjustment of labor disputes and for a continuation of work, rather than destructive industrial warfare, strikes, and paralysis of production.

There are no strikes in Germany or in Japan. They mean to defeat and enslave our people. Today there are millions of French, Russian, Dutch, Belgians, Poles, and other conquered races toiling in Germany and in the occupied countries of Europe under the lash and at the point of German bayonets. This would be the fate of the working people of this country should we lose this war. Membership in a union and the rights guaranteed our working people under the laws of this Nation would be of no avail and would be but scraps of paper if the Germans and the Japs ever set foot, as conquerors, on the soil of this country.

We are on trial as a free government of freemen and freewomen. Our enemies have said we cannot wage war successfully because our people are free and will not make the sacrifices necessary to win. So far, we have given this statement the lie. The American people—more than 98 percent of them—have been on the job since Pearl Harbor. Our boys face hardship, heat, cold, suffering, and death from the icy snow-covered slopes of the Aleutians to the desert sands of North Africa and the pestilential swamps of the south Pacific. On the sea, in the air, and on the battlefield, their courage, the sacrifice they have made, the victories they have won, their challenging heroism, should shame anyone who fails them in this tragic hour.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the Governor of North Carolina said to the Governor of South Carolina, but the Governor of North Carolina, who is a Member of this House, certainly said plenty to us this afternoon. I respect him highly. I think he has gone through a lot of experience. He is one of the oldest Members of the House, and has has had grave responsibility in the past as the Governor of a great State. This bill, this spectacle, this trying to write a bill on the floor of the House as we are trying to do this afternoon is a sorry spectacle, and in the words of the cartoonist, it would be more amusing, if it was not so confusing. I am a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I am proud of our chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], and I am proud of the membership of that committee. I am proud of the way our committee handles legislation, and with all of the legislation that we have brought out on the floor of the House, we have never brought out a piece of legislation in the shape of this and asked the Members of this House to vote upon it. It is not the way to legislate, it is not the way to handle important legislation, and certainly I say to you this afternoon the Military Affairs Committee cannot be proud of its work. Here we have the Military Affairs Committee which is supposed to cooperate with the War Department and with the Navy Department, and it comes in here this afternoon with legislation that the War and Navy Departments condemn and which they say is not properly drawn, and is not proper legislation at this time.

Certainly every Member of this House is out to win this war, every one, Republican and Democrat, and certainly we are going to take the advice of the War and the Navy Departments.

Oh, I have so many things that I wanted to say to you this afternoon. I have brought a pile of information here to give to you, and I have 2 minutes in which to do it. I represent a district in the great city of Detroit. I have many things to speak about in respect to labor conditions and production in Detroit. Do you know that the tank plant is only working 25 percent of capacity because we have over produced? Don't let them kid you that this bill will bring about production. Detroit is far ahead of production, so far ahead, that if you look into the yards you will see the tanks and the jeeps piled up so high that we cannot get them out to the boys.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, it seems strange that in both the Seventy-seventh and the Seventy-eighth Congress the numerous Members of Congress who charge labor with being unfaithful and lacking in patriotism and loyalty in this national emergency are somehow or other the very same ones. These Members invariably come from poll-tax States and represent districts in which smokestacks are practically unknown, yet they profess to thoroughly understand the problems of labor. These Members condemn all of American labor because of an occasional strike. Would they by the same token condemn generally the law profession because of a shyster or two? Would they by the same token condemn the medical profession because of an occasional quack here and there? No; of course not.

From the very beginning, let us distinctly bear in mind the fact that we cannot legislate cooperation and production records among the workmen of America. Let us remember the old adage, "We can take a horse to water but we can't make him drink." The Connally-Smith bill, S. 796, proposes to do just that. This measure is one of the most repressive and restrictive measures ever introduced in the Seventy-seventh or Seventy-eighth Congress. In this crucial period, the enactment of a bill such as S. 796 would be a disastrous error which would play into the hands of our enemies, both at home and abroad. While we did not win an overwhelming victory in the recent African theater, the Germans and Italians suffered a humiliating defeat. It was the first serious step backward for "Corporal" Hitler. As our Nation prepares for the final attack on the Continent of Europe, it faces, theoretically, the most crucial period in its entire existence. It is particularly tragic that at a time like this groups and individuals—and this particularly includes the gentleman from Kentucky, Congressman MAY, and the gentleman from Virginia, Congressman SMITH—would be so reckless of our national welfare so as to attempt to take advantage of our present war crisis to achieve their ends.

As the former Governor of New York, Al Smith, said, "Let's look at the record." For instance, let us take the Thirtieth Congressional District, which I represent and which is the heart of the arsenal of democracy. The Allegheny Ludlum Steel Co., Firth-Sterling Steel Co., Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Co., Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co., in Homestead, McKeesport National Tube Co., and the Christy Park Works of the National Tube Co., and the Fort Pitt Steel Casting Co., are all located in my district. Each one has been awarded the Army-Navy E, except the Fort Pitt Steel Casting Co., which has been awarded the Maritime M for cooperation between employer and employee, for efficiency in production, for perfection in production, and for speedy contract compliance in production. My district, together with other industrial districts in the Nation, has been responsible for producing the steel which has now made our Navy the greatest two-ocean navy in the world. We have produced the steel and aluminum for over 100,000 airplanes; we have produced the steel and shells which have made our production in America greater than the entire production of the Axis combined; and our production is increasing by leaps and bounds every day. Do not forget that during 1942 only one-twentieth of 1 percent of the time of workers engaged in war work was lost in strikes. The Honorable James F. Byrnes, Director of War Mobilization, gave us this information on May 31, 1943, which is verified by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. All this record has been accomplished in view of the barrage of propaganda to the contrary. The simple fact attested by all our war-production agencies is that the no-strike pledge of Philip Murray of the C. I. O., and William Green of the A. F. of L. has been fulfilled not merely to a miraculous extent but to an extent which no penal sanction could have been made possible. Industrial leaders of the Nation all oppose S. 796. Secretary of the Navy Knox, Secretary of War Stimson, Hon. Robert P. Patterson, Under Secretary of War, Admiral Land, Chairman of the Maritime Commission, and Donald M. Nelson, Chairman of the War Production Board, all believe labor—yes, free labor—has done a superhuman task of producing foodstuffs and implements of war which are now being furnished to greater than half the world. Yes, that record of production has been achieved in the face of great difficulties—difficulties in the form of reckless provocations and annoyances inflicted by some management at all levels—management conscious of the grim determination of American workers not to leave their jobs in protest. That record has also been achieved in the face of the terrific pinch to which American workers have been subjected with constantly spiraling food costs while wage levels were being substantially frozen by Presidential decree and War Labor Board directive.

It is an unfortunate fact that in recent months the sharp pressure on the food budgets of American workers has approached critical proportions. O. P. A. has virtually admitted, on the one hand, that price ceilings have not been fixed at levels calculated to prevent substantial food price increases, and on the other hand, that enforcement has in some areas been so ineffective that prices have actually prevailed at levels as much as 40 and 45 percent above ceiling prices.

In these circumstances, nevertheless, both the C. I. O. and the A. F. L. held firm to their no-strike pledge. More important, the C. I. O. and the A. F. L. have pointed to their membership the direction of sound solution to these problems—the direction of a national demand and insistence on a real rollback of prices to levels which will enable war workers to maintain their health and continue to function effectively at their war work.

To this Congress and the administration must fall the full responsibility for failure to enact a program to stabilize the cost of living. If this Congress which is so critical of labor had enacted legislation to have frozen prices just as wages were frozen under the Little Steel formula, today there would be no complaint and no strikes for higher wages by the miners.

This country has been going through certain definite stages of education about economic matters. It has learned by now that it does not want inflation. It has learned that if food prices rise, wages are bound to rise. It has learned that if food prices and wages both rise, they start in pursuit of each other and that this chase goes up the spiral of inflation. Inflation defeats both the rise in food prices and the rise in wages, and the struggle at this time between one section of the community to benefit at the expense of another section threatens to bring down the community and all its section. This country knows this. It is against inflation, but if prices and wages are to be held in leash and under control, and to avoid strikes in the future, they must both be controlled. Had this Congress enacted legislation to control prices there would be no necessity for the consideration of the Connally-Smith bill, S. 796.

The real answer of Congress and of the Nation to John L. Lewis should be the answer of the roll-back of prices, the more effective enforcement of price control, the adjustment of the miners' real grievances. Unfortunately, some groups in Congress have chosen the kind of tactics and program which are calculated to play right into the hands of John L. Lewis by aiming direct and provocative blows, not merely at the millions of organized American workers, but at all American working men and women and at the entire population of the Nation. These are the groups which have chosen to attack and interfere with and impede price control and rent control. These are the groups which have conducted hearings such as those of the Smith Subcommittee on Rent Control, calculated to bring pressure on behalf of landlords and their associations to prevent a real control of rents. By the same token, the groups supporting the Connally-Smith bill are supporting a step which stigmatizes and attacks the more than 11,000,000 C. I. O. and A. F. L. workers who have given and maintained and will maintain their no-strike pledge.

As a matter of fact the actual contents of the Smith version of the Connally bill reveal that the bill cannot even really make the pretense of being a war measure. In 1941, while this country was not at war, Mr. Smith proposed these same provisions. He proposed then, as the bill now proposes, that there be a requirement of certain kinds of notice and certain other requirements before a strike could be called. He proposed these measures then as a permanent and unlimited statute. He proposed it then in a frank attack on basic labor rights. The insertion of a provision limiting the continuance of the bill to the duration of the war cannot camouflage the fact that this is still the original bill.

The C. I. O. and A. F. L. in their no-strike pledge have made no qualifications with respect to any question of advance notice, of any question of appropriate procedures for calling a strike. The C. I. O. and the A. F. L. have declared emphatically that they will countenance no strikes. Under these circumstances the reintroduction of the original Smith bill with its provisions for advance notice and secret ballots and other technicalities related to strikes is not merely meaningless but is obviously a barefaced attempt to use present circumstances as a basis for carrying through a private labor policy which its sponsors were unable to carry into law in time of peace—a labor policy which has no relationship to and makes no contribution to the solution of present-day problems, while at the same time initiating a provocative attack on basic rights of millions of organized working men and women who, through their organizations and as individuals, have been contributing so much to the miraculous production record of this Nation.

We have a long, hard road ahead in this war. The hardest fight is yet to come. We have not as yet a firm foothold anywhere on the continent of Europe, and we know that we cannot live in a world half free and have enslaved. There must be unconditional surrender by the enemy. Let us quit fighting each other at a time when we are doing the greatest job of production in the history of mankind. Let us mobilize all our resources and conserve the energy we waste on the floor of this House and instead of fighting each other, let us combine our efforts and fight the one common enemy who would take away all our basic rights and freedoms, yes from the Congress as well as labor. Let us take the first step in that direction by sending S. 796, the so-called Connally-Smith bill, back to Committee where it may repose in peace.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LAFOLLETTE] is recognized.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Mr. Chairman, I wish that either the advocates or the opponents of this legislation would quit adopting threatening postures either here or in the papers. My Hugenot ancestors came to this country because they were not afraid to declare their right to worship God. My Bavarian German ancestors came here because they were not going to let Bismarck run them. Nobody is going to run me one way or the other. It does not do any good to come here and threaten me. I want to say this, that the Smith amendments put back in a provision which outlaws the closed shop, outlaws the maintenance of union provisions which I think are necessary for labor's protection during this war. They also put back section 13, under which I am convinced that a banker cannot lend money to a coal miner on strike, or anybody else, in order to feed his family, notwithstanding the fact that he has had substantial credit all his life. I, as a lawyer, could not advise a man as to whether the action of the War Labor Board was constitutional or within its powers. Such provisions as are found in this Smith legislation are utterly ridiculous, utterly unwarranted and will absolutely not contribute a thing to the progress of this war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret the necessity of opposing the amendatory language suggested by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. Let us be a little realistic now. The Smith amendment includes language to outlaw the maintenance of membership in a union. The War Labor Board was created in January 1941. It has been in operation for nearly 15 months. It has closed a great many disputes by providing for maintenance of membership, which means only that those who are employed in a plant must join a bargaining unit within 15 days after that order, or they must find employment elsewhere. I do not now pass on the merits of membership maintenance. What I am trying to represent to you is that if you have from 700 to 1,000 different organizations where industrial peace has been restored by maintenance of the membership clause, and now you come and outlaw the whole business, you may be dealing with one strike, but you are probably going to inherit several hundred others. Let us make no mistake by cluttering up the Harness amendment with this sort of thing. In the main, the Smith proposal confers statutory power upon the Labor Board. The Board has power now under an Executive order that is provided by the Smith amendment. One of the real difficulties in the present controversy is that perhaps Mr. Lewis would not go before the Board because notice was served that there should be no departure from the Little Steel formula, as a result of which the Board could no longer operate as a genuinely judicial agency. Now, are you going to aggravate this whole matter by saying that all these membership-maintenance agreements that have been made by the Labor Board, or with Board sanction, now go out the window, and we go from the frying pan into the fire?

I propose to oppose the inclusion of all War Labor Board provisions in this bill, because they are not necessary and because they will aggravate the situation with which we are dealing at the present time.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. VORYS of Ohio. Could the gentleman offer an amendment to that particular language in the Smith amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. You could strike out that portion of section 9 or 10 on page 17, and cure it. But why was it offered in the first place? To confuse the issue and raise another difficulty?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It was in the original May bill, the bill that the Military Affairs Committee brought out, and then when I opposed it before the Rules Committee the committee met and has offered an amendment to strike out that language, and then the gentleman from Virginia returned it in his amendment. I wonder where it stands in the Harness amendment?

Mr. DIRKSEN. It is not in the Harness amendment. I can assure the House on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COLMER. If you will turn to page 5246 of yesterday's RECORD you will see an amendment which I propose to offer, which I think you will agree with me should be written into this bill. This is a very practical matter. I do not think it should be a controversial matter. This amendment simply provides that it shall be a felony to conspire to bring about a strike in a war plant that has been taken over by the Government. In other words, it makes it a felony to conspire to strike against the Government.

Now, if there is any Member of Congress who thinks that a man has a right to strike against his Government or to conspire to strike against his Government when the Government is operating that plant, then of course he should vote against this amendment which will be offered at the appropriate time and which I will not have another opportunity to discuss. I cannot see for the life of me how there could be any difference of opinion about that. Is there anybody who has been elected to this Congress who thinks that a man ought to have the right to conspire to strike against a Government-operated plant? If you do, then vote against the amendment; but those of you who think to the contrary I hope you will vote for the amendment.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLMER. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Does the gentleman remember a Government Stamp Act in the Boston Tea Party?

Mr. COLMER. I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Does the gentleman remember a Government Stamp Act in the Boston Tea Party which was one of the causes of the Revolution?

Mr. COLMER. Do I understand from that that the gentleman thinks that a man has got a right, as John Lewis is doing today, to strike against his Government? Does the gentleman approve of John Lewis' stand today?

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. COLMER. I am asking the gentleman a question.

Mr. BALDWIN of New York. I do not approve of it, but I think that legislation such as the gentleman proposes can go a great deal further than he himself dreams of.

Mr. COLMER. Of course, that is a matter of opinion. I think the gentleman will agree with me that no legislation could be written to which labor was opposed that the gentleman would agree to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] is recognized.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I venture the assertion that there are not three people on the floor of the House who know all the things that are in these various amendments. It has just developed here in the last few minutes that in the so-called Smith amendment to the Harness amendment is the outlawing of the closed shop which several of us, including myself, voted in the committee to strike out and that was done. Now that is back in. The same is true of other features of the Harness amendment. I have an amendment pending to strike out sections 2 and 3; so the confusion here this afternoon and also the temper that has been shown by some makes it seem to me that the most reasonable and sensible thing this committee could do would be to vote down the Smith amendment; then vote down the Harness amendment and give serious consideration to the Ramspeck amendment. The reason I say that is because the Smith and Harness amendments do injustice to the honest, patriotic, law-abiding working people of America by the passage of such legislation as that contained in either the Harness or the Smith amendment; but I go back to my proposition that the main, the important thing we need to legislate about now is the fact that a man, the leader of a group of men, has struck against his Government and struck against our flag which flies over those mines. The President will treat those men fairly if they will be loyal to their Government. The thing we need to do is to pass legislation that outlaws conduct such as that and then leave these other matters for calmer days. That is the only safe way in my judgment we can proceed at this time. So I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT] to strike out that part of the Smith amendment to which the gentleman from Illinois has referred, and likewise my amendment to strike out sections 2 and 3 which the War Department, the Navy Department, the Maritime Commission, and every other war agency says is impractical, that these amendments will be agreed to and these sections stricken from the bill. Then we should adopt something like the Ramspeck amendment, for that will take care of this situation of a group of people striking against their Government. Such conduct is indefensible in wartime.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMASON. I yield.

Mr. COOLEY. In view of the confusion that exists, does not the gentleman believe it would be wise for the Committee to rise at the present time to give the Members an opportunity to consider the proposed amendments?

Mr. THOMASON. That is a matter for the Committee to determine for itself; but I do hope and plead and beg that you give serious study before you vote for either the Smith or Harness amendments in their present form and that this legislation be confined to the serious question that now confronts the people of America—that men are striking in Government-controlled and operated plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think we were given great food for thought in the remarks of the gentleman from Texas who has just spoken and likewise the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], a few moments ago. They have told us the great trouble with the particular substitute that is brought before us. We do not have the opportunity of knowing all of the implications. I think the issue was being pretty fairly presented to the House prior to the introduction of the proposed substitute. As I stated to you yesterday, the Committee on Military Affairs was proposing amendments to the bill it had reported out to take care of every single objection made by the various war agencies which appeared before us with the exception of the striking out of sections 2 and 3, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON] has at the desk an amendment seeking to strike those two sections out of the bill.

It seems to me that the proper procedure for us here is to vote down the Harness substitute. Then we shall have an opportunity to perfect the committee version of the bill with the amendments that will be offered. I feel confident that the Committee of the Whole will strike out sections 2 and 3 and then we shall have met every single objection that the Government agencies made. Then also those who prefer the Ramspeck substitute will have an opportunity to vote for it. The issue will be clearly drawn between the Connally bill as it came from the Senate with such amendments as the gentlemen from Georgia proposes to offer, and the committee bill as perfected in this Committee of the Whole. It will be something that every Member on this floor will understand, whereas the present hodgepodge measure we have before us is something that is almost impossible to understand unless one has availed himself of the opportunity of studying the single copy of the amendment that is available at the Clerk's desk.

In this connection may I say that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT] has an amendment pending at the desk to strike from the Smith amendment the language to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] objected. The objection that the gentleman from Illinois stated here was made to us by the various war agencies when they appeared before the committee yesterday and the day before, and it was upon the recommendation of those agencies that the committee voted to strike out that particular sentence, yet now it is sought to be restored to the Harness substitute by the Smith amendment. The Merritt amendment seeks to strike it out of the Smith amendment. I think it would be well for all of us to remember that particular situation.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mrs. NORTON. May I ask whether or not it is the intention of the committee to strike out section 12?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes; the committee amendment proposes to strike out section 12.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Does not the gentleman believe this whole thing should be recommitted to the committee?

Mr. SPARKMAN. No; I do not. I think the situation is such that we have got to have legislation to correct it but at the same time it must not be in such form that will justify anyone in saying that we are seeking to enslave labor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I join in the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] should be voted down in order that we may get back to a consideration of the bill.

The bill reported by the committee and the Connally bill, as it passed the Senate, are the only two proposals which have had committee consideration. We are all in a position to discuss them intelligently. However, my purpose in taking this time is to discuss very briefly an amendment which I have at the Clerk's desk to the Harness substitute in case that substitute should be adopted.

My amendment would strike from the Harness bill the provisions which require the registration of labor unions and the making of financial reports by them. I will support the committee bill. The provisions for registration and reports do not touch war strikes, top, side, nor bottom. There is no reason why a bill which seeks to control strikes in war plants should go into collateral issues. I find my language is inadequate to express my feelings against those who insist on strikes in war plants, but I say to you my condemnation is slightly less bitter against those who would seek to take advantage of war hysteria and wartime to repeal any established law affecting organized labor, or to take advantage of it in order to put over a controversial issue. I hope all of those matters will go out of any legislation we adopt here and that it will be solely and exclusively a bill to prevent war strikes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me there is a type of intellect which thinks it can correct all abuses in the country by passing laws and the more serious and the more critical the situation which confronts us, the more drastic and restrictive the legislation which it proposes. If it were not for this coal strike which we face today I would take the position, I believe, that we do not need any labor legislation at all.

In my opinion, labor has cooperated remarkably well. The figures are somewhere around 98 or 99 percent efficiency in man-hours worked in producing war material in this country, and I a mquite sure if it had not been for this cooperation of labor and labor leaders we would not have the splendid production record that we have had. I am also quite sure that the same number of men who were working as free laborers in American plants produced more than a comparable number of men in Nazi Germany, Italy, or Japan. But we have this coal strike confronting us. We are confronted with a paralysis of government.

Mr. Chairman, I urge the House to pass legislation which will be designed to apply to a strike only when it constitutes a crisis to the country, when it paralyzes an entire industry, and not try to go after these little flash strikes or these spontaneous walkouts which last possibly for an hour or for a day and which responsible labor leaders try their best to avert in the first instance, and if they do occur, try to get the men to go back to work.

Mrs. NORTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WRIGHT. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Is it not a fact that less than one-half of 1 percent of the workers in the country have been on strike since the beginning of the war?

Mr. WRIGHT. I believe those figures are correct. I also believe it is true that a smaller percentage than that of man-hours have been lost in this country since Pearl Harbor by means of strikes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK].

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Chairman, I would not again discuss this question except I desire to emphasize that under the parliamentary situation if the Harness substitute, whether amended by the Smith amendment or not, should be adopted, then the consideration of this bill in the Committee of the Whole will be over. It will not be possible for me to offer the substitute which I discussed earlier in the day.

I want to emphasize once more, and I do not believe anybody here will dispute this assertion, that if this House wants to get legislation promptly, there is only one way I think we can get it and that is to pass the Connally bill. Without entering into a discussion of what is in the committee bill or the Harness substitute, and without discussing the merits of the contents of those two bills, may I say there is not much difference between them now. I believe that the United States Senate would not act promptly on that bill. We have every reason to think they would not because a year and a half ago a similar bill was sent there and it has never been considered. Therefore, I urge upon the House to meet the issue of the coal mine strike in the only way we can do it and that is by passing the Connally bill implementing the power of the administration to deal with it.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAMSPECK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. Can the gentleman inform the House, Does the President of the United States want enactment of the Connally bill?

Mr. RAMSPECK. The gentleman knows I cannot speak for the President of the United States. I have not seen him since the night the sophomores were entertained down there.

Mr. LAFOLLETTE. The gentleman is the Democratic whip.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Yes, but I am not speaking for the President of the United States. I am speaking for myself and giving the Members of this committee the benefit of my 14 years' experience here for whatever it may be worth. I am not quarreling with anybody, I am not mad with anybody, but I think the way to help put the miners back to work is to adopt the Connally bill. If we want prompt legislative action, it is my opinion that passage of the Connally bill offers our best hope.

It does not meet the wishes of everyone, but it will help settle the coal strike. That is what we should try to do without delay.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Chairman, I heard a story in a recent campaign in Oklahoma, something like this:

> Shame on you, you fooled me once. Shame on me, you fooled me twice.

I want to ask you how many times you have been fooled by the labor leaders? How many times have they brought out the bull whip and cracked it over your heals and told you to take what they wanted to give you or they were going to elect someone else to Congress if you failed to do their bidding?

I elect to accept the challenge wholeheartedly against William Green when he made his threat to go all-out to defeat any Member of Congress that would vote for this bill in its present form. I know many members of labor unions who do not concur with the high-handed methods of their leaders, and were it not for the coercive powers used in kicking them out of the union in connection with the carrying out of these forced strikes, my opinion is that the situation would be much different and in many cases to the contrary.

We have got a war to win; we have about a week's supply of coal.

The day of reckoning is here. Shall we fail our soldiers and sailors and marines and air corps in the midst of the greatest battles in the history of the world? A decision is to be made whether union labor shall administer this government or whether the great mass, the great majority shall rule. We see a combination well organized upon their strategy in opposition to this measure. We see admitted reversal of action with some of you that are swinging to the left when once you were all out for the provisions of this bill.

I recall what my colleague the gentleman from Oklahoma, LYLE BOREN, sitting here, said 2 years ago when a like measure was before Congress. He said:

> The worst enemy the workingman had was the man who ordered strikes in a defense industry.

And he was right.

This bill is a little stronger than a gesture, the Harness substitute weakens the act better than half and the proposed Ramspeck substitute in my opinion means almost, if not completely nil.

We read in the press that in all probability another invasion is in the offing with more than 500,000 miners and a number of other essential war industries striking when we are all agreed that coal is most vital to our war effort as well as rubber and other critical materials.

We wonder what action will be taken by our draft boards where these men are striking. Will they continue to be deferred when they are not now working at essential war work? What action is going to be taken to overcome these many strikes now in essential war work plants?

All of organized labor's powers were derived from and through a friendly Congress and today we have power to modify, limit, or to the extreme, a right to repeal every consideration given them. This matter is in our hands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman is there any time remaining that could be allotted?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets that all time is allotted, unless some Member who had been listed does not claim his time.

Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. GAVAGAN] desire recognition? Apparently the gentleman does not claim recognition, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, I voted for the rule to consider this proposed legislation, but I would like to have an opportunity to know what I am voting on, and I think every other Member of the House is entitled to that consideration.

The Harness amendment comprises six or seven pages of closely typewritten matter. It has not been printed.

In my conference on the floor with other Members of the House I find very few, if any, Members who profess to know what is contains. Certainly, nobody knows what it means as amended by the Smith amendment.

It is now 5 o'clock in the evening. Why not have the Committee rise and give us an opportunity to read the proposed legislation in the RECORD tomorrow morning and vote on it at 12 o'clock or soon thereafter tomorrow?

I want to support proper legislation on this subject matter, but I do not want to vote for a bill of six or seven pages which has never been printed and which is beyond the power of any Member to adequately understand merely by having heard it read by the reading clerk. Mr. Chairman, I want to urge, as one of those who has consistently supported the enactment of legislation of this kind, that the committee in charge of the bill give consideration to offering a motion at this time that the Committee rise, so that the Members of the House may have an opportunity at least to know what the legislation is upon which they are expected to cast their votes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the Committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PACE) there were—ayes 173, noes 38.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interest of the national defense, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House meets tomorrow morning it meet at 11 o'clock.

Mrs. NORTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am not any too anxious to rush the execution of this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I object.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, if it has not already been done, that the substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] be printed in the RECORD for the consideration of the Members of the House, together with the Ramspeck and Smith amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think that the amendment already offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] and other amendments that have been offered would be printed at the place in the proceedings where they were offered. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] has not offered an amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the substitute amendment which I expect to offer and which is at the Clerk's desk may be printed in the RECORD at this point for the information of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The amendment referred to follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAMSPECK: On page 7, line 12, strike out the committee amendment and insert in lieu thereof the following substitute:

"That section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940 is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

" 'The power of the President under the foregoing provisions of this section to take immediate possession of any plant upon a failure to comply with any such provisions, and the authority granted by this section for the use and operation by the United States or in its interests of any plant of which possession is so taken, shall also apply as hereinafter provided to any plant equipped for the manufacture, production, or mining of any articles or materials which may be required for the national defense or which may be useful in connection therewith. Such power and authority may be exercised by the President through such department or agency of the Government as he may designate, and may be exercised with respect to any such plant, whenever the President finds, after investigation, and proclaims that there is an interruption of the operation of such plant as a result of a strike or other labor disturbance, that the national defense program will be unduly impeded or delayed by such interruption, and that the exercise of such power and authority is necessary to insure the operation of such plant in the interest of the national defense: Provided, That with respect to any plant of which possession shall have been taken under the provisions of this paragraph, such plant shall be returned to its owners whenever the President determines that such plant will be privately operated in a manner consistent with the needs of the national defense: Provided further, That possession of any plant shall not be taken under authority of this section after the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, and the authority to operate any such plant under the provisions of this section shall terminate at the end of 6 months after the termination of such hostilities as so proclaimed.'

"SEC. 2. In any case in which possession of any plant has been or is hereafter taken under the authority granted by section 9 of such act of 1940, as amended, such plant, while so possessed, (a) shall be operated under the same terms and conditions of employment which were in effect at the time possession of such plant was so taken, or (b) in the event operation of such plant is interrupted or stopped at such time, shall be operated under the same terms and conditions of employment which were in effect at such plant immediately preceding such interruption or stoppage.

"SEC. 3. (a) Whenever any business establishment, plant, mine, or facility is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such business establishment, plant, mine, or facility, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slowdown, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such business establishment, plant, mine, or facility by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

"SEC. 4. The provisions of this act and the amendments made by this act shall cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, except as to offenses committed prior to such date.

"SEC. 5. The National War Labor Board (hereinafter called the 'Board'), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes,' and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"Whenever the United States Conciliation Service (hereinafter called the 'Conciliation Service') certifies that a labor dispute exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(b) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; the act of October 2, 1942, hereinbefore referred to; and the regulations and orders issued under such acts; and where no law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

"(c) To require the attendance of witnesses and the production of such papers, documents, and records as may be deemed by the Board material to its investigation of facts in any labor dispute, and to issue subpenas requiring such attendance or production.

"(d) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"SEC. 6. The National War Labor Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, which it deems relevant to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Would the request just submitted by the gentleman from Georgia include amendments that have been sent to the Clerk's desk but have not actually been reported to the House?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that such amendments as have been placed on the Clerk's desk, even though not reported, may likewise be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, in order to be specific, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment striking out sections 2 and 3 be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The amendment referred to follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMASON: On page 9, strike out all of sections 2 and 3.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the committee amendments authorized by the House Committee on Military Affairs, that have been sent to the Clerk's desk, be printed in the RECORD, or were they printed yesterday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that they were printed in the RECORD this morning.

Mr. MAY. I did not find them in the RECORD this morning.

The SPEAKER. If they were not printed in the RECORD, does the gentleman desire to ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MAY. I am advised that they were in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I want to submit a unanimous-consent request, and I should like to address myself to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs. Insofar as I can judge the temper of the House and the business before the House, if there ever was a time when this House ought to adjourn over the week end it is now. I know gentlemen say no, but I have been here a good while. If this House is in shape to legislate, I cannot figure it out. Will not the gentleman ask unanimous consent to adjourn over to Monday?

Mr. MAY. I do not think so, because, believing as I do in a cooling-off period, I think that by morning everybody will be cooled off and we will be all right.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include therein certain quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

DUNKERQUE ANNIVERSARY

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Speaker, 3 years ago, on this day, at this very hour, the heroic evacuation of the British Expeditionary Forces, trapped on the blood-stained beaches of Dunkerque, was being successfully concluded.

This was a miracle of deliverance at which the whole world gasped in amazement. It lifted the heart and strengthened the soul with tremendous emotional and spiritual exaltation.

We must not forget, however, that it was a miracle achieved, with God's help, by the naked courage and valor and tenacity and discipline, not only of the soldiers and sailors and airmen involved, but to an unprecedented degree, by the plain people of England. It was a miracle in which the average citizen, the ordinary man and woman, participated with uncomparable bravery, and skill, and calm devotion; a miracle which would have been impossible without them, the Mr. and Mrs. Miniver's of our time. Never before in history had such an army been rescued, on such a scale, by the civilian volunteers.

It is to this nameless army of the people, these unsung heroes and their quiet heroism, that Joseph Auslander has dedicated his poem, Dunkerque Anniversary, which I am privileged to present before this House. The poem follows:

DUNKERQUE ANNIVERSARY

When the beast from the dark primordial slime
Bellowed his hunger for blood and bone;
When the Czech stood stalwart and sublime
Against the tusks of the mastodon;
When the Pole was bored for the hundredth time;
When the Fleming's furious fate was known;
When the Dutch and the French blazed blood and grime—
England elected to fight alone.

For nine incredible nights and days,
Beneath the pounding of bomb and gun,
Beneath the infernal heat and haze,
Beneath the pitiless blood-drenched sun,
On the Norman beach's glare and glaze,
The weaponless Tommy faced the Hun:
And while we could only gasp and gaze,
England elected to fight alone.

When the Stukas droned their savagery,
And it seemed no strength could stop that drone,
A small and a gallant company
Hurled that hellish armada down,
Wrought an eagle-defended Thermopylae,
Laughing at death from a treacherous throne:
Pillared in flame between sky and sea,
England elected to fight alone.

From Beowulf, Alfred and Harold on,
From Arthur and Armstrong and Robin Hood,
This is the bread of Bellerophon,
This is the Lion's fearless brood,
This is the Balaclava blood,
This is the creed of the Camperdown:
When all but the soul is quite subdued,
England elects to fight alone.

Now that we face the foe as one,
The foul implacable fiend, none other,
Eternally cunning, the ruthless Hun,
Now that we stand as brother with brother,
Now that the enemy is known,
Now that we rally round our Mother—
Until the beast in his own blood smother,
England no longer fights alone.

FOOD AND FOOD PRICES

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Speaker, I think it is safe to say that everybody in the country today is talking about food. Certainly if they are not talking about food, they are thinking about it, because the shortage of food has already made itself felt in our daily lives. This is a startling fact to Americans who up to a year ago had never given a thought to a shortage in their food supply. Our United States was considered a land of plenty, food was easy to obtain, and frequently it was said from public platforms and in daily conversation that no one need ever starve in America. But today that is all changed and it is a shocking change.

Because of this shortage, people first became critical of the management of the production, processing, and distribution of food, the criticism being directed at producers, at distributing merchants, and more recently it has been concentrated on the Government control which has been exercised over the business of bringing food supplies to the householders of the Nation. Opinions have been expressed as to how food should be packaged, how it should be labeled and handled. Some of the suggestions have merit; many of them are the product of theorists who know nothing about the subject but consider themselves economists and experts, though whatever experience and knowledge they may have has been gathered from what they have read in books. Similar suggestions have been made about price control, including mark-ups for the middleman and what price the producer should receive for the efforts of his toil.

In the development of all of this system, little if any thought has been given to the policy adopted by the British, who in turn capitalized on their experience of the past. But, our administration leaders have failed to profit by the successful operations of the most thorough and comprehensive world-wide administration of food control and distribution inaugurated and practiced in our own country during the last World War. This failure to profit by experience is unfortunate, and the confusion which has resulted in the present policies has brought about such a messed-up situation that probably even King Solomon himself could not correct it.

Of course, some of the criticism of the present situation may emanate from people who have an ax to grind or whose toes have been stepped on. Nevertheless, it is a fact that in promulgating the present policies little consideration was given to the advice of people in the different branches of the industry who are experienced and have been successful in their business. Indeed, there are in this House of Representatives men who know from intimate contact and experience the details of food production in the great farms and ranges of our country, and these patriotic Americans have made suggestions in an effort to be helpful in this situation, but their suggestions have met with short shrift and little consideration.

Largely due to this state of affairs, the leader of the minority party in the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr., decided to appoint a food study committee made up of Republican Members of the House, to go into these matters and I was honored by being appointed a member of that committee. The policy promptly adopted by this committee, under the able leadership of its chairman, the gentleman from Ohio, Hon. THOMAS A. JENKINS, was to consult with producers, distributors, and consumers in different parts of the country to learn the facts, seeking to clarify the situation and to bring some kind of order out of the chaotic conditions which exist. This committee, made up of about 40 members, divided itself into 10 different subcommittees and they have gone to work with enthusiasm on their own time, and largely at their own expense, making an intensive study, developing their own facts, and listening to the testimony in different parts of the country of all and any one interested in this great subject of food.

It is amazing that attempts have been made in some places to hamper the work of this volunteer committee by the partisan activity of some members of the Democratic Party. In the city of Philadelphia, due to the attacks of local Democratic politicians, the committee was denied the use of a public building for a meeting and recently an attack was made on the floor of the House against this honest effort to aid in the solution of this serious problem. It seems to run true to the pattern of the New Deal psychology that because their own master minds did not think of it first they are not going to let anybody else do anything constructive, no matter how desirable it may be.

Nevertheless, much constructive good is bound to come out of the studies of this Republican food committee. The very fact that its existence has been attacked by the majority party is in itself productive of good because such attacks have aided in bringing the work of the committee to the attention of the people, and judging from the public reactions received in the mail and the statements made at the hearings already held, the people are definitely aroused and welcome an opportunity to be heard on a matter which affects them so closely. Therefore, perhaps we should not be too critical of our friends, the Democrats, in helping us Republicans to get an audience.

As a result of the research of the Republican food study committee, a firm foundation has already been laid for a real reorganization of the food administration in this country. In the introduction by the gentleman from Ohio, Congressman JENKINS, of H. R. 2739, which provides for centralized food control focused in the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, the fundamental step has been taken to correct a most confusing situation. Anyone who has studied this muddled state of affairs with any degree of sincerity is forced to the inevitable conclusion that the greater part of the misunderstandings, bickerings, and confused thinking exists because of the hydra-headed control of the entire food question. Agency has been piled upon agency; administrator has been heaped on top of administrator; responsibility has been delegated, divided, and destroyed. The credit for the existing chaos and confusion rests in no other hands, and at no other place, than the Chief Executive of the Nation. It is he who demanded the legislation; it is he who made the appointments; it is he who built up this monstrous organization; and like the little red hen, it is he who must take credit for the results.

In all the discussion of this perplexing situation, little has been said about the opening up of new channels for food or stimulating its production along lines which would tend to arouse the public's mind and secure its enthusiastic cooperation. Without the help and trust of the people in solving a problem of this kind the difficulties of the task are multiplied a thousandfold. Perhaps the one exception is the Victory garden movement, which has certainly made the public conscious of the need for more food and has secured its support in no uncertain way. Front lawns have been plowed under, back yards have been cleaned up and fertilized, and many vegetables have been planted to eke out the family supply. Indeed, the housewife has learned a great deal about the canning of food, its preservation by processing and dehydration, and this whole movement has made the families of the Nation more thrifty and less wasteful in the handling of this precious commodity. Whoever thought of the Victory garden did a great thing for America.

But the Victory garden idea has benefited the family and the Nation in other ways besides increasing the production of food. It has made the consumer food conscious and has caused him to study and learn about the system of food production and its distribution. That in itself will bring about suggestions for improved and possibly more economical methods than have hitherto been practiced. The Victory garden has improved the health of the Nation. It has brought people out into the open with the hoe and rake and the wheelbarrow and has raised many a healthy sweat on the brow of the corpulent householder who has benefited by being in the open air and sunshine and in doing some work that in time brings him an everlasting reward. Being an enthusiastic gardener myself, I venture to predict that the man or woman who has toiled in his garden and watched the seeds which he planted grow and has enjoyed the thrill of picking his own fruit from his own vine, will never again be without a garden.

Another great reservoir for food which is underdeveloped is the ocean, the lakes, and the rivers of this country. When one realizes that the total estimated need of fish for military, lend-lease, and domestic consumption for 1943 is 7,000,000,000 pounds of fish, of which it is estimated that there will be a shortage of about 50 percent, it is high time something was done about it. The great fishing industry has been treated like an unwanted stepchild in the whole food program. Fishermen's boats have been confiscated by the Navy and allowed to lie idle while the activities of their owners have been unreasonably restricted. Commercial fishermen are fine, patriotic American citizens and have cooperated in the war effort in every way possible, but the present policy which curtails the production of fish food is short-sighted and unsound.

One of the large fishing grounds of the country is the Atlantic Ocean off the New Jersey coast and the demands of war have made their inroads among the commercial fishermen who have extensive fish pounds off that shore. Many of these fishermen and their crews have gone to war and are serving in the Navy or the Coast Guard, while others have surrendered their boats to the Navy for the defense of the coast and therefore their usual catch of fish is seriously curtailed. Incidentally, there are other factors at work which are beyond comprehension that add to the scarcity of fish food in the market. I refer to the ceiling placed by the Office of Price Administration on the wholesale price for frozen whiting, a food fish of considerable importance. The run of whiting takes place in the spring of the year and lasts about a month or 5 weeks. The ceiling price of 4 cents a pound for frozen whiting in the New York market is totally inadequate since it costs the fishermen about 5½ cents to deliver each pound of whiting to the market. As a result, the New Jersey commercial fishermen during the past 5 weeks have dumped into the sea each day an estimated 25,000 pounds of whiting. Such an attitude on the part of the O. P. A. is indefensible when considered in the light of the present food shortage.

Acting on the protests made by the fishermen in my district, I called this matter to the attention of the O. P. A. and was told that they knew all about the situation and were going to have a conference about it. When advised that the run of whiting would probably last for only another week I was told that that was unfortunate but they were doing their best. Their best by no means reaches the minimum demands of the people of this country. Perfection would be too good to be true; reasonable intelligence, however, is demanded.

Fish is good food, and food is more necessary today than ever before for our own people as well as our allies, and to issue regulations which make it impossible for the producer of food to bring it to market without financial loss is an act detrimental to the best interests of this country and indeed directly hampers the successful waging of the war.

The commercial fishermen of New Jersey are doing all they can to produce as much fish food as possible and this is true of the commercial fishermen in other parts of the country. But even their best will not begin to make up the estimated deficit of three and a half billion pounds in the amount of necessary fish food. However, there is a solution to this in the great army of amateur fishermen who are ready to step in and help. The amateur fisherman is the man or woman who is taken out to fish by men who make a living by taking parties out in the boats they own and who provide the necessary fishing tackle, bait, and so forth. There is also the individual who owns his own boat and fishes for sport.

In normal times these boat captains and powerboat owners in New Jersey are very active during the summer months, taking out these fishing parties and fishing on their own, and they have kept records of the catches which they have made during the past few years. These records show that covering the years 1941 and 1942 the average aggregate catch for each season of some 460 boats along the New Jersey coast was about 10,000,000 pounds of fish. That is a lot of fish, but these men cannot function today because they are denied gasoline for their boats. The O. P. A. regulations permit the commercial fishermen to have what gasoline is necessary for their needs, and that is entirely right, but based on the reasoning that no one is allowed to have a good time and any recreation in these war days, gasoline is denied private fishing parties. The reasons for such a ruling are dissipated by the offer made by the captains of these boats and the private boat owners that in return for the necessary gasoline their catch be sold to the wholesale market with the exception of a small amount, about 20 pounds per person, which might be retained for their own consumption. In this way the deficit in the fish-food supply would be made up, for it is easy to see that if this fish-for-food movement is encouraged and made applicable along all the coastline of the country, in the bays and in the rivers, there would be more than enough fish food available for ourselves and our allies. Extra gasoline is permitted Victory gardeners for food production, why not also to fishermen for the same reason?

The New Jersey boat captain and the private boat owner ask that they be permitted 100 gallons of gasoline per boat per month during the 3 months' fishing season, to carry out this fish-for-food program. This seems reasonable because some of these men think that even less gasoline will suffice, which is undoubtedly true in inland and more sheltered areas where outboard motors are used. But the great and immediate increase in the food supply of the country would justify the allotment of this gasoline and the encouragement of this program.

The Bureau of Fisheries of the Department of the Interior is most interested in this matter and I have written to Secretary Ickes asking him, as Petroleum Administrator for War, to give his sympathetic attention and approval. I urge every Congressman to study this plan and cooperate in every way he can to encourage this sensible method of increasing the food supply of the country. Fishing for food brings immediate results. There is no delay waiting for things to grow as in the case of gardening. The immediate production of some 10,000,000 pounds of fish food is an opportunity that cannot be passed by. Fish for food certainly does parallel the Victory-garden movement which has met with such universal approval. It will produce a great deal more food and it will stimulate interest in a very much neglected industry which plays an important part in our American life.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. REES of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, the Office of Price Administration has announced its plan to roll-back retail prices of certain articles of food including coffee, butter, and beef. The reason given for the so-called roll-back is to comply with the President's policy of "holding the line" against inflation.

No one of ordinary judgment wants a spiral of inflation or favors "run-away" prices. A situation of that kind would, of course, lead to disaster. I wish, particularly, to direct the attention of the House today to the policy of the administration of using Federal funds in the form of subsidies to prevent inflation and higher prices.

I wish to discuss particularly the manner in which such a policy affects the beef situation. As I understand the plan now contemplated, the administration expects to reduce, or roll-back, retail prices of beef 10 percent, and permit processors and wholesalers to continue to receive their present margin of profit by paying subsidies to make up for the roll-back. There is also to be a subsidy of 5 cents a pound on butter, and 3 cents a pound on coffee.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. REES of Kansas. No; unless it is something entirely outside of the matter I am addressing myself to.

Mr. PATMAN. It is something about that very matter.

Mr. REES of Kansas. No; I will not yield until I get through.

It is now known how much these subsidies will cost the taxpayers of this country. Estimates are between $400,000,000 and $500,000,000. These subsidies are, of course, going to be paid on commodities that are rationed. And they are rationed because there is not now a sufficient supply to meet the demand. If the payment of subsidies would greatly increase production of these important food products, there might be some excuse for such a plan. Or, if it could be established the prices of these foods are far out of line with the cost of other essential commodities, and out of line with the purchasing power of the people, there might be some ground for giving consideration to a plan of this kind. Or, if the Government wanted increased production of a commodity not ordinarily grown in large enough quantities, there might be a reason for paying subsidies to provide more of that commodity. But in my judgment, it does not make good sense to charge the taxpayers of this country hundreds of millions of dollars to pay processors and wholesalers so there may be a small reduction in the retail prices of these particular food products. Neither would it make quite so much difference, if there were an adequate supply of these products. But the fact remains that it is not going to make much difference whether we cut the prices down if we are not able to buy these particular products. In other words, even if the price of beef is cut at the retail shops as much as 3 cents or 4 cents per pound, it is not going to help very much if the beef is not there to be bought. It might be interesting right here to estimate just how much this so-called "roll-back" is going to mean to the average consumer. It is estimated there will be about 12 pounds of coffee for each consumer during the year. The saving there will be 36 cents. The allocation of butter will be about the same.

The saving there will be about 60 cents. On beef, if one is able to get it, the saving will be about $1.60. These total $2.56. Let us put the total saved at $3, which is really 25 cents per month. In other words, if the program works out according to the schedule, the consumer will save about 25 cents per month on his coffee, butter, and beef—if he is able to get these commodities. So, in order to save about 25 cents a month per consumer, it is proposed that the Government spent $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 in doing it. It might be well to observe that this item of $300,000,000 or $400,000,000—or whatever the cost may be—is to be charged to the taxpayers which the consumer will ultimately pay. Mr. Speaker, the Office of Price Administration and other departments of the Government have just told us that the beef shortage is likely to become more acute in future months than at present. The outlook on beef supply is not encouraging. And beef, after all, is one of the most important food products needed not only for civilian consumption but especially for our armed forces. Some comparisons have been made with regard to the cost of living during World War No. 1 and the present war. According to figures furnished by the Department of Agriculture, during the last 6 months of 1919 when prices were said to have been extremely high, the average price of choice dressed beef on the Chicago market was $24.82 per hundredweight; in 1920, $25.68. On the same market the average price for choice dressed beef for the year 1942 was $21.30 per hundredweight; for the first 5 months of 1943, $22.50. The average price for live beef steers in 1918 on the Chicago market was $14.65; in 1919, $15.50. In 1942 the average price for live beef steers was $13.79; for the first 5 months of 1943, $15.30. Comparative figures on live cattle on the Chicago market will show some increase in price during the latter period, but the difference is slight. I do not desire at this time to go into the matter of comparing the average income or the average earnings of our people, but it is obvious to everyone that earnings and income are much higher than they were during the other World War. I mention these things to show that while we are talking about holding prices down, so far as beef is concerned they are no higher now than at the high point during the other war, and when other costs were relatively lower.

Let us look for a moment at the retail price of beef during a similar period. In 1918 the average price of beef per pound was 31.7 cents; in 1919, 33 cents; in 1920, 33.3 cents; in 1940, 29.5 cents; in 1941, 31.5 cents; and in 1942, 34.9 cents. In other words, the increase in the price of beef to the consumer during the last year was a little more than 1 cent per pound over the price paid at the close of World War No. 1.

Now I want to call your attention to some more figures that, in my judgment, are quite significant. There are approximately 75,000,000 cattle in the United States—not many more than there were in 1918. As a matter of fact, the number of beef cattle on hand in this country has run pretty much the same during the past 30 years. We have had, according to Government figures, an average of from forty-eight to fifty million beef cattle on hand in this country during the past 30 years. We have very few more cattle on hand now than we had 20 years ago even though we have increased in population. So the thing to which I want to direct your attention particularly is the fact that, considering our increased population, the increased demand for meat by our armed forces, and our commitments under lend-lease, we are bound to have a shortage of beef in this country. As a matter of truth, we have it now. I have just said we have about 48,000,000 beef cattle in this country. Not only have our herds failed to increase with our population but there is a tendency at the present time on the part of producers and feeders not to "finish" their cattle and fatten them, so the tonnage of beef is bound to be much lower. Too many cattle are sold before they ought to go to market. The reason is that the feeder, under present conditions, cannot realize a sufficient spread in profit to "finish" his cattle. Furthermore, the question of the sale price at the end of the feeding period is most uncertain because of experimental manipulation of prices on the part of Government officials in an effort to "hold the line."

Let me repeat, neither livestock producers nor farmers are asking for huge profits. They would like to have some assurance that there will not be so much tinkering with livestock prices as to discourage men from increasing their production as well as keep them from delivering a finished product on the market. I would like to suggest again that, with the increased demand for all kinds of food, especially meat, and with our commitments outstanding, the big question after all is going to be one of increasing production rather than reduction of retail prices on such commodities. Somebody is going to have to be a little more realistic and practical with regard to this question. It ought to be examined as a part of the over-all program in the prosecution of this war. Of course, we do not want inflation. We do not want spiraling prices, but we do want production. This country will get along a lot farther and will come nearer reaching its goal of achievement if it will be a little more consistent with regard to the question of adjustment of prices and give more encouragement to bigger and more expansive production of food of all kinds. Only a few years ago, this country tried the experiment of bringing about prosperity on a program of planned curtailed production. Our planners even destroyed crops and livestock to comply with such plan. Billions of dollars in subsidies were appropriated. It did not hold production down. Now our country is in a gigantic and cruel war. Whether we realize it or not, we have an acute shortage of some of the most essential food products. I just seems as if we have not yet realized that an adequate supply of food is one of the most essential war materials. But we are going to find it out in the very near future.

The payment of subsidies from the Federal Treasury in this manner to increase buying power will not help prevent inflation. The consumer will finally pay it back in taxes. To pay subsidies to processors and wholesalers by the millions will not do much toward increasing production. It is more and more production that we need. If there is to be a ceiling, put it on the retail price of meat. But be sure it is uniform and fair to all parties concerned, and do it in the light of increasing rather than decreasing production. Make it simple and plain, and then enforce it.

Mr. Speaker, again I want to emphasize the need of increased production for prevention of inflation as well as for the prosecution of the war and the writing of the peace. Mr. Speaker, we have got to encourage and assist the farmer in the production of more and more food. He should be encouraged to plant every acre of crop he can and to increase his herds of livestock. The farmer is not asking for huge profits. All he asks for is for more nearly the cost of production. The farmers and producers are among our most patriotic citizens. They are willing to work just as many hours of the day as may be necessary to get the job done. Their families will work with them and are willing and glad to do it. All they ask is an even break. They will do their part and then some. But we cannot get more and more production by curbs, regulations, red tape, uncertainties, and gadgets of all kinds that hamper and hamstring the farm people of this Nation.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman now yield to me?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PATMAN. I ask this to state to the gentleman that the Committee on Banking and Currency the day before yesterday reported a bill to further extend the Commodity Credit Corporation, and in that bill there is an amendment that prohibits subsidies. I agree with the gentleman that it will be more inflationary, at least as much inflationary to raise the prices as to grant a subsidy, because if you pay 80 cents for meat that you would normally pay a dollar for, you have 20 cents extra purchasing power left in your pocket, in competition with everybody else, and that is calculated to cause inflation to that extent.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. To make an observation with reference to this roll-back and subsidy. In my opinion it is a deception intended to fool the people, to make them believe that they are securing a reduction in the cost of living. The gentleman has indicated that an individual may save $3 a year by the roll-back in the price of butter, meat, and coffee. The taxpayer, the consumer, will find that for saving that $3 he has to pay approximately $4 in taxes to save that $3. The taxes will be collected, to pay the subsidy, plus the overhead expense of appointing thousands of auditors and Federal employees to go around the country and figure out whether or not the processor is entitled to the subsidy. I think it is a fraud upon the people.

May I make one other observation with reference to the suggestion offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN]. I am wondering if the amendment that he has referred to is broad enough to cover livestock, and also broad enough to stop the R. F. C. or any other agency from paying a subsidy?

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman turn to the Appendix of the RECORD, page A2762——

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I have read the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PATMAN. I think you will find it is sufficiently broad.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Do you think that in this bill on the Commodity Credit Corporation, we can legislate to stop another corporation, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, from paying the subsidy?

Mr. PATMAN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I think it should be made very definite and certain.

Mr. PATMAN. It says:

> In order to prevent the funds of the Commodity Credit Corporation or any other Government agency from being used for the payment of subsidies to maintain maximum prices for agricultural commodities.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I would want to make it sure. I think we should also make it clear "agricultural commodities" is broad enough to take in livestock and dairy products.

Mr. PATMAN. I do not think there is any question about that.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I do want to commend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] for his statement, and especially for the interest he has taken in an effort to try to work out in a fairly decent way the price of crude oil. I am not discussing that in these particular remarks today, but I know the gentleman from Texas has done everything possible in order to provide a decent price on crude oil without paying subsidies in order to get it, because we do have a critical situation there. The gentleman from Texas has held hearings on the question and has even proposed legislation that might possibly help take care of that situation.

Mr. PATMAN. May I suggest that the gentleman from Kansas has been very helpful. His testimony was good, and we thought it was of sufficient importance to have it reprinted. It has been placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the gentleman's statement.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY of Wisconsin. Something happened on the floor today that justifies the contention of the gentleman, and that we still have the control complex, possibly more than we should have. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WICKERSHAM] had to bring in Mr. MONRONEY's bill to the floor of this House today—right in the midst of this war. Think of it. We had to pass legislation here today to allow these poor people in the great State of Oklahoma, 800,000 of them, that will allow them to go ahead and do the best they can to raise food to help win this war. Farmers that want to raise food to win this war surely shouldn't be forced to come here and get a bill passed in order to do it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I may say to the gentleman that that situation in Oklahoma and some parts of my own State and in Illinois and other places, by reason of this flood situation, is a most serious one, and something should be done rather promptly to relieve that situation, not because of the farmers there, but because of the need for the food which they will produce if they are given a chance.

Mr. CHENOWETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. CHENOWETH. I wish to commend the gentleman for his very timely statement, but I am wondering if irreparable damage is not being done at this very moment by the announcement of this roll-back order on butter and also the threatened subsidy program on meats? Reports are coming to me from the West that livestock feeders are already beginning to empty their feed lots, and that the producers of beef, to whom the gentleman has referred, are already feeling very apprehensive over the situation. I fear that great damage will have been done, regardless of whether or not the legislation suggested by the gentleman from Texas is adopted. I had a letter just yesterday from a cream producer who thought that this roll-back would reduce his price of cream 5 cents, and he called attention to the fact that that is the general impression in the West. I feel we are going to have a very great loss of production, both in cream and in the livestock industry, as a result of these very unfortunate orders.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I appreciate the gentleman's statement. I will say that I have had a considerable amount of correspondence from livestock operators in my district and in other localities in the mid-west who tell me that they are discouraged about this situation and that they are not going to finish the cattle as they would under ordinary circumstances and conditions, because they not only cannot know, but they are afraid the price will be rolled back after they finish feeding the cattle, and they will have to take less for their cattle after they have been finished.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Does not the gentleman feel it would be much better if Mr. Ickes, for instance, the person in charge of petroleum, also had the price-fixing power on petroleum and petroleum products?

In Canada the administration of petroleum and its products has charge of all those things and they have a much better system. They were warmer last winter than we were; they had more gasoline than we, although we supplied a great deal of it.

Mr. REES of Kansas. I may say to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts that I appreciate her expression. My own opinion, I may say to the gentlewoman, is that that is one of the difficulties with reference to the question of price of crude oil: There are too many individuals dealing with the question and it is difficult to place the responsibility in the hands of anyone. I will say, further, however, that I feel that the man at the head of the agency in charge of petroleum, as far as he personally is concerned, without expressing his views, is sympathetic with our views on that question.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But he should be given control of prices also, because the two go together.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. PATMAN. May I state that I thoroughly agree that price and everything else relating to the production and distribution of petroleum should be under Secretary Ickes; and all food control should be under Mr. Chester Davis.

Mr. REES of Kansas. That is correct.

Mr. PATMAN. Then in each of these fields we would have one person responsible.

Mr. REES of Kansas. The gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. I want to make a prediction regarding the roll-back and subsidies on meat if they put it in operation. I predict to the gentleman that at least 50 percent of the meat will go into the black market and that there will be a famine in meat for the men in the armed forces and for the consuming public who get meat in the legitimate manner. We have it here already. When they roll back the price, which will affect the price of the producer, the black-market operators will go in and take over just the same as they did in poultry where they are now controlling about 85 percent of the poultry produced in this country.

Mr. REES of Kansas. This roll-back plan will encourage rather than discourage the black market.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SCANLON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including a statement.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks on two subjects and include therein certain statements and excerpts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, in a world so filled with terror and horror, leaving a ghastly harvest of broken bodies, ravaged lands, ruined temples, devastated towns, we thank Thee for all the gentle and healing ministries which soothe our fear-haunted, troubled souls. We are grateful for the gladness of the morning, the freedom of the wind, the music of the rain, the joy of the sunshine, the deep calm of the night; for trees, flowers, birds, clouds, and sky; for the tender ministries of human love, the unselfishness of parents, the confidence of little children, the patience of teachers, and the encouragement of friends.

If we have been holding the exploding present so close to our eyes that we have lost the far perspective of Thy favor, grant to us, we pray Thee, as we bow by this wayside shrine, true horizons. Remind us of the better aspects of the civilization out of which we have come, which even now, with new vitality, is beating back the powers of barbarism. Remind us of great books, great art, great music, and of causes, once defeated, now victorious, for which other generations shed their blood. Drawing refreshment from vineyards we did not plant, drinking at cisterns we did not dig, knowing the very freedoms for which we fight have been bought with a price, may we be eager in the supreme test of this glorious day to make our lives part payment on an unpayable debt. So may our imperfect service express something of Thee before life's little day ebbs out and the night comes down and our work is done. Amen.

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

S. 1088. A bill to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, with respect to the sale of cotton held by or on behalf of the United States; with an amendment (Rept. No. 281).

By Mr. HATCH, from the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

S. 321. A bill to facilitate and simplify collection procedure in the Department of the Interior; with an amendment (Rept. No. 284); and

S. 378. A bill to provide for the addition of certain land in the State of Arizona to the Montezuma Castle National Monument; without amendment (Rept. No. 285).

By Mr. BANKHEAD, from the Committee on Banking and Currency:

S. 1108. A bill to continue Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States, increase its borrowing power, revise the basis of the annual appraisal of its assets, and to provide for an audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 286).

CONTINUATION OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, in connection with the report on Senate bill 1108 which I have just filed, I wish to say that at the meeting of the committee this morning we did not have the advantage of the services of a stenographic reporter. Mr. J. B. Hutson, president of the Commodity Credit Corporation, presented a statement regarding the bill which I have just reported, and included in the statement was a summary of the resources, investment, and requirements of the Commodity Credit Corporation for the fiscal years 1943 and 1944. The committee directed me to ask unanimous consent to have this statement printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT OF J. B. HUTSON, PRESIDENT, COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION, BEFORE BANKING AND CURRENCY COMMITTEE, JUNE 4, 1943, CONCERNING S. 1108

EXTENSION OF LIFE PROVISION

Mr. Davis in his statement mentioned that legislation is now on the books which requires the Corporation to make loans on the crops, up to the year 1946, on cotton, corn, wheat, rice, tobacco, and peanuts. Other legislation requires that we have price-support programs for the duration of the present emergency and for 2 years thereafter. The proposed legislation would provide for the extension of the life of the Corporation until 1947, or 2 years after hostilities have terminated, whichever is the later. Under past legislation the life of the Corporation has been extended for no more than 2 years at any one time; however, in view of the fact that many of the Corporation's programs, such as the domestic hemp program for instance, are undertaken because of the war and will undoubtedly be carried forward at least for the duration of the present conflict, and further in view of the fact that Congress has within the past year or two enacted legislation assuring farmers that loans will be available through Commodity Credit Corporation until at least the year 1946, it seems appropriate that the proposed legislation should provide for an extension of the life of the Corporation until the year 1947 or 2 years after hostilities have terminated, whichever is later.

GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE

I should like also to point out another item which relates exclusively to the internal workings of the Corporation. At present the administrative expense payments of Commodity Credit Corporation are subject to audit by the General Accounting Office. However, our capital fund operations, those dealing with loans on and purchases of commodities; carrying charges such as warehousing, transportation, and interest payments; and other items directly associated with program operations are not audited by the General Accounting Office, although audited by the Staff of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Treasury appraisal in connection with the annual valuation of assets.

Several months ago a committee was established, made up of representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the General Accounting Office, for the purpose of considering the relationships between the Corporation and the General Accounting Office. This committee has come forth with a recommendation that provides legislation authorizing and directing the audit of the financial transactions of the Corporation by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles applicable to commercial corporate transactions. This legislation is mutually acceptable to and supported by both the Commodity Credit Corporation and the General Accounting Office, and, in our judgment, it will provide the means by which our capital fund transactions may receive the review necessary to assure the satisfaction requisite to the expenditures of Federal moneys without requiring detailed audit and examination of each of the millions of documents handled by the Corporation.

Attached is a copy of a letter to Chairman STEAGALL, of the House Banking and Currency Committee, with respect to this provision:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, June 3, 1943.

Hon. HENRY B. STEAGALL,
Chairman, Committee on Banking and Currency, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I learned this morning that the hearings on H. R. 2725, entitled "A bill to continue Commodity Credit Corporation as an agency of the United States, increase its borrowing power, revise the basis of the annual appraisal of its assets, and to provide for an audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation, and for other purposes," had been concluded and the committee had ordered the bill to be reported with amendments and that the provisions of section 3 of the proposed bill having to do with the audit by the General Accounting Office of the financial transactions of the Corporation had been stricken out.

I have discussed the matter with Mr. J. B. Hutson, president of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and have been assured by him that both he and the Department of Agriculture are heartily in favor of this audit provision in the bill.

As a matter of fact, the audit provisions of this bill were drafted by representatives of this office, under my personal supervision, in cooperation with representatives of the Department of Agriculture and the Commodity Credit Corporation. This section of the bill has my full approval and in discussing the matter with Congressman WOLCOTT today I have so advised him.

I am convinced that the audit by this office of the fiscal transactions of the Commodity Credit Corporation will be in the best interests of the Government, and in this connection I may advise you that arrangements are already under way with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and Reconstruction Finance Corporation looking to the proposing of legislation for the audit of their accounts and those of other comparable Government corporations which will follow the general plan or pattern of the provisions for the Commodity Credit Corporation.

I would have written you sooner, but I had been informed that representatives of the Department of Agriculture would advise the committee that the audit provisions in question had been agreed upon by them and by this office and I understood that we would be given an opportunity to be heard in case the committee was doubtful about any of such audit provisions in the bill.

Sincerely yours,

LINDSAY C. WARREN,
Comptroller General of the United States.

STATEMENT RE CHANGE IN BASIS FOR APPRAISAL OF ASSETS OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

The annual appraisal of the assets of Commodity Credit Corporation was first provided for in Public Law No. 442, Seventy-fifth Congress, which was approved March 8, 1938. This legislation provided that the "value of the assets shall, insofar as possible be determined on the basis of the market price at the time of the appraisal." It was provided that the annual appraisal should be as of March 31 of each year, with the thought in mind that this would allow sufficient time for the payment to be made by Commodity Credit Corporation or to be received from the Treasury before the close of the current fiscal year.

In Public Law 147, Seventy-seventh Congress, approved July 1, 1941, the language relative to the appraisal was changed to read "on the basis of cost, including not more than 1 year of carrying charges, of such assets to the Corporation or the average market prices of such assets for a period of 12 months ending with March 31 of each year, whichever is less." The appraisal on this basis is rather difficult to make since it involves computation of average price for the preceding year on a large number of commodities and it involves the calculation of the original cost to the Corporation of the commodities plus 1 year's carrying charges. While this information can be obtained from our records, it can be obtained only with a great amount of work.

It disturbed me somewhat that appraisal last year of our assets as of March 31 was not completed by the Treasury Department until some time in late August or early September. Under the proposed method the assets would be appraised at the lower of cost or market value during the preceding month. Under this method the appraisal can be determined much more readily from the books of the Corporation than is the case under the present method of appraisal. I believe that representatives of the Treasury Department informally brought to our attention that a saving in both the time required for and the cost of the appraisal could be made by having the basis of the appraisal changed slightly.

EXPLANATION OF STATEMENTS RELATING TO ADDITIONAL BORROWING POWER REQUIREMENTS OF COMMODITY CREDIT CORPORATION

This statement is a summary of the estimated position of the Corporation at June 30, 1943, and the estimated requirements for new commitments to be made during the fiscal year 1944. At June 30, 1943, we will have in use all but $465,250,000 of our total resources, without providing for the 1943 wheat program. Loan and purchase operations scheduled for the 1944 fiscal year are estimated at $2,059,165,000, leaving a difference of $1,593,915,000. It is estimated that about $620,000,000 will be available from collections of sales proceeds and repayment of loans before it is necessary to make all commitments for loans and purchases. It will be observed that commitments must be made prior to the harvesting season, during the months of July and August, and collections with respect to these commitments will not, of course, be realized until several months thereafter. Giving effect to the collections which will be made during July and August of this year, our total investment and obligation requirements will reach a peak in August 1943 of $3,722,015,000. To meet these requirements the Corporation will need total resources of $3,750,000,000, which will require an increase of $1,000,000,000 in the authorized borrowing power. The total collections for the 12 months of the fiscal year 1944 are estimated at $1,449,653,000, so that by the close of the fiscal year the total investment and obligations will be $2,894,263,000. It will be noted that this is an increase of only $609,512,000 over the investment and obligations at June 30, 1943. It is necessary, however, to have borrowing authority in excess of this net increase, since funds must be available when commitments are made. Without the increased borrowing authority the Corporation will not be in a financial position to make commitments with respect to crops harvested this season, and the absence of such programs would seriously hamper the food production program.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. WAGNER (by request) introduced Senate bill 1163, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. CHANDLER:

S. 1164. A bill for the relief of Lucille Sleet; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIPSTEAD:

S. 1165. A bill to increase the period of limitation on actions against railroad carriers for recovery of overcharges from 2 to 4 years; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

PREPARATION OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR POST-WAR CONSTRUCTION IN TOWNS AND CITIES

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, I ask consent to introduce—by request—a bill for reference to the Committee on Banking and Currency and also request that an explanatory statement by me in connection therewith be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested and the statement presented by the Senator from New York will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1163) to encourage the development of good neighborhood conditions in towns and cities by private enterprise with the collaboration of public enterprise; to provide credit for the assembly of land in deteriorated urban areas for subsequent reconveyance by sale or by lease for development and redevelopment by private enterprise and by public improvement; to encourage the widest possible extent of home ownership; to provide financial assistance to towns or cities, or appropriate instrumentalities thereof, for the purchase, assembly, and clearance of land in the interest of public safety, health, comfort, and welfare as a necessary preliminary to the development of good neighborhood conditions; to stimulate a great and continuing volume of economic activity and employment in the post-war period; to provide grants for metropolitan development plans, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WAGNER (by request) was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. WAGNER in connection with the bill is as follows:

I am introducing, at the request of the Urban Land Institute, a bill which deals with a vital problem closely related to legislation I have advocated in the past. This bill provides a method whereby the Federal Government can assist States and localities, in assembling large tracts of land as a necessary preparatory step toward the sale or lease of such land for development or redevelopment. This is primarily a private-enterprise bill, in the sense that it recognizes that most of the development and redevelopment will be by private enterprise. It recognizes, however, that some cooperative or supplementary public enterprise will be necessary to make the program comprehensive.

This is not a post-war bill. The problem with which it deals must be met forthrightly before the war is over, in order that industry and finance, as well as State and local governments, may be prepared and ready to act when the war is over.

Certain initial Federal expenditures are required to get this program started. But it is not a public-works bill, it is not a relief bill, and it is not primarily a bill for public spending. It might be called rather an encouragement-to-enterprise bill. It is designed in order that the Federal Government may make those types of expenditures which are an essential part of tremendous programs of private investment and private development. It is not a pump-priming bill, but rather an industry and Government cooperation bill.

This bill deals with problems facing not only those interested from all points of view in the development of real estate in established communities, large and small, but also those interested in large-scale financing and in investments which are going bad because of decay and blight. It is thus a problem close to municipalities and taxing units, large and small.

As I have said, I am introducing this bill by request. I do not believe that it is a perfect measure, but rather one which requires a great deal of additional and intensive study. The bill, I hope, will afford this opportunity for study and discussion throughout the country. It is likely that revisions will be suggested before enactment.

Before enactment also, it will be necessary to get the experience and views of Government agencies which have dealt with similar problems, particularly the National Housing Agency. This bill relates the proposed program to the program of the National Housing Agency because, while land has many uses, the major use of land in established communities is for residential purposes. The problems of the land cannot be separated from the problems of the people living on the land. It is also true that the largest single opportunity for private industry expansion after the war is in the field of residential construction. Furthermore, the agencies of the Government which have the machinery for encouraging private-home financing are located within the National Housing Agency. Fortunately, in my judgment, the bill does not propose to establish still another governmental agency.

I have asked that the bill be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, because that committee has dealt with practically all measures directed toward the encouragement and stimulation of private industry in the field of home building, and also because consideration of the bill will involve problems of finance and credit, and quite likely banking and insurance, intimately related to the general work of the Banking and Currency Committee.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, beginning on page 2, line 4.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday the able Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] made an elaborate presentation of the bill and of the report of the committee. I have before me a copy of the minutes of the committee, which show that the committee reported the bill by a vote of 10 to 4. As some question was raised about that yesterday, I asked for a copy of the record, and it is before me.

The Committee on the Judiciary, in reporting the bill, filed a very elaborate report in its favor. The committee calls attention to the fact that the bill sets out the duties of the Senate under the constitutional provision which I shall now read:

> The President * * * shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of departments.

The purpose of the proposed law is to carry out the mandate of that constitutional provision. I wish to say at the very outset that I am not complaining about appointments in my own State; I am entirely satisfied with the appointments made in Tennessee. I have found, however, that nearly 30,000 Government officials drawing more than $4,500 a year are appointed in a way which I might describe as being appointed by Tom, Dick, and Harry. They are not appointed by the President; they are not appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; they are not appointed by the head of any department; they are not appointed by the courts of law. I doubt if there is a Senator now present who can say how many of the appointments in his own State are actually made.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I noted with much interest the Senator's comment with respect to appointments made by Tom, Dick, and Harry. I wondered whether the Senator meant to accent the "Harry" by any manner of means?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; when I spoke of Tom, Dick, and Harry, I used a very general term and one commonly used. I did not mean to refer to any particular Harry, or to any particular Tom, or to any particular Dick. I will not do that. I wish to call attention to the fact, however, that there is a provision of our Constitution which requires the Senate to take part in the appointment of officers, either by legislation or by confirmation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to have a statement from the Senator as to who the Tom's, Dick's, and Harry's are who make the appointments? Who have this power at the present time?

Mr. McKELLAR. Heaven only knows! I intended to bring that matter up a little later, but I shall do so now. I will take one independent office as an illustration, the Board of Economic Warfare. Out of a total of 2,620 employees in the Board of Economic Warfare, 480 receive over $4,500 a year, and they are paid a gross amount of $2,689,000 a year. No congressional appropriation has ever been made for the payment of a single person employed in the B. E. W. The Senate Appropriations Committee, of which I happen to be temporarily the head, has never appropriated any money for the B. E. W. The Board of Economic Warfare has spent a great deal of money, and I shall refer to that later. I think what I have said answers the question asked by the junior Senator from Michigan.

The Board of Economic Warfare is composed of the Vice President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Commerce and three or four other Cabinet officers, as I recall, and a Mr. Milo Perkins. Mr. Jesse Jones testified a day or two ago before the so-called Economy Committee, that Mr. Milo Perkins absolutely ran the entire establishment of 2,620 employees; that his word was law, even over him, Mr. Jesse Jones and that he had received a directive from Mr. Perkins to furnish the money to pay all these employees. That is true notwithstanding the provision of the Constitution with which we are all familiar. Of course, the Constitution is out of date. That instrument seems to have been nullified in whole or in part. I wish to read from it so that our memories may be refreshed. There are some inhibitions contained in the Constitution, and this is one of them:

> No money shall be drawn from the Treasury, but in consequence of appropriations made by law.

Yet a day or two ago Mr. Jones, one of my best friends, a man whom I admire, respect, and honor, told me that every few days he received a directive to appropriate money for certain objects, and he appropriated the money for them. I asked him how much he had appropriated, and he told me the amount. It was an immense sum. I asked him why it was necessary for the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses to spend their time appropriating money when all an officer of the Government had to do was to go to him with a directive addressed to him and receive all the money he wanted. He said the Congress had given him that right. I said to him, "All you need is an unlimited right of spending money and it will not be necessary for the Congress to go through the procedure of making appropriations at all." He said that if he were given that unlimited right it would not be necessary for Congress to make appropriations.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. How will the bill as reported by the committee change the present situation?

Mr. McKELLAR. I am happy to discuss that point right now. The Senator may be acquainted with the War Manpower Commission. That is an agency with respect to which an amendment was adopted by the Senate last year which was in line with this bill. By that amendment it is provided that the members of the War Manpower Commission and all officials of that Commission receiving more than $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The result is that all the appointments the War Manpower Commission has made in the various States have come before the Senate for confirmation. So far as I know the appointments have been very excellent ones, at least those for my State have been. For the most part I think those for all other States have been satisfactory. Strange as it may seem to some Members of the Senate who have forgotten the Constitution, a Senator represents the State from which he comes; and, as a matter of fact, he has something to say about the character, the kind, the abilities, and the qualifications of appointees who come from his State. When such a provision is in the law we obtain better employees. The agencies of government do not send to the Senate for confirmation the nominations of Tom, Dick, or Harry. They send to the Senate for confirmation the nominations of persons whom they know have the qualifications. That is the constitutional way of making appointments.

I am sure the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], learned and able lawyer as he is, with the fine character and reputation with which he came to the Senate, respects the Constitution of the United States. I need not ask him whether he does; I would not ask him such a question because I know he does. It is utterly astounding to me to find Senators who are great lawyers and who are familiar with the Constitution opposing a bill which simply requires that officials shall be appointed in consonance with the Constitution.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I simply want to say to the Senator from Tennessee that I think we differ only as to the means of arriving at the answer to the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad the difference is no greater than that.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Tennessee desires to use the figure $4,500 as the test of whether a man is a policy-making official. I think the Senate can place in the bill the definition of a policy-making official and can do a good service, rather than simply to use as the test the amount of salary a man receives. We may say that the Office of Price Administration recently tried to determine the ability of a person by the number of drawers he had in his desk. [Laughter.] The Senator from Tennessee would not want to use such a means of arriving at the answer to the question.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Tennessee not only would not want to do it, but, frankly, he would not do it. There is one thing about the Senator from Tennessee, regardless of whatever else may be said about him: He has views, and he is willing to stand by them; and that is not one of his views.

Mr. President, at this time I call attention to the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. As I understand the situation, the principal difference is that the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming would apply only to policy-making officials. It is confined to them. The difference between the O'Mahoney amendment and the bill I have proposed is that the O'Mahoney amendment would apply to policy-making officials, and would leave to the bureaus of the Government the determination of who is a policy-making official and who is not.

In that connection, I desire to read some testimony bearing on the question of who is a policy-making official. However, first I can illustrate the meaning of the O'Mahoney amendment. Let me say that in making the illustration I mean no reflection of any kind; because there is no Member of the Senate whom I admire more than I do the Senator from Wyoming. He serves on my committee, and we are the greatest friends, and I am his admirer in every way. But, Mr. President, if we adopt the amendment which the Senator from Wyoming has offered, we shall be in a situation similar to that of the colored boy and the fish, down on the Mississippi River, not long ago. The colored boy went to the river and caught a fish. He knew beforehand he was going to catch one, because there were plenty of fish there, and he had already built a fire over which to cook it. So he dropped his line in the river and caught a catfish about a foot and a half long—a fine catfish, just large enough for a good meal for one man. He took the fish off the hook, washed it in the water, and then took out his knife to clear out the refuse. As he did, the fish struggled and shook and fought, almost like a tiger. Its tail went first one way and then the other, so fast that the Negro boy could hardly see it. So he said, "Look here, fish, what are you so excited about? I ain't goin' to do nothing but gut you."

I feel much the same way about the O'Mahoney amendment. The O'Mahoney amendment, in the nicest, clearest, smoothest, most adroit way, would simply cut the life out of the bill. Why? Because it would leave with the officials themselves the right of determining who is a policy maker. That is why I object very strenuously to it.

If I can find the testimony showing who is a policy maker I shall do so at once. I shall read from the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am not a member of that committee, but I have the hearings before me. The committee was holding hearings on a proposal to increase the borrowing authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in order to take care of the Board of Economic Warfare. The hearings were held on December 2 and 8, 1942. Mr. Jones testified first, and gave some very interesting testimony relative to the very question about which we are talking. I shall read a little of Mr. Jones' testimony so that we can find out who a policy-making official is. I read first a question by Senator TOBEY, who I am sorry is not in the Chamber at this moment:

> Senator TOBEY. Is any member of your organization on the board of directors of the Board of Economic Warfare?
> Mr. JONES. I am on the Board.
> Senator TOBEY. Could you give us a brief statement of how the Board of Economic Warfare functions, what is their job?
> Mr. JONES. All of the powers of the Board may be exercised by its chairman, Vice President WALLACE, or by the executive director of the Board, Milo Perkins, or such other officials or employees as the chairman may designate. So, if we in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation have a directive, as we do every day or so, to do something, we must either do it or persuade the Board of Economic Warfare representatives that maybe something else would be better.

Senator TOBEY. But Jesse Jones is the head of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, the lending agency of the Government, and as a director of the Board of Economic Warfare, he knows both sides always, I take it. He is consulted as a member of the Board of Economic Warfare before such a request comes forward.

Mr. JONES. No.

Senator TOBEY. What is the job of that Board?

Mr. JONES. The Board meets occasionally, but few things are submitted for discussion or a vote.

The Board of Economic Warfare was not created by the Congress.

Senator TOBEY. You are told what has been done.

Mr. JONES. We know at Reconstruction Finance Corporation what has been done because we get a directive. Probably the other directors do not all know about it. The Board of Economic Warfare is largely operated, as I say, by Milo Perkins and his assistants.

Senator TOBEY. Then Milo Perkins is what we might call a one-man band. Whatever he sees fit to do he does; he goes ahead and makes requisition on you for the money that may be necessary.

Mr. JONES. That is about correct. We try to cooperate and do the work as smoothly as possible and do it in as businesslike a way as we can.

Senator TOBEY. Who are the other members on the Board?

Mr. JONES. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Attorney General, the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs, and the Director of Lend-Lease.

Senator TOBEY. They are really a part of the window dressing. These gentlemen do not take an active part in the direction of the Board of Economic Warfare, do they?

Mr. JONES. They do not know much about it, probably.

Senator TOBEY. In other words, the Board of Economic Warfare is Milo Perkins and he might be said to be the Board.

Mr. JONES. Yes, sir; in the daily operations.

Senator TOBEY. And he contacts you, and in the last analysis all that you can do is to furnish the money.

Mr. JONES. Unless we think it is not right. Then we talk about it.

Senator TOBEY. But you cannot stop the giving of the money.

Mr. JONES. No.

Senator TOBEY. Have there been many cases that you thought were not right?

Mr. JONES. A few.

Senator TOBEY. As to such cases did they cooperate with you, or did they have their own way?

Mr. JONES. We managed to reach an agreement. Probably the difficulty is that some member of their organization will be negotiating or considering something for a good many weeks that we do not know anything about, and when presented to us——

Senator TOBEY (interposing). It is fait accompli.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

From that testimony one might suppose that Mr. Milo Perkins is a policy-making official; but he is not. I read from the testimony of Mr. Perkins in the same hearing, on page 75:

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Jones sent to me a copy of his testimony before this committee. I have seen him since then, and talked to him twice on the phone since then. I am sorry, as I told him this morning, that he could not be here today. He has a severe cold.

I want to begin by making clear what Mr. Jones himself has said. On March 21, 1942, in a statement which he made public, he said this:

"When the President, the War Production Board, the Army, the Navy, the Maritime Commission, or the Board of Economic Warfare, establishes the need for plant facilities, materials, or supplies, for which no other provision is made, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when requested to do so, undertakes to provide them. In this way it serves those responsible for war-production policies. It does not make policy."

Then, again on November 30, he said: "Neither the Reconstruction Finance Corporation nor I determine policy."

Jesse Jones is not a policy-making official. Milo Perkins is not a policy-making official, although Mr. Jones testified that he has absolute control of that particular activity.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. On page 2 of the O'Mahoney substitute, in line 12, under subsection (a) of section 2, we find the following language:

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies of the Government (including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations).

That certainly would include Mr. Jones and Mr. Perkins, would it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It probably would. It is possible.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is more than possible, is it not?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is possible that they might concede that they are policy-making individuals. I assume they would concede it. I think Jesse Jones would admit that he is a policy-making individual, although he says, in the testimony which I have read, that he is not. I think that probably the question would not be raised; but when we leave it to the heads of bureaus——

Mr. FERGUSON. Would not the heads of bureaus be covered by that language?

Mr. McKELLAR. Within the bureaus, they might be considered policy-making officials.

Mr. President, the Senate is abrogating its powers and duties. I do not care so much about the powers, but in my judgment it is abrogating its duties.

In the Office of the Alien Property Custodian, which still has custody of property seized during the First World War, there are a total of 929 employees, and 213 of them receive more than $4,500 a year. We pay them a total of $1,192,800 a year, and no Senator knows who appoints them. They are appointed by some Tom, Dick, or Harry, but no Senator knows who appoints them. Can any Senator tell me who appoints the employees of the Office of Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. I have been concerned over reports as to the number of aliens employed by our Government. Does the Senator know whether or not any aliens are employed in this particular department?

Mr. McKELLAR. I do not know. I could not tell the Senator.

I come next to the War Production Board, which has 20,200 employees. Three thousand four hundred and six of them receive more than $4,500 a year, at a cost of $19,075,000. Can any Senator tell me who appoints the employees of the War Production Board? I am sure I do not know. I could not name a man in the War Production Board.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator believe that every person employed in the War Production Board in this emergency ought to come before the Senate for confirmation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Certainly not. I have never made any such contention. However, I believe that every employee who receives $4,500 a year or more should come before the Senate for confirmation. In this time of war, when we need every dollar we can obtain to win the war, when the employees of that agency are receiving $19,075,000 a year, someone ought to know who the appointees are.

I come next to the Office for Emergency Management, which has 16,000 employees. Sixteen hundred and one of them, or one-tenth of them, receive more than $4,500 a year. The amount paid to the 1,601 employees is $8,905,000. The President does not appoint those employees; the heads of departments do not appoint them; the courts do not appoint them; they are not appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The result is that no Senator knows who appoints them. We are paying out vast sums, and no Senator can say who appoints the employees.

Let me pass to the next one. I am taking only the high lights. The distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has had this information compiled from the records. He is chairman of the Joint Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures, and these figures are taken from the records.

We come next to the Office of Price Administration. We have heard of that organization. Probably there is not a Senator who has not received letters from his constituents in the past few days about the O. P. A. I have received dozens of such letters. In the O. P. A. there are 34,000 employees, in round numbers. Two thousand and nineteen of them receive more than $4,500 a year, and the Government pays them a total of $11,306,000.

Who appoints those employees? They are not appointed in the constitutional way; they are not appointed by the President; they are not appointed by the courts; they are not appointed by the heads of departments; they are certainly not appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Yet they receive in salaries $11,306,000 of the people's money. It seems to me that the Senate should exercise the authority given to it in the Constitution. We took an oath to do so.

I come next to the State Department. There are 668 members of that Department who receive yearly salaries of more than $4,500.

There are 2,428 in the Treasury. There are 3,385 in the War Department. There are 1,006 in the Department of Justice. There are only 298 in the Post Office Department. The Post Office Department seems to be complying pretty well with the law and the Constitution.

There are 836 in the Navy Department.

In the Interior Department there are 1,098 employees who are receiving approximately $4,000,000.

The employees to whom I have referred may be appointed by the heads of departments. I do not know. I doubt if they are. I doubt if the heads of the departments ever have anything to do with it. They are appointed by Tom, Dick, and Harry.

I now come to the Alley Dwelling Authority. Some of the members of the Appropriations Committee are present, and they will verify what I am about to say.

Last year Congress appropriated $12,000 for the Alley Dwelling Authority. It had been receiving quite a large sum of money. My recollection is that a Budget estimate of $12,000 was submitted this year, and $12,000 more was allowed for the Alley Dwelling Authority.

There are 8 employees in the Alley Dwelling Authority who are receiving more than $4,500 a year in salary. Think of it! We appropriate $12,000 for the Alley Dwelling Authority, and it has 242 employees. Those 8 receive $44,800 out of an appropriation of $12,000 made by the Congress.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Is there a Senator who approves of that? Here are the figures with reference to the Alley Dwelling Authority.

Mr. DANAHER. Mr. President—

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment.

The Alley Dwelling Authority receives an appropriation from the Congress of $12,000 and it has 8 men on its rolls receiving $44,800. I do not know how much the others on the rolls receive. They receive less than $4,500. However, according to that, I am just wondering where in the name of heaven the Alley Dwelling Authority gets $44,800 to pay the 8 men receiving over $4,500 each in salary, when Congress appropriates only $12,000.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DANAHER. The Senator from Tennessee has practically answered the question I was about to ask. He asked if any Senator approved the situation to which he referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. DANAHER. I was unable to decide whether I approved it or not without knowing how it was done. How does an agency for which Congress appropriates only $12,000 pay $44,000?

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot answer the Senator. I do not know.

Mr. DANAHER. Has the Senator inquired into that matter?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is a species of financial legerdemain which I cannot understand.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator contend that the pending bill would remedy that situation?

Mr. McKELLAR. Indeed it would.

Mr. FERGUSON. In what way?

Mr. McKELLAR. The nominations of the employees would have to come before the Senate for confirmation, and in the light of the statement which I have just read from this record, I do not think any Senator would vote to confirm the appointment of eight men to receive $44,800 from an appropriation of $12,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Could not that situation be reached through appropriation bills?

Mr. McKELLAR. It might be. We have tried to reach it. Previously the Alley Dwelling Authority had received a great deal of money. I offered an amendment—for which I believe the Senator from Massachusetts voted—reducing the amount for the entire agency to $12,000.

That agency is engaged in some other kind of war work and receives its appropriations from Mr. Jones or some other source. It receives it in some way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. REED. This is my first year as a member of the Appropriations Committee, but I remember very well the incident to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred. It occurred early in our work this year. May I refresh the recollection of the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; I should be very glad to have the Senator from Kansas do so.

Mr. REED. As I recall, there was discussion in the committee to the effect that there had been an intention to abolish the Alley Dwelling Authority.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. REED. Last year the Appropriations Committee of the Senate believed it had succeeded in doing so, and wonderment was expressed as to how the Alley Dwelling Authority had managed to survive. Twelve thousand dollars had been appropriated for it, which was an insignificant amount compared with what the Alley Dwelling Authority had previously spent. That was one of the reasons why the Appropriations Committee carefully inquired into the matter in the course of handling the independent offices bill. These additional expenditures, which are not definitely located anywhere, were apparently made from an emergency fund given to the President.

Mr. McKELLAR. I cannot enlighten the Senator as to the source from which the money came or how it was paid, but I feel that when the Constitution imposes upon the Senate of the United States the duty of inquiring into the qualifications of officers to ascertain whether they are doing their duty properly and gives to the Senate the right of confirmation we ought to carry out that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. President, I next come to the Civil Service Commission, which has 232 employees drawing more than $4,500. They are not appointed by the President, not confirmed by the Senate, not appointed by the courts, and not appointed by the heads of departments, as the Constitution requires. That is 232 employees out of 7,626.

The next department of importance is the Federal Security Agency, with 969 employees receiving yearly salaries of over $4,500, amounting to a total of $5,436,000 a year. They are appointed by Tom, Dick, and Harry. We do not know who appointed them.

I come next to the Federal Works Agency, with 679 employees receiving yearly salaries of more than $4,500, with a yearly pay roll of $3,802,400. Who in the world knows who appoints the employees of the Federal Works Agency? Does any Senator know? If he does, I should like to have him inform me.

I next come to the Interstate Commerce Commission, an old and fine commission. It has 333 employees receiving more than $4,500 a year, with a pay roll of $1,864,000. They are not appointed by the constitutional agencies. The commissions are not departments, as has been held time and again. The courts have held that commissions and independent agencies are not departments within the terms of the Constitution.

The Maritime Commission has 297 employees each receiving more than $4,500 a year and a pay roll of $1,663,000.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table showing employees receiving over $4,500, number of employees, and estimated annual salaries, or both, based on figures for the month of October 1942.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. McNARY. Am I correct in interpreting the Senator's statement to mean that he wants to pass on the qualifications through the process of confirmation of all these employees?

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, no; only those whose compensation is more than $4,500.

Mr. McNARY. I am reliably informed that that group exceeds 20,000 in number.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is about 27,000.

Mr. McNARY. Very well; 27,000. Then, the Senator wants to pass on each of those 27,000 cases?

Mr. McKELLAR. I want their appointments sent to the Senate and approved by the Senate. Approximately that many appointments are now sent to the Senate. The passage of this bill would about double the number. I have figured it, and I think the Senate takes about one two-hundredth of its time in acting on Executive appointments. We could well afford to devote one one-hundredth of our time to see that officials are employed in accordance with the terms of the Constitution.

Mr. McNARY. May I make a further inquiry, if it will not disturb the distinguished Senator?

Mr. McKELLAR. It will not disturb me at all.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator want to pass upon the employees of the Federal Trade Commission and the Interstate Commerce Commission and other public agencies in the 48 States of the Union? Has he time for that as acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not proposed to confirm the commissions in the States, but to confirm certain of their employees getting over $4,500.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is complaining about——

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not complaining; I am merely stating the facts.

Mr. McNARY. Let me finish, if the Senator please. He is complaining that the Senate ought to have the right to pass upon every individual employee of every agency of the Government who receives a salary in excess of $4,500.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I repeat, there are 27,000 in that group?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. Does the Senator have the time, able, patient, and industrious as he is, and acting chairman of the largest committee having the heaviest responsibility of any in the Senate, to pass upon the appointment of 27,000 employees drawing salaries in excess of $4,500? I myself have not the time; I have not the inclination, and I think something would be wrong with my head if I did have.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes, I have.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. It has been stated there are about 27,000 employees in this group. Perhaps if it was required that their names be sent to the Senate for confirmation, the number might be cut 50 percent, which would be a magnificent thing for the taxpayers.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt it would be.

Mr. CHANDLER. The mere fact that confirmation by the Senate was required would keep the heads of boards and bureaus and commissions from employing people and sending them all over the United States without the knowledge of Congress. There is an element involved in this matter of saving money on behalf of the greatly and heavily overburdened taxpayers of the United States, and, in my opinion, that is quite an item.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator and agree with him.

Mr. McNARY. My sympathy has long been aroused by the plight of the taxpayer, but I do not think we could start by this little sand on the beach to balance the budget.

Mr. President, answering the larger problem, I have sat here uncomplaining and heard the clerks of the Senate read the names of appointments under the Manpower Commission. It will be recalled that in the law with reference to that Commission there was a limitation on the right of appointment similar to that sought now to be imposed by the pending bill; but I have not yet heard one complaint of any appointment or heard a request that any appointments go over.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, yes; day before yesterday——

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the rule of the Senate requires that a Senator address the Chair before interrupting in debate.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Yes; but the Senator yielded to me, and I should like to finish what I had in mind to say. The nominations under the War Manpower Commission have all been confirmed en bloc. That is what we call routine confirmations. No Senator has asked to have one go over; no Senator has inquired into the ability or qualifications of any of the appointees. I want to know what is the purpose of this desire to pass on the appointment of these employees when no one heeds the nominations after they are sent to the Senate. I do not want to assume that responsibility. I shall discuss the matter later, however, and I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. In a moment I shall yield to the Senator from Kentucky, but I desire first to answer a statement by the Senator from Oregon. I think day before yesterday an appointment under the Manpower Commission was before the Senate. It appeared that the appointee had been designated for Washington. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] did not know him, and, as a matter of fact, as I understood, the appointee was not for the State of Washington but for the city of Washington.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask the Senator to wait for a moment. The Senator from Washington asked that the nomination go over, and it went over. The Senator from Washington looked into the matter, ascertained that it was not an appointment in his State, that the appointee was all right, and, in due course, the nomination was confirmed. The very fact that nominations have to come before the Senate for confirmation makes the appointing power exceedingly careful to select the right kind of men for appointment in the first instance. It makes for good government; it makes for honest government; and, as the Senator from Kentucky said a few moments ago, instead of 27,000 men being appointed I think probably not half that number of names would be submitted to the Senate because it would be found that a greater number was not necessary. As we all know, the departments are growing by leaps and bounds. For instance, I take the B. E. W. which has been mentioned; it has all told today employees to the number of 2,620, although it was never heard of until December 1942, which, as I recall, was the date it was established—2,620 employees in 6 months is going pretty rapidly. When I find that out of that number 480 are drawing over $4,500, it is time that somebody should look into it.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Oregon, and will yield to the Senator from Kentucky in a moment.

Mr. McNARY. I hesitate to disturb the continuity of the Senator's splendid address.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have been disturbed so often that one or two more interruptions will not make any difference.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator is courteous and always pleasant.

Mr. President, with regard to the incident to which the Senator from Tennessee has referred affecting the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE], I was present in the Senate on that day; it was my business to be here. Plainly the record on its face indicated the nominee was appointed from the District of Columbia. That was overlooked by the Senator from Washington. He used the occasion as a text for a sermon, namely, that he had not been consulted in the case of appointments made for his State. I think he should have been consulted. The Senator from Washington thought he had been overlooked. That, however, has no relation to the proposal of the Senator from Tennessee of having the Senate pass on the appointments of 27,000 employees.

I might make my case personal. I am probably not entitled to any consideration in my State in connection with appointments, and I do not think there has been an employee under any agencies appointed concerning whom I have been consulted. I have said, "It is your responsibility; I do not care whom you appoint."

Mr. McKELLAR. It is very easy for the "bureaucrats" to consult the Senator under those circumstances.

Mr. McNARY. The point I want to make is that the Senator in his bill has provided a qualification, as was so well stated by my excellent friend, the able Senator from Michigan, based upon a salary limitation. The O'Mahoney amendment tends to make a distinction and base it on the yardstick of policy-making positions.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; and the policy makers are those who pass upon the question of who are policy makers and who are not. It is left to the bureau to determine who are policy makers. The result is that, instead of having 27,000 names submitted to the Senate under the $4,500 limitation, there would under the O'Mahoney proposal be only about 13,000, as I recall the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, of policy makers, because policy makers themselves determine who are policy makers and who are not policy makers. We would not get very far by that proposal.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I probably should not intrude so long upon the time of the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, but, if he reads and understands section 2 of the O'Mahoney amendment, he will see that it provides for direct action of Congress prescribing who are policy-making officers.

Mr. McKELLAR. The same provision is in the amendment reported by the committee, but the $4,500 provision makes it perfectly clear, so that those who run may read, so that anyone may understand, so that there cannot be any doubt that there cannot be any finagling about who is a policy-making individual and who is not. For instance, a great man like Mr. Jesse Jones stated he was not a policy maker. I should take him to be one.

Mr. McNARY. Will the Senator permit me to discuss that for a moment?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I am again imposing on the Senator, but I know the Senator's kindly disposition.

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Jesse Jones, the Secretary of Commerce, has stated, as the able Senator has said, that he is not a policy-making officer. He comes under the provision we are discussing. He runs a corporation organized by the Government, hence it becomes a Federal agency. Then the Senator reads his testimony quite at length, and discusses the B. E. W., which is not an agency set up under the laws of the Federal Government. I would cure the O'Mahoney amendment by inserting in it the words "all agencies created by law or by Executive order." The point Jones complains about is that he, on a directive, must give money to Mr. Perkins, and he says he has no discretion in the matter. Why? Because Congress has not passed upon the validity of this agency, nor has it authorized it. But the insertion in the O'Mahoney amendment I have suggested would cover the B. E. W.

Mr. McKELLAR. That applies to many others.

Mr. McNARY. The appointments of policy-making officials in that agency would have to come to the Senate for confirmation, just as those in any Federal-controlled agency or Federal-created agency do. I think that, in arguing the matter, the Senator has overlooked that point, and I say that would be covered by such a modification of the language as I have indicated.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that if the Senator looks into it, with his agile mind, he will find that the Committee on the Judiciary, by a vote of 10 to 4, reported the pending bill as it is, and that they have done about the best possible job.

I now come to another reason why the bill should be passed. For years we have been adopting a very crude way of showing our indignation at certain officers of the Government. I say "We." I do not know whether I have taken part in that or not. I believe I did attempt to on one occasion, but upon more mature reflection I am not sure that it is a correct method.

We have a bill before the Committee on Appropriations at this time which directs that no part of the appropriation shall be paid to certain individuals. One of them is a man by the name of Goodwin B. Watson. Another one is a man from Richmond, Va., whose father was once Ambassador to Germany, and I have forgotten his name for the moment.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is Dodd.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes; William E. Dodd, Jr. The third one is a man from Chicago, and his name is Robert Morss Lovett.

It seems as if someone has dug up the information that some of these men belonged to a few Communist organizations, and a few other organizations destructive of government. I think the Department of Justice calls them subversive organizations. I think one man was a member of 140 such subversive organizations, perhaps not all of them subversive, but many of them. He seemed to take a perfect delight in joining organizations.

The Senate and the House have tried to provide many ways of removing these men out of office. A year or 2 ago we went so far as to withdraw an appropriation for this man Goodwin B. Watson. Immediately either Tom, Dick, or Harry appointed Mr. Watson to a position as interpreter of reports from foreign governments, and he is now the interpreter of foreign reports. He gets the reports on the wire or by telephone. He is a linguist, it seems, and confidential reports from foreign governments are submitted to him. I do not know whether he is a Communist or not, but he belongs to a number of Communist organizations. The pending bill would take care of that situation, and such a man would not be appointed, because the Senate would not confirm a man of that stripe for an important place such as he now holds.

Where committees of Congress, or where the Congress itself withdraw money for the payment of the salary of that kind of a man, it looks as if it is singling the man out. I think the correct way to handle such a matter would be for the House, if the Members of the House felt the man was not fit, to impeach him, because he is an officer of the Government and subject to impeachment, and that matter could be tried out. That would be a cumbersome method. The pending bill would take care of such a situation. We would not have such a man in the Government. None of us here are Communists. We do not want our Government run on a Communist basis. That is another reason why I think the bill should be passed.

If the matter were left to the O'Mahoney amendment, in such a case the first report would be that none of the three gentlemen involved was a policy-making individual. One of them happens to be an assistant to the Secretary of the Virgin Islands, or the Vice Governor.

The committee did not report my bill, by the way. They prepared a bill of their own, which I think is better than my bill. I think it would be more effective, and I am supporting the committee bill with all my heart.

There are one or two other matters to which I wish to refer, and then I shall be through. I am sorry I have kept the Senate this long. But I promised to yield to the Senator from Kentucky, who was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Oregon concluded, and I yield now to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was called to the door of the Senate, and was absent for a moment.

I think that at some time in the not-too-distant future it will not be considered unimportant if Congress shall undertake to save some of the money of the people of the United States. I think the pending bill will have a rather salutary effect on the bureaucrats who appoint without regard to the representatives of the people and without regard to the money involved. All they want to do is to fill jobs and pay out money. They have nothing to do with the collection of taxes; they are not interested in the collection of taxes; but when we have to have tax money, and taxes must be levied on the people of the United States, they always come to Congress.

It is not too much of a task to impose upon a Member of the Senate to ask him to give some information to the Senate about persons living in his own State. As chairman of a subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs, I happen to have referred to me appointments to the Manpower Commission. We will send a letter to a Member of the Senate saying to him, "This appointment has been tendered, and is to be presented to the Senate for its advice and consent." An incident illustrating this matter arose here day before yesterday, to which the Senator from Tennessee referred. The Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] did not know whether a certain nominee was from his State or from the District of Columbia, so the nomination was passed over upon his suggestion. But I stated to the Senator from Washington on that occasion that I was virtually certain that the nominee could not have been from his State, because if he had been, unless the Senator approved it, the nomination would not have been presented to the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. President, the bureaucrat is the one who says whether a certain person employed in the Government of the United States is a policy-making official. The Congress of the United States does not make the decision. The bureaucrat decides whether an official is sufficiently important to be a policy-making official. Then such an official makes policies, he makes regulations, he construes regulations, and the people of the United States have to abide by them. No matter how much misery and agony it occasions them, the people have no recourse. I am unwilling to say that a United States Senator does not have sufficient time, or inclination, or disposition, or common sense to determine whether an employee making $4,500 a year shall make policy for the Government. I am also unwilling to say that it is not important that we consider the saving of a little money. Mr. President, even though we save but a little money here and a little money there, the saving of a great many little sums in the aggregate will eventually total a great sum of money. I am willing to join with the Senator from Tennessee in an endeavor to reduce useless and foolish spending, and in that way bring some measure of relief to the too heavily burdened taxpayers of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall yield to the Senator from Nebraska in a moment. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky, who is the head of the subcommittee having to do with the confirmation of officers in the War Manpower Commission under the provisions of a law enacted some time ago, which is exactly in line with the pending bill, but which applied only to the War Manpower Commission, if he does not believe that we are obtaining a better grade of employees and officers in that Commission by reason of the passage of that law?

Mr. CHANDLER. The fact that the commission knows that appointees to it are to be scrutinized by the United States Senate unquestionably, in my opinion, results in better appointments being made, the appointment of more persons who are capable and better able to perform the tasks to which they are appointed. I think the Senator from Tennessee is entirely correct in that respect.

Mr. McKELLAR. I thank the Senator from Kentucky. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to ask a question. As I understand, the only difference between Senators who are discussing this matter is whether the best appointments can be secured by providing for a salary division above which appointees are to be confirmed by the Senate, or through examination by the heads of various agencies of personal qualifications of prospective appointees. The Senator from Kentucky made a statement a moment ago which interested me. He said that the very fact that so great a number of appointments must be submitted to the Senate for confirmation would in itself immediately result in reducing the number of appointments made. I think that statement is very constructive and very convincing, and I wish to thank the Senator from Kentucky for it.

I desire to go a step further and ask the Senator if he would like to make an observation with respect to whether or not under the O'Mahoney amendment the term "policy-making official" can be defined? The question has been asked whether such a definition could be accomplished through providing a salary limitation or division. I wish to ask the Senator whether he believes such a definition can be made in the way here proposed? Further, does the Senator believe officials making appointments can get around a provision with respect to policy-making officials, in such a manner as finally to appoint whomever they wish to have appointed? In the Senator's opinion, is there any difference between the two methods proposed, and does the Senator think the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming would cure the situation?

Mr. CHANDLER. I think the better way to handle the situation is by providing a salary limitation above which appointees shall be confirmed by the Senate. With respect to the question of whether those making appointments can get around a provision with respect to policy-making officials, I should say that if they want to get around it they may try to do so; they may try to find a way to avoid the provision. As I recall, the limitation provided in the original bill was $3,500 or $3,600.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; it was $4,500.

Mr. CHANDLER. The $4,500 provision was adopted by the committee. I think that is the better way to handle the situation.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I am one of those old-fashioned persons who believe in the Constitution of the United States with all my heart. I believe in all its provisions. The Constitution was not in force 155 years ago. In those 155 years, by reason of standing by its Constitution, our country, from being one of the lowliest on earth, has come to occupy the highest place among the governments of the world. We have accomplished that by standing steadfastly by the Constitution of the United States through all these years.

Why at this hour should we leave the Constitution and throw it on the scrap heap? We have all sworn to uphold it. The Constitution is perfectly plain with respect to the method by which persons should be appointed to office. They should be appointed to office either by the President, by and with the consent of the Senate; or by the President, if the Congress gives him that power, and the Congress has not given him that power; or by the courts, if the Congress has given the courts that power, and it has done so in a very limited way; or by the heads of departments, and the Congress has never given them that power.

Mr. President, we have shown the world that a democracy under the Constitution is the greatest and best form of government. We have shown the world that a government of the people, by the people, and for the people is the best government. We have shown the world, in the words of Lincoln, that such a government shall not perish from the earth.

When this Government was formed the administrative and executive functions were placed in the hands of the President, but in many instances limitations were placed on the President's power. One of the most important of his powers, of course, is the selection of persons who shall aid the President in administering or executing the laws of the United States. The President, under the Constitution, has power to appoint members of his Cabinet, who are heads of departments, but this power is subject to the right of the Senate to approve such appointments.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I have a very high and fond regard for the notable and noble document referred to by the Senator—our Constitution. Where in the Constitution is there any provision which requires confirmation of appointees receiving $4,500? Perhaps I have overlooked it. Perhaps it is in the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. No; not in those words. But here is the language of the Constitution:

> The President * * * shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint * * * all other officers of the United States.

All other officers of the United States. That covers all the $4,500 men just as truly as the pending bill covers them. That provision covers "all officers of the United States."

Mr. McNARY. Pardon me——

Mr. McKELLAR. I will ask the Senator to wait a moment. The language of the Constitution continues—> whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

This is the clause to which the Senator perhaps referred:

> But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone—

The Congress has not done that. The Congress has never by law vested the appointment of officers in the President alone. There is no such law on the books. In the next place—> in the courts of law—

The Congress has done that in a few instances—> or in the heads of departments.

Strange as it may seem, the Congress has never passed a law vesting the right to appoint in the heads of departments.

Under those circumstances my bill is directly in the line of the Constitution, and it simply establishes the dividing line above which are the officers who in the opinion of Congress, come within the provisions of the Constitution.

The Senator from Oregon said that I am a stickler for the Constitution. I admit it; I am proud of it. I do not know how long I shall be here, but so long as I happen to remain a Member of the Senate and so long as I happen to be on the earth I shall be a thousand percent for the Constitution. I think it is the noblest work of man. I do not think another instrument of government was ever penned which is better for the people, which is better for the country, and which makes for better government. If we stand by it we shall continue to grow and prosper. When we throw it aside we are likely to have anarchy and disaster in this country.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield. Indeed, I shall yield the floor if the Senator desires to have me do so.

Mr. McNARY. No; I would not ask that of the Senator. I rise to say that I am inspired by the Senator's energy in his devotion to the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad someone is; we hear so little of it in this Chamber, that I am glad to know the Senator from Oregon is inspired by a friendly reference to that now seemingly discarded document.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, since the Senator seemed a moment ago to censure the Congress for not obeying the mandate of the Constitution and requiring confirmation by the Senate of various officials who were appointed long, long ago, I may say I recall that about a year ago I was present at one of the most impressive services I ever heard in this Chamber. At that time high eulogies were paid the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee. I took a part in those eulogies. At that time reference was made to the Senator's long membership in this body—a membership which, on March 4, I think was 26 years. I think he previously served approximately 14½ years in the House of Representatives. The 26 years plus the 14 years make 40 years during which the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee has represented the people of his delightful State. However, not until last month has he tried to enforce this mandate of the Constitution.

Mr. McKELLAR. Oh, I say to my dear friend, not once but a hundred times have I endeavored to place this sort of an amendment in our laws. If any members of the Appropriations Committee are here they will bear witness that, in season and out of season, I have uniformly stood, during my entire service in the Congress, for such an amendment. I must say that the Senator from Oregon was a little generous in describing the length of my service; he described it as being a little longer than it actually has been. I have been in the Senate 26 years, and was a Member of the House of Representatives for 6 years, making a total of 32 years in all. Let me say that during the entire course of my service I have stood for the confirmation by the Senate of the United States of the officers of this Government. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who is doing me the honor of listening to me at this moment, is a member of the Appropriations Committee; and he has heard me there, in season and out of season, advocate the confirmation by the Senate of the officers of the Government. I ask the Senator from Wyoming if that is not so?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am glad to say that of course that has been my experience with the Senator in that committee; and, also, I remember very well that when I served with the Senator on the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, of which he is the distinguished chairman, he and I disagreed at that time over the manner in which postmasters should be appointed and confirmed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. At that time I stood for and worked for the extension of the merit system for the appointment of postmasters, while the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee wanted the system to remain upon the old basis.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wanted first-class, second-class, and third-class postmasters to be confirmed by the Senate. I do not think I ever stood for a worthier method of appointment. The Post Office Department has the finest system of any department of the Government. It has been a great success. No department of the Government is more successful than the Post Office Department at this time, as was disclosed in the Appropriations Committee the other day. Notwithstanding the fact that salaries in the Department have been raised probably $100,000,000, that departmental mail amounts to $73,000,000 more; that soldiers' free mail—which is perfectly proper—amounts to $50,000,000 more, the Post Office Department has been administered so honestly, efficiently, and fearlessly under the good old constitutional system of having its officers appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, that today it stands out among all other departments and activities of Government, and it has worthy officers. It never was more prosperous than it is today, and it is believed that it will make enough revenue to pay the billion dollars it will cost to operate it.

Mr. President, I desire to say—and again the Senator from Wyoming will verify what I say, because for a long time he was a distinguished member of the Post Office Department; he was appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and made a very efficient and able First Assistant Postmaster General——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator from Tennessee is very kind in his personal remarks. I venture now simply to add a word to what he has said. Recognizing the force and virtue of the provision of the Constitution which requires the Senate to confirm the nominations of certain officers—ambassadors, judges, and the like—and which also provides that Congress may by law require the confirmation of others, I desire again to emphasize the fact that that provision of the Constitution contains specific language which authorizes the appointment of inferior officers without the advice and consent of the Senate. Therefore, as I said yesterday, the whole argument, beyond any question, is whether Congress shall undertake the perfectly tremendous task of confirming the great army of employees who by no stretch of the imagination exercise any policy-making functions, or whether it is in the interest of good government and the maintenance of the separation of the powers of government to permit the Executive to select employees in accordance with the merit system. My view is that the latter should be done. The Senator from Tennessee disagrees.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator will recall that, so far as the War Manpower Commission is concerned, the law now provides for confirmation. Does he know that the Committee on Military Affairs say they make the recommendations of confirmations without the slightest let or hindrance, that they are not overworked, and that the system has worked admirably? I do not think there is a Senator now present who is not perfectly delighted that the nominations of new officials in the Manpower Commission who are appointed in the various States are first submitted to the Senate, and then, under our rules, to the Senators from the particular States concerned. Why should that course not be followed in all cases? It can be followed in all cases only if we pass a bill similar to the one now pending. The trouble with the amendment of the Senator from Wyoming is that if, under the Senator's amendment, the bureaucrats are given the authority to say who is a policy-making official—I am willing to hazard this prediction—we shall have fewer policy-making officials in this Government than we ever before have had in our Government's history.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, let me say that the amendment which is offered on behalf of the minority would not leave that decision to the heads of the departments at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. The language of the amendment is the same as that of the original bill. The only substantial difference between the bill with the Senator's amendment and the bill reported by the committee is the provision which makes salaries of $4,500 or more the test. The Senator merely thinks that a man who is receiving $4,500 or more is or should be a policy-making official. That is the only difference.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly; that is what I have said from the beginning. Take for example the War Manpower Commission officials. Under the amendment, they would be brought in under subsection (c).

Mr. McKELLAR. Only the heads.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming how the dollar-a-year men would be affected by his amendment or by the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Under the amendment proposed by the minority—that is to say, the amendment bearing my name—dollar-a-year men exercising policy-making powers would be affected. However, of course, since part of the policy-making definitions are contained in the bill as reported by the majority, such officials would also be covered by the bill, too.

Mr. LUCAS. In the majority report?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. Dollar-a-year men are covered in that; are they?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct—by the policy-making definition.

POST-WAR AIMS OF UNITED NATIONS

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, a gentleman by the name of William Philip Simms writes a column for the Washington Daily News. I understand that his column is syndicated through a number of newspapers in this country. Last night I read an article from the pen of Mr. Simms, which interested me greatly, particularly in view of the interest in the subject of his column which is being manifested today throughout our country. That manifestation of interest is so great that I thought perhaps it would be well to bring this particular column to the attention of Members of this body and of the American people, particularly at this time. As I have stated, the people of the world are interested at this hour in the subject matter of Mr. Simms' column of yesterday. I read:

— SAUCE FOR GOEBBELS

(By William Philip Simms)

Signs point to a new effort by the United States, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union to redefine their post-war objectives. Unless some of the existing uncertainty is cleared away, the peace plans of the United Nations may as well be written in sand.

Under Secretary of State Sumner Welles, for instance, has just made another of his widely acclaimed speeches on peace aims. He called for international cooperation "to see to it that the world is maintained inviolate." To do this, he said, there would have to be a "combination of armed forces" to maintain order, and a world court to settle disputes between nations.

Complementary plans were proposed by the 44 nations attending the Food Conference at Hot Springs. They drew up resolutions calling for a world free from want. But it was unanimously agreed this would not be possible unless there was also freedom from fear.

Today, however, there is no such thing as freedom from fear, even as between members of the United Nations. Some of our allies are afraid they may be dismembered or wiped out altogether by the action or tacit consent of their own partners.

On the fighting front, the war is going very well indeed for the United Nations. On the diplomatic front it is going less well, and it is betraying no secret to say so. Nor does it serve any useful purpose to soft-pedal this fact. On the contrary, as long as the Allies do nothing to make freedom from fear a reality within the grand alliance itself, it will continue to be the biggest propaganda asset in the hands of the enemy.

In United Nations circles here, therefore, an early meeting between President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill, and Marshal Stalin is regarded as imperative. Or if they can't make it because of the war, they should seek to accomplish the same purpose in some other way.

"We have got to make up our minds very soon," one of the most brilliant diplomats in this country said to the writer, "whether the United Nations are going to observe the letter and the spirit of the Atlantic Charter and the 'four freedoms,' or turn back the clock and follow the old law of the jungle. If the former, a fine new world is possible, with peace and order and work and food for everybody. If the latter, another war will follow this one, and after that another and another, until we either come to our senses or are exterminated."

It is regarded here as a sad commentary that despite pacts, pledges, treaties, and speeches, some of the smaller allies have reason to believe they are in danger of losing territorial or sovereign rights to certain of their larger allies. Soviet spokesmen have openly advanced territorial claims in eastern Europe, and British and American voices have indicated that these claims may not be contested in London or Washington.

Without going into the justice or injustice of these claims, the point is that they are creating doubts in the minds of the peoples of all the little countries of Europe and thereby playing into the hands of Hitler and his propagandists. They point to Poland, to mention another ally, and remark that after helping to defeat the Axis she may be partitioned by her own associates.

It is widely felt here that the United Nations, especially the Big Three in Europe, must put their house in order. They need only to come out boldly, say what they mean by the Atlantic Charter, and pledge themselves irrevocably to its terms. Until they do, the situation will remain duck soup to Dr. Goebbels.

If the Allies cannot do this now, they certainly will not be able to do so after the armistice when they no longer have such vital need for each other. If they can't agree now, there is little hope for a United Nations after the war. And without a United Nations, the post-war plans of Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Welles, and others aren't worth the paper they are written on.

Mr. President, I was vividly impressed by that article, particularly in view of the fact that you and I and every other Member of this body have heard the present chaotic diplomatic situation discussed day after day, particularly since the arrival in the United States of that distinguished and great patriot, Winston Churchill. I recall, Mr. President, with honor to myself, that I was privileged to hear Mr. Churchill. I must admit, in perfect candor and frankness, that to hear him always provides me with unlimited inspiration, because in him and from him flows inspiration for every patriot, for every man who loves his own country better than he loves any other country upon the face of the earth.

I take off my hat to Mr. Churchill. I compliment him by saying that in my opinion he is one of the greatest patriots the world has ever known. The people throughout the world admire a man who has vision and courage. With his patriotic inclinations, because he is ever looking out for the people of his Empire, Mr. Churchill is to be commended and congratulated by the peoples of the whole earth, and loved, admired, and appreciated by the people of the British Empire.

I make mention of that distinguished, world-known patriot, ever interested in the welfare and future of his country. I recall vividly that in his closing remarks in the House of Representatives, where the Members of this body were privileged to attend on the day of his address, he said, according to my recollection, that he hopes for an early meeting between himself, President Roosevelt, and Marshal Stalin, the dictator of the great Soviet Empire of Asia. I was happy indeed that Mr. Churchill advised us then in great candor that he hoped soon for such a meeting. I am inclined personally to believe that the chaotic political situation which exists throughout the world today would be greatly relieved by such a meeting between Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Churchill, and Mr. Stalin. In such a meeting those three world leaders would each be afforded an opportunity to ascertain what is in the minds of the others.

That is just what the American people today are desirous of being told. The statements we read daily in the newspapers and magazines of the country, as well as the statements the American people and others throughout the world hear over the radio from day to day, are in a sense so conflicting that, as Mr. Simms states, some definite decision as to the objectives of the United Nations should be reached.

When Mr. Stalin, Mr. Churchill, and Mr. Roosevelt meet—as I hope they will, and the sooner the better—I have in mind some questions which they might ask one another, and which might well be answered now.

As Mr. Simms has stated, if they are not clarified now, at a time when our brothers united with us in this world conflict need us, certainly we cannot expect a settlement according to our desires after they have reached a time when our services will no longer be so largely needed.

The questions which I have in mind are merely questions of the people of America, as well as those of other nations, and uppermost in the minds of our brethren of the United Nations who today are living in fear that their countries shall not be returned to them, that they shall not be permitted to govern them as they so desire, or that they will be swallowed up and digested by some of the larger of the United Nations. The questions to which I refer are these:

After we have won the war, as we are sure to do, what will become of Poland? What will become of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania? What will become of Finland, Norway, Denmark, and Sweden? What will become of Bessarabia? What will become of a part of Bulgaria?

I make mention of those particular sections of the world over which and around which we are fighting because newspaper writers and commentators over the radio have repeatedly told the American people that the spokesmen for Mr. Stalin, who are looking out after Russia's interests, have said without hesitation that when the war is over they expect to take for the Soviet Union, Poland, Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania. Some of those spokesmen have gone so far as to say that they expect to take over Finland, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, retake Bessarabia from Rumania, and a bite out of Bulgaria.

The American people, the people of Poland—where the war started and over which it started—the people of Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Finland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark, are all anxious to know whether or not it is actually in the mind of Mr. Stalin to take over their countries by force and bring them by force into the Soviet Union regardless of what the United Nations have to say about it in utter disregard of the Atlantic Charter.

We have all read from day to day throughout the columns of the press that a controversial point exists as to whether or not the United States of America, or whether or not Great Britain itself, will object strenuously now or later to Mr. Stalin, our ally, a brother of the United Nations, to taking over those countries and forcing them into his union. That is one of the questions uppermost in the minds of the American people, and particularly uppermost in the minds of the people of the countries which I have twice enumerated this afternoon.

There are other questions which I wish to ask. These questions have been suggested by constituents in my State of North Carolina, as well as citizens of other States. They are in reference to what will take place in the post-war period, and Mr. Simms has pointed out in his article declaring that no portion of the answer should be secret. We must settle now, while our allies need our help, what is to be done in the post-war period, rather than await the time when they no longer need us as badly as they do at this hour.

Other questions which I wish to have answered are: When we have succeeded in retaking the Dutch East Indies, Java, and Sumatra, from the hands of the slant-eyed Japanese, our deadly vermin-like enemy, after, perhaps, we have lost thousands and thousands of men, are we going to turn the Dutch East Indies back to the Netherlands, or are we going to deliver the Dutch East Indies, Java, and Sumatra, and the islands thereabout, over to the Javanese, the rightful owners, to administer, as we are planning to return the Philippines to the Filipinos to govern.

After we have won the victory, which we are certain to win—it is merely a question of time, and I hope that time is not far off—when we have succeeded in driving the Japanese from Burma, from Rangoon northward all along the Burma Road, are we going to redeliver the country to our British cousins, or will we turn the country over to the owners, the Burmese, to administer themselves, as we are fighting today to turn the Philippines over to the Filipinos to govern in the sort of way they see fit.

Mr. President, another question which has been directed to me on many occasions is—when we have succeeded in driving the Japanese from Hong Kong, are we going to turn that island back to our ally, Great Britain, or will we return that section of China to the Republic of China where it rightfully belongs and where our ally, the courageous Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, is fighting for the liberation of the world? I make mention of the questions I have stated for the reason that the same inquiries, no doubt, have been directed to other Members of this body.

Mr. President, we are fighting for the freedom of the peoples of the world. This war as I recall, began over certain territory in Poland, the Polish corridor, as it was called, and war was declared by Great Britain on September 3 at 11 in the morning and was followed at 5 o'clock that afternoon by France who declared war. They went to war for the purpose of preserving the Poles and Poland, they went to war to see that Poland was provided protection against a greedy and aggressive Germany. Now I ask, Will it come to the point where we shall have to cross arms with one of our allies over the integrity of Poland itself? God forbid. We may have another war among the United Nations over the same territory that brought about the present war.

These questions are being asked throughout the whole world at this hour.

Heretofore, Mr. President, I have always felt that post-war matters should not be discussed until after we win the war. I have felt that we should devote every ounce of energy and strength, first, to the winning of the war, after which we should settle at the peace table with our brothers in arms; but these questions are constantly popping up in print and over the radio, and I agree with Mr. Simms that when Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Stalin and Mr. Churchill meet they should settle such matters, and let us know exactly what is going to become of this territory and that territory after the war is over.

I have been opposed to every resolution submitted in this body and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations of which I am honored to be a member, because, as I have stated, I felt that all our energy and thought should be devoted, first, to winning the war, after which we who are now on such friendly terms could, without question, settle all the issues between ourselves. But from all we hear and from all we read, if, eventually, we shall need a world police force, we shall, perhaps, have to use it to keep the United Nations from one another's throats, if we are to believe what we hear, rather than to keep peace throughout the world.

I have in mind now a resolution which struck me with great force several weeks ago when it was submitted by a number of our most distinguished colleagues in this body. They are the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH]. To those Senators I extend my congratulations for their foresight in having offered the resolution, and I have arrived at the point where I favor the resolution. I favor its adoption now because I think the foresight of the able Senators whose names I have mentioned is far better than the foresight of the average member of this body. I make that statement upon the record itself, and the record itself is nothing more nor less than Senate resolution 114 submitted by the distinguished Senators whom I have mentioned. The resolution reads as follows—and I hope the Senate will listen carefully to its reading:

Resolved, That the Senate advises that the United States take the initiative in calling meetings of representatives of the United Nations for the purpose of forming an organization of the United Nations with specific and limited authority—

I concur most heartily in that suggestion—

1. To assist in coordinating and fully utilizing the military and economic resources of all member nations in the prosecution of the war against the Axis.

We all support that pronouncement for we all want the cooperation of all the allied nations, regardless of their strength or present disadvantageous position, because the thing uppermost in the mind of every Member of this body and every Member of the House of Representatives and of every American is the winning of the war in which we are now participating.

2. To establish temporary administrations for Axis-controlled areas of the world as these are occupied by United Nations forces, until such time as permanent governments can be established.

That is extremely important at this time. Why? Because we are being told that perhaps some of the smaller nations, even some of those among the United Nations, are in fear that their country will not be returned to them to be governed as their people would like to have it governed, but they are in fear at this hour, as mentioned by Mr. Simms, that they will be taken over by some of the other powers. So it is well that we have before us this resolution in reference to this all-important subject.

3. To administer relief and assistance in economic rehabilitation in territories of member nations needing such aid and in Axis territory occupied by United Nations forces.

We all favor that, because we all favor doing all we possibly can to feed and clothe and house the unfortunates of foreign countres who find themselves in the position they are today and in the situation about which we read through the columns of the daily press.

4. To establish procedures and machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes and disagreements between nations,

That means between the United Nations as well as between the other nations of the world. Let me repeat it:

4. To establish procedures and machinery for peaceful settlement of disputes and disagreements between nations.

In other words, the resolution calls for a meeting of the heads of the United Nations of the world to decide now what we are going to do and how we are going to do it and when we are going to do it and where we are going to do it; and, in view of the chaotic political and diplomatic situation existing throughout the world, I say that this resolution should be adopted now in order that authority may be granted to call together the heads of the United Nations of the world, here or elsewhere, and to ascertain now as to what disposition will be made of territory after the victory shall have been won.

5. To provide for the assembly and maintenance of a United Nations military force and to suppress by immediate use of such force any future attempt at military aggression by any nation.

That the Senate further advises that any establishment of such United Nations organization provide machinery for its modification, for the delegation of additional specific and limited functions to such organization, and for admission of other nations to membership, and that member nations should commit themselves to seek no territorial aggrandizement.

There is to be no more territory seized. If the resolution of our distinguished colleagues shall be adopted by this body, and the heads of all the United Nations are brought to this Capital, or to that of the British Empire, or to Moscow, the capital of the country of that great patriot, Joe Stalin, who always is looking after his own people, I say to the Members of the Senate that we will be doing the greatest thing for our country we were ever provided the opportunity of doing, because there would be a written understanding, a written agreement, now, while we are fighting, when we need our allies and they need us, as to what will be the ultimate disposition of all this territory.

I return to paragraph 5 of the resolution, and repeat:

To provide for the assembly and maintenance of a United Nations military force and to suppress by immediate use of such force any future attempt at military aggression by any nation.

If we can adopt that resolution, if we can get the heads of the nations of the United Nations here, and agree to paragraph 5 of the resolution, if any member of the United Nations should seek or attempt to take any territory belonging to any other nation the military police force could be turned loose against that nation to stop it from doing the very thing which we are fighting against today.

So much for the resolution, Mr. President. I am sorry it has never been voted on in the Committee on Foreign Relations. If it shall ever come before the Senate, I shall vote for it, because I believe, with a great many other people, that we should settle now, before the end of the war, what the territorial boundaries are to be, and who is going to get what, and when, and where.

I admit in perfect candor that I have reversed my position; I have turned right about and taken the other viewpoint. As I stated a moment ago, I have heretofore felt that we should devote all our time and energy to winning the war first, and then settle the other questions, but if we follow that course it may be too late. The Senators are foresighted in offering this resolution, which would perhaps avoid another war and more trouble, such as that in which we find ourselves at the present time.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. O'DANIEL in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. TUNNELL. I am interested in the Senator's suggestion as to the police force. I was wondering what sized police force he thinks it would have taken, for instance, to have stopped Germany had such a provision been in effect in 1939?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I really am not prepared to answer the Senator's question, but I am always willing to attempt any sort of an answer. [Laughter.] I make the perfectly candid response that I am ready to answer whether I know much about the subject or not, after which statement I am glad to relate this little joke I once heard about Mr. Al Jolson:

Al Jolson is a blackface comedian. Many of my colleagues have met him personally, many of them have seen him on the screen, and many of them hear him once a week in his program on the radio. Some colored brethren thought he actually was one of their race. They had seen him only on the stage and in the movies, characterized as one of their race, a blackface comedian, and they invited him to deliver a speech at a banquet which was to be held at one of their lodges. He accepted. He knew that he was to talk, but he did not know what subject he was to discuss. So, when he was introduced and rose, he said, "Brethren, were any of you all born in Africa?"

"No, Brother Jolson."

"Brethren, were any of you all ever in Africa?"

"No, Brother Jolson."

"Brethren, have any of you all ever heard anything about Africa?"

"No, Brother Jolson."

"Brethren, do any of you know anything at all about Africa?"

"No, Brother Jolson."

"Then, brethren, I am going to tell you all about Africa." [Laughter.]

I will say to the Senator from Delaware that the question he propounds is very difficult to answer, for that we knew not, at the time of the event—and the answer would have to be predicated upon the question of time—as to the degree of arming that had been done by any of the nations of Europe. We had reports from time to time to the effect that Germany was rearming, and, of course, we all know that in her rearming program Germany had the assistance of the financiers of other countries of the world, some of whom are participants in the United Nations' movement with us now as allies.

As to the relative strength of Russia, we did not know about that then. Many of us predicted, as the Senator well recalls, that Russia could not last 3 weeks under the onrush and the attacks of Germany, but she has put up the most marvelous fight in all the world, inspired by the patriotism of Russia's leader, Joe Stalin. They are fighting upon Russian soil to save Russian territory for Russia, and I commend them, because nothing in the world could be more laudable than a man standing upon his own soil fighting for the continued freedom of his country and against the enslavement of his people, as Hitler had attempted to enslave the Russians.

However, prior to that, as I believe was stated by one of my colleagues a few days ago during the course of debate here, our ally, Russia, did not participate in the war until after she was attacked by Germany. We knew not the relative strength of any of them, and as to the size of the police force that would be required I really do not know.

The question of a world police force is an important one. We all want peace, we all want to guarantee peace after the war is over, and we are fighting in order that the world may everlastingly participate in and enjoy peace. Otherwise the blood and wealth and lives being poured out would be wasted. It is a question how best we can achieve peace.

I again congratulate the Senators who offered this resolution, because it will bring up the question of an international police force, and we will have an opportunity to debate it. I may be against it and the Senator may be for it, or I may be for it and the Senator may be against it. Anyway we may need a police force to keep peace among the United Nations—our allies—when the time arrives to divide up the territory. I do not challenge anyone's motives. I would not challenge the motive of any Member of this body, because I know all Senators are men of integrity. We differ quite frequently, almost daily, indeed, but no one doubts the integrity or questions the stand of any Senator.

The police force question is one which will arise, and one which probably should be debated now, while the war is progressing. That is one reason, among others, why I have reversed my position. Heretofore I have said we should wait until the end of the war before taking up that subject. I have entirely reversed myself on that question.

Mr. TUNNELL. I did not say that there was anything wrong. I simply wanted to get the Senator's ideas along that line.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that I do not know. It might be that we might be able successfully to maintain something of that sort. We are all seeking peace. Our boys are fighting and dying so that we may have peace. We want to make the peace a lasting one. The suggestion was made in the Senate that we should guarantee peace forever. Of course, we would favor such action if we believed it would result in bringing us a lasting peace. I have taken the opportunity to bring before the Senate Mr. Simms' observations as they appear in print in the columns of the Washington Daily News, because many Senators are now thinking about the subject with which Mr. Simms dealt.

I hope sincerely that no one who has heard me or anyone who will read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, will assume that I had any hidden motive in bringing the matter up. My only purpose is to forward the interest of my country. Sometimes our attitudes differ. There were many of us in this body who before the war were in favor of this or in favor of that; what is the use of a legislative body unless we can disagree? That is real democracy. There are times when the more disagreement we have the better will our Government become, because we as legislators and those whom we represent will know that a question has been debated fully and that we have arrived at the conclusion which we deem to be best for our country.

We can all discuss this subject, whether we are isolationists, nationalists, internationalists or interventionists. Many persons referred to me as an isolationist before we entered the war. Mr. President, I was an isolationist. That not only applies to the past, however. I am now an isolationist, and I am a thousand times more isolationist today than I was before we became engaged in this war.

But that is my privilege. However, I prefer to be referred to as an American Firster or a nationalist. My conception of what that privilege is probably differs with the conception held by others. The only way I can properly explain my position now, without unduly taking of the Senate's time, is simply to read correspondence which I have had with a friend. The other day I wrote to a number of friends in my State in regard to the political situation, in which I am interested. I placed a 3-cent stamp on each letter I sent out. I wrote to a friend of mine, the Honorable Fred S. Hutchins, attorney at law, Winston-Salem, N. C., as follows:

MY DEAR FRED: It is a long time before the Democratic primary of 1944. Nevertheless, I do not think it is too early to make inquiry of my personal friends as to the political situation in your county in reference to the senatorial contest in which I am interested. Therefore this letter to you.

As to the comparative strength of my announced opponent and myself, I would greatly appreciate it if at your convenience you would write me as to your opinion relative thereto.

I have taken care not to mention the name of my announced opponent. It is always my policy in a campaign not to give my opponent any publicity he does not really deserve. [Laughter.]

I would, with appreciation, welcome now any suggestions that you would make relating to the conduct of my oncoming campaign, which comment would include suggestions relative to organizing my friends and supporters in your county.

In addition to the above, if not asking too much, I would be entirely grateful if you would in your reply provide me with the names and addresses of those of your county whom you know to be favorable to my candidacy. In connection with this, of course, I will not reveal to these parties that you provided me with information to the effect that they are for me.

[Laughter.]

With personal regards, thanking you in advance, and assuring you of my deep appreciation of your friendship which I have enjoyed over the years, I am

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, it has been and is a sincere friendship, although I do not know whether Fred voted for me. [Laughter.]

As a result of that letter I received a very pertinent response in reference to my position as being an isolationist or a nationalist, and it was a very clear and frank response:

DEAR BOB: I have your letter of the 14th regarding your primary for 1944.

Mr. President, I feel at liberty to read this letter because Fred did not pledge me his support. [Laughter.]

I shall be glad to forward you some names of supporters in the county in the near future. However, I would not be your friend—

And, Mr. President, he is one of my friends. I do not know whether Fred voted for me, but that does not make any difference to me. I do not become angry with a friend simply because he does not vote for me. His opinion of me is as good as my own opinion of myself. That is the way I consider the situation. I never became angry at any Member of this body who took a position in opposition to mine, whether he was a Republican or a Democrat. I can hardly ever tell the difference between my friends, particularly at election time, because the Republicans polled 200,000 votes in my State in the last election, and I had a good many friends among those Republicans.

However, I would not be your friend if I did not tell you that, in my opinion, your stock is not as good here as it has been—

[Laughter.]

Well, I did not turn white or any other color when I read that, because I am so accustomed to disappointments that I have become accustomed to them. [Laughter.] Let me read that paragraph again lest Senators lose the point of it:

However, I would not be your friend if I did not tell you that, in my opinion, your stock is not as good here as it has been due to the most part for your reputation for being an isolationist. Most of the people in this community are with the President on his foreign policy, and particularly for cooperation after the war in maintaining the peace of the world.

Mr. President, I hope Fred is right. I hope I am wrong and that the President is right, because we are all seeking peace.

I explained this situation to Wesley McDonald when I was in your office several months ago. My opinion is that you are going to have hard sledding unless you can conscientiously cooperate in this respect.

In other words, unless I reverse the position I took prior to Pearl Harbor.

With the highest personal regards and best wishes to yourself and Wesley, I am

Sincerely yours,

FRED.

Mr. President, I had to be perfectly honest with Fred, as we all have to be, so I wrote Fred on May 25, as follows:

MY DEAR FRED: Thank you very much for your letter of May 21, contents of which I have noted very carefully, in response to my letter of inquiry regarding the primary of 1944.

I am so happy to have always my friends to speak frankly with me. I have reference to that part of your letter reading as follows:

"However, I would not be your friend if I did not tell you that, in my opinion, your stock is not as good here as it has been, due to the most part for your reputation for being an isolationist. Most of the people in this community are with the President on his foreign policy, and particularly for cooperation after the war in maintaining the peace of the world."

Fred, my position has not changed at all. If an isolationist is an individual who loves his own native country more than he loves any other country of the world, or any other part of the world; if an isolationist is one who thinks first of his own country rather than any other country; if an isolationist is one who is interested, firstly, in the people of his own country rather than those of some other country; if an isolationist is one who believes in free trade and a friendly trade with all the peoples of the world, then I am an isolationist and so are Winston Churchill and Joseph Stalin.

Of course, you know I opposed very vigorously the President's foreign policy, and in reference thereto I am attaching to this letter a short talk I made recently in the United States Senate, along with some other Senators, in regard to the extension of lend-lease, which I hope you may find time to read.

I believe in world peace but from all I can hear and from all I can observe, the very people today who are hollering the loudest for peace and who are yelling the loudest for a force to police the entire world are the very ones who were insisting upon our engaging in the war before ever we declared war.

With warm personal regards always, thanking you for having written me so frankly, and hoping that the next time you are in Washington I will have the pleasure of seeing you, or when next I am in Winston-Salem, which I hope will be at an early date, I am,

Your sincere friend,

ROBERT R. REYNOLDS,
United States Senator.

Mr. President, I thank the Senate for having listened to me so intently in my discussion of this subject in which we are all interested.

In closing, I say that any plan to guarantee the peace and the freedom for which we are fighting, under the charter for freedom, I shall be for, and every other Member of the Senate will be for, if we are conscientiously of the conviction that it will guarantee peace to the world; because many of us have sons and other close relatives in the armed services, and we are all interested in bringing them home at the earliest possible time. As the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. CHANDLER] said the other day in proposing a plan which would end the war sooner, all of us have such an interest, and we all are entitled to the expression of our views relative to world affairs.

Yes, I am proud to be a nationalist.

AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE TO REPORT BILLS

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations, which will meet tomorrow, may have authority to report at least two bills which we expect to complete tomorrow, so that they may be printed and placed on the calendar. I make the request subject, of course, to obtaining the consent which the Senator from Oregon usually grants in such cases.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, to what appropriation bills does the Senator refer?

Mr. McKELLAR. One is the agricultural appropriation bill and the other is the naval appropriation bill. I am not sure whether we shall be able to report a third bill. As the Senator knows, the subcommittees are now preparing their reports to the full committee, and the full committee is to take action tomorrow on the bills. I request authority to report the bills so that they may be printed and placed on the calendar, for the information of the Senate.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, of course, if the requested authority were granted it would be possible for the bills to be placed on the calendar and to be ready for consideration on Monday, and to be considered at that time, upon proper motion made by the Senator from Tennessee or some other Senator.

The objection I have to the requested procedure is that it does not give the Members of the Senate opportunity to consider the bills or to read the reports. When similar requests for such authority have been made in the past, I have stated that I should have no objection provided it could be understood that, after authority was granted, if objection were made when motion was made for consideration, at least 1 day might intervene during which the Members of the Senate would have an opportunity to read and study the bills and reports.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, Mr. President, I merely request the authority because the appropriation bills must be passed by the 1st of July, and for that reason we are anxious to make all possible progress.

Mr. McNARY. I, too, appreciate the necessity for progress. I want the Senate to conclude its work promptly. I want it to be concluded during this month, if possible, so that we may have a summer recess. However, I do not want to rush through with the bills, for they are important. If we are to have a motion, the first thing in the session on Monday, to proceed to the consideration of the bills and then to take up the amendments——

Mr. McKELLAR. That would not be done over the objection of the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Senate would not have much time to study them prior to their consideration. If it can be understood that, if objection is made on Monday to the consideration either of any amendment or of the whole bill, consideration would be postponed, I should have no objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if I understood the Senator from Oregon, his suggestion that no controversial questions be considered on Monday relates to amendments, rather than to the bill as a whole. There are approximately 100 amendments to the bill. I do not think there will be any objection whatever to many of them. I should like to have the Senate proceed on Monday to the consideration of the bill; and if there are any controversial items, they may be passed over.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think the Senator will appreciate that I always endeavor to be fair. If any Senator were to desire to have consideration of the bill go over, I should want him to be granted that privilege.

However, as I understand the bill, it is probable that if there are certain noncontroversial amendments they can be disposed of on Monday.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, having had the privilege of many years of experience with the able senior Senator from Oregon, and appreciating his fairness at all times, I have no objection to the suggested procedure.

Mr. McNARY. I thank the Senator. Let me say that, with the understanding that controversial amendments or even the bill as a whole may go over on objection, I am perfectly willing to agree to the request of the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I, too, am perfectly willing.

Mr. RUSSELL. I thank the Senator. That is satisfactory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Tennessee? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

THE COAL STRIKE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, today America is faced with the greatest threat on her home front since the dastardly attack at Pearl Harbor. There must be no compromise on the issue of whether

John Lewis or the constitutional authorities govern our Republic. Either the United States Government must assert control over its internal affairs or we shall face a dissolution here at home which may cause us to lose the war, and certainly will lengthen it and increase our casualties.

A surrender now to John L. Lewis, or a compromise on any vital principle, would be a declaration to the world that America is unable to prevent sabotaging of the war effort at home at a time of the greatest peril this Nation has ever faced. It would lower the morale of our sons who are fighting and dying on many foreign battlefields. It would encourage Hitler and the Japs, who would believe that, after all, America does not have the intestinal fortitude or the fighting spirit at home to support American boys who are fighting so bravely abroad. It would prove that John L. Lewis is more powerful than the Government of the United States.

It is well for the Nation to realize the extreme gravity of this situation. A Government back-down or compromise now on these issues would result in starting a train of circumstances which could readily bring disaster to the country. Other labor leaders would demand the same consideration that Lewis had been able to force from his Government by threats and coercion. What Lewis is determined to do is to secure a better settlement than any other union has been able to accomplish in time of war.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. As I understand the Senator's position, it is that we should have legislation which would make another strike impossible.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator introduced a bill which would do that by drafting strikers into the Army and reassigning them to do their work. Does not the Senator think that we should go further and fix permanent penalties upon any labor leader who would instigate or cause a strike?

Mr. BYRD. I think we should make it illegal to strike in a defense industry in time of war, during the war emergency, and we should impose penalties sufficient to prevent such strikes. I understand that in the last hour the House has passed a bill which does make it illegal to engage in a strike in a defense industry.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I think John L. Lewis should be in jail. His acts amount to treason. Lewis is as deadly an enemy of America as Hitler and Tojo. He is a more deadly enemy than Mussolini. I do not think, and the Department of Justice does not think, that today there is adequate legislation to imprison him, for the reason that the crime of treason, as defined in our statutes, would not cover his acts, because they are not willful, with criminal intent to injure this country and willfully, designedly, and intentionally to lend aid and comfort to our enemies.

I am drafting proposed legislation which would broaden the definition of the crime of treason so as to cover his situation. I hope the distinguished Senator will join me in this legislation. During the last war we put Eugene Debs in the penitentiary. Debs was given a 10-year sentence because in speeches he urged men within the draft ages not to obey the directions of the Selective Service Boards. He stated that there was no constitutional power to draft men. I think that John L. Lewis' wrong is 100 times worse than the crime for which Debs was convicted and given a sentence in the penitentiary. Debs was a life-long pacifist. In this he was following the path of his conscience. In his case there was not the greed, the insane lust for power, that there is in Lewis'.

I am heartily in favor of the Senator's bill. When it reaches the floor of the Senate, I expect to support it. I have a bill of similar nature, which is now before the Military Affairs Committee. These bills will remedy the situation. They will permanently stop strikes.

Officials of the Department of Justice also state unofficially that legislation along the line of the Senator's bill and my bill is imperative, because, although under the Selective Service Act today, we have authority to draft into the Army and reassign to work men up to 45 years of age, that authority does not extend to men between the ages of 45 and 65.

Such legislation is necessary. It will curb the greedy labor racketeer. Officials of the Department further tell me, unofficially, that it was used during the last war by Woodrow Wilson in the case of a strike at the Bridgeport Machine Tool Works, when he told the strikers that he would draft them into the Army and put them back to work unless they voluntarily returned to work. That weapon then completely solved the situation at that time. I heartily endorse the Senator's bill.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Mississippi. I am told that there are 17,000 applications for wage increases now pending before the War Labor Board. If Lewis wins, either by a compromise or actual surrender, this means the abandonment of the Little Steel formula. It follows, then, that wholesale wage increases must be granted or another epidemic of strikes will result. Another spiral of inflation will then start which may have the consequences of a national disaster. Let us understand that the future control of inflation is inseparably linked with the ultimate decision in the Lewis case.

The coal strike issue is now between the Government and the union, of which Mr. Lewis is the head. Today the American Flag is flying over every bituminous coal mine in America. This means that the United States Government is the employer. A strike or refusal to work is open defiance of the Government of the United States. If Mr. Lewis can defy his Government and the American Flag now and get by with it, what may happen when peace comes? Then America will go through the most difficult period of reconstruction of its domestic economy that has ever faced us. Then the seeds that are being sown today by the lack of courage and firmness on the part of high Government officials may sprout into domestic chaos and strife. If Mr. Lewis succeeds in defying his Government in time of war, how can he be controlled in time of peace in the volcanic readjustment period following the war?

The issue is now squarely up to Congress; and if Congress does not immediately enact adequate antistrike legislation, for the war period, then it will receive and, I think, deserve, the condemnation of the country.

It is true that just before Pearl Harbor the Smith bills were passed by the House of Representatives. Had these bills been enacted by the Senate and signed by the President, it is not likely that strikes could have occurred. This legislation was smothered in the Senate Committee on Education and Labor.

More than a year ago the Connally bill, since passed by the Senate, was removed from consideration on the Senate calendar at the direct request of the President, who said the passage of the bill would be harmful to the war effort.

Sixty days ago I introduced proposed legislation providing for a work-or-fight order for those striking in defense industries. Immediately the various departments of the Government opposed this legislation, saying that it would be harmful to national morale to require those to fight who have refused to work and produce materials for those who were fighting.

The Congress of the United States is an independent branch of the Government. It is the duty of Congress to perform its constitutional obligations, regardless of any effort on the part of the executive branch to control its actions. The Congress cannot escape responsibility to meet squarely the great emergency which now confronts us.

This situation has been temporized with long enough. The President has ordered the miners to return to work on Monday. The Congress should immediately enact legislation imposing effective penalties upon those who would sabotage our war effort at home by refusing to back up our boys on the fighting front. Any compromise on this issue is unworthy of American principles and is unjust to those Americans who are fighting and dying on many foreign battlefields.

Unless constitutional government is preserved at home we can neither win the war nor win the peace after the war. This is what we are fighting for abroad. Let us not destroy it at home.

Mr. President, I am informed that the House has passed or is about to pass an adequate antistrike bill, including amendments to the Connally bill.

The Senate should proceed immediately to act upon these amendments and, if possible, agree to them without sending the bill to conference.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I heartily concur in the remarks just made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] and want to call attention to the fact that from the very first day I became a Member of the Senate I have introduced bills, and fought for their enactment, which would outlaw labor racketeering and bring an end to this era of strikes, work slowdowns, and work stoppages which are so seriously retarding our war effort.

The coal strike is bad, but it is not the only strike now in effect in this Nation. There are many strikes in effect right now, and because of strikes more than 5,000,000 man-days of labor have been lost since Pearl Harbor.

At this time I desire to call attention to some serious consequences which result from labor leader racketeering.

I wish to read a news article which appeared in the Washington Times-Herald yesterday. The article comes by United Press from Pevely, Mo. It is as follows:

AGENT FOR STRIKERS FOUND SHOT TO DEATH

PEVELY, Mo., June 2.—Joseph "Buck" Newell, business agent for the Hoisting Engineers' Union, which halted work for nearly a week on a vital aviation gasoline pipe line to the East, was found shot to death at his home near here tonight. Police said he had been shot in the back. The strike flared into violence on several occasions, with injuries to nonunion men. Work was resumed on the project only after Gov. Forrest C. Donnel, of Missouri, called out State guards.

I read that news item for the reason that it has connection with some other news which I reported to the Senate on May 3, and which is printed on page 3825 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date. At that time I read a telegram which I had received that day from Garfield Crawford, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., in which he told of labor difficulties in Missouri, where they were endeavoring to lay the 24-inch pipe line to bring oil from Texas to the eastern seaboard. It seems that some of the labor racketeers endeavored to use force and violence on Mr. O. B. Young, of Odessa, Tex.; Mr. Robert Nickel, of Odessa; and Mr. Samuel Goodrum, of Tyler, Tex.

Those three Texas men, having experience in laying pipe lines, had gone to Missouri for the purpose of aiding in the Government project of laying the line from Texas to the East to bring our oil from Texas and the Southwest, not only for the homes and war factories in the Northeast but for use in our merchant and Navy ships and for our air bombers and tanks overseas.

When they got to the place in Missouri where the pipe line was being laid they were attacked and beaten by the "goon" squad because they would not join a union.

Here is the telegram which Mr. Crawford sent to me on May 3:

Blood will run like water in southeastern Missouri, Scott, and Girardeau Counties unless the Government steps in at once Monday to rid labor racketeers from interference with peaceful construction of 24- and 20-inch oil and gasoline pipe lines from Texas to eastern seaboard. Goon squad of American Federation of Labor gathered at Cape Girardeau and Illmo, beating up peaceful truckers delivering 24-inch pipe line; two serious fights already April 30 in railroad yards at Illmo, and April 28 in dining room of Marquette Hotel, Cape Girardeau. Officers of law, former railroad unioneers at Illmo, evidently in league with goon squad as town marshal unarmed contractor C. H. Dunn's two guards telling guards to quit railroad yards and he would protect workers; as soon as guards left goon squad moved in and almost killed three of Dunn's men. O. B. Young, of Odessa, Tex., Dunn's employee, in St. Francis Hospital, fractured skull, probably die, and no arrest made as yet.

No dispute as to wages, hours, or working conditions; only question of forcing Dunn's men to join against their will. Same situation exists with Oil States Construction Co. pipe-line laying contractors; none of Dunn's men belong to union and refuse to join.

Union racketeers have brought on three strikes in Bolz Dredging Co., laying river loop of big inch line across Mississippi from Grays Point, Mo., to Thebes, Ill. All this work is under War Emergency Pipe Line Corporation, a child of Jesse Jones' Defense Plant Corporation, a branch of Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Here is a statement George C. Bolz, president of Bolz Dredging Co.:

"I have contracts to lay three pipe lines across the Mississippi River as links in the war emergency pipe-line system. I have personally supervised all work to cause a minimum of delay. We have been faced with extreme weather conditions of high water in the river, strong winds, and heavy ice, and yet I pressed on with the work and approximately 60 percent of the work was carried on 24 hours per day. I have been 100 percent American Federation of Labor union contractor for many years. Regardless of my sincerity in performing this much-needed work and faithfully following union principles, union leaders have stopped operations and called their men away from the job at three critical periods of the work—April 2 and 6, April 9 to 11, and the last, which has not been ended, from April 28. Work on the part of our union employees has been considerably below par during this entire period from April 2 to the present time. My job is stopped because other contractors in nearby sectors of the war pipe line operate open shop, not because of any quarrel with my organization. Minutes count much, delays in vital war work as the transportation of oil and gasoline are disastrous and should not be tolerated.

"GEO. C. BOLZ,
"Geo. C. Bolz Dredging Co."

This is the message, too. This is a copy of a wire from C. W. Cromley, assistant traffic manager for War Emergency Pipe Lines, Inc., to C. Hobson Dunn, Cape Girardeau:

"Now, 27 cars pipe at Morely, Mo.; none unloaded since April 27; total of 70 cars there and en route. When will these cars be released? Must have action."

I saw these cars with pipe rusting; demurrage is piling up against contractor, $4 per day per car. Strike delaying construction; responsible for loss of 1,148 feet of extra-heavy 24-inch pipe, causing loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars to Government. Why has not Washington given this important defense work police protection like it has other defense work? This is Ickes' job, and he does not give protection. Dunn's men and Oil State Construction Co. now trying to put through 20-inch line to carry high-octane gasoline from Southwest oil fields to eastern seaboard. Subchasers, airplanes to get this fuel to carry on war in Africa and Europe. All work suspended, but upon request of War Emergency Pipe Line, Inc., Dunn must unload cars. Lives of Dunn and two guards threatened by "goon" leaders. "Goon" leaders have long criminal records; getting this for you. Chief of police of Cape Girardeau supplied me with police record of Joseph Edward Newell, St. Louis labor racketeer and heading "goon" squad. Sending you clippings from papers by mail to hotel. This is serious; help is needed and needed quick. Information given me by district attorney, Cape Girardeau County. Every day's delay means loss of 250,000 barrels high-octane gas per day to fighting forces and more than 300,000 barrels daily of crude for eastern refineries and defense factories. Texas refineries standing idle due to slow-down here.

GARFIELD CRAWFORD,
Cape Girardeau, Mo.

Please note in that telegram the name of Joseph Edward Newell.

The news article which I just read from yesterday's Washington Times-Herald gives the news of the death of this same man, Joseph "Buck" Newell, whose body had been found at his home and who had been shot in the back.

We all regret to know that there is such serious violence in this country. The coal strike is a bad thing, but there are many other strikes in progress right at the present time, and the pipe-line labor disturbance has ended very disastrously.

At the same time, it seems to me that something should be done by the Congress to prevent the use of force and violence while these men are out endeavoring to perform a useful service for their country. Thinking that something might possibly be accomplished, on May 3 I referred the matter to Attorney General Biddle, and I have received from him the following letter, dated May 21, 1943:

I have your letter of May 3, 1943, enclosing a copy of a telegram you received from Garfield Crawford, of Cape Girardeau, Mo., with reference to certain labor difficulties in Scott and Cape Girardeau Counties, Mo.

The facts as outlined in Mr. Crawford's telegram of May 3, 1943, had not been reported to me previous to the receipt of your letter. I have caused a careful examination to be made of Mr. Crawford's complaint and it has been concluded that the matters stated do not involve a violation of any Federal statute.

I bring Attorney General Biddle's letter to the attention of the Senate at this time to show that there are no Federal statutes making unlawful the labor-leader racketeering which took place in southeastern Missouri—Scott and Cape Girardeau Counties.

In this connection I wish to also call attention to Senate bill 189, which I introduced on the first day I became a Member of the United States Senate. It is the same bill which I recommended to the Texas Legislature when I was Governor of that State, and which was enacted by the Legislature of Texas. It has proven to be very beneficial in protecting employees of great industries which are taking part in the war effort. We have not had any strikes of consequence in those war industries in Texas since that bill was enacted. The bill is a simple one. It prevents strikes by outlawing the use of force and violence, without which strikes would be ineffective. Using force and violence by individuals at home to get by force what they desire is the same as individuals in other nations using force and violence to get by force what they want from other nations. We are fighting a world war to outlaw force and violence by nations. Why not practice what we preach and outlaw the use of force and violence here in our own Nation among our own citizens?

I wish to take time to read this short bill to show how simple and fair it is:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person by the use of force or violence, or threat of the use of force or violence, to prevent or to attempt to prevent any person from engaging in any lawful vocation.

SEC. 2. It shall be unlawful for any person acting in concert with one or more other persons to assemble at or near any place where a labor dispute exists and by the use of force or violence, or threat of the use of force or violence, prevent or attempt to prevent any person from engaging in any lawful vocation, or for any person to promote, encourage, or aid any such assemblage at which such force or violence, or threat thereof, is so used. As used in this section, the term "labor dispute" shall have the meaning assigned to it in section 2 (9) of the National Labor Relations Act.

SEC. 3. Any person who violates any provision of this act shall, upon conviction thereof, be imprisoned for not less than 1 year nor more than 2 years.

SEC. 4. If any provision of this act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance shall be held invalid, the validity of the remander of the act and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

As I have said, I introduced the bill the first day I was a Member of the United States Senate August 4, 1941. It is still being held in the Judiciary Committee. Since I introduced it I have offered the bill several times as amendments to other bills on the floor of the Senate, where it failed each time to receive sufficient support for enactment. If the bill were enacted into law it would, without doubt, have a tendency to prevent the use of force and violence in labor disputes such as that connected with the building of the pipe line, to which reference has been made. Possibly it will save the lives of many people.

All over the United States strikes are taking place. Unless something is done about the terrible strike in the coal industry, it will without doubt result in force and violence being used, and possibly the shedding of blood, and perhaps many men will lose their lives.

I shall continue to urge that the Judiciary Committee bring out the bill to which I have referred and that it be given consideration on the floor of the Senate.

I also wish to call attention of Senators to a telegram which I have just received on this subject from Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Harris, of El Campo, Tex. The telegram is somewhat similar to many telegrams and letters which I am receiving from day to day. I will place only this telegram in the RECORD. It reads as follows:

JUNE 3, 1943.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

As parents of one son who has paid the supreme sacrifice and three others in the armed forces of our country we want to know why Lewis or the coal miners can sabotage the coal industry and remain at liberty while our boys are dying at the front. We demand that the Government, of which you are a part, make the miners work or fight, and that Lewis be tried for treason. This telegram and your reply will be published in the local newspapers.

W. W. and Mrs. HARRIS.

My reply was as follows:

JUNE 4, 1943.

Mr. and Mrs. W. W. HARRIS,
El Campo, Tex.:

Answering your telegram, permit me to extend to you my heartfelt sympathy in the loss of your noble patriotic son who gave his life for his country. I trust your other three sons will return home safely. While your brave, patriotic sons are fighting and dying to save our Nation, it is a most disgraceful thing to see labor leader racketeers calling strikes and work slow-downs in our war industries, and I have been fighting for legislation to outlaw labor-leader racketeering in America ever since the first day I was in Congress when I introduced the same anti-violence strike bill that we passed in Texas while I was Governor. The bill is still being held up in the Judiciary Committee I have also introduced the same bill several times as amendments to other bills, but it always failed to receive enough votes for enactment. I expect to continue to fight for legislation which will outlaw labor-leader racketeering and I sincerely hope that some effective legislation will soon be enacted.

Senator W. LEE O'DANIEL.

The telegram from Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Harris, of El Campo, expresses the true sentiment of mothers and fathers of this Nation who are giving their most precious possessions, their own sons, to fight and die for the protection and preservation of our Nation. It also expresses the true sentiment of thousands of other mothers and fathers throughout this Nation and shows the growing indignation of our people against the irresponsible labor-leader racketeering so prevalent in this Nation. These people are looking to Congress and pleading for Congress to enact legislation that will stop this racketeering which is so seriously threatening our war effort and endangering the lives of our boys on the battle fronts.

I am glad to know that the House of Representatives has just passed a measure bearing on the strike situation. I hope its provisions will stop these strikes and abolish labor-leader racketeering, and that it will soon be ratified by both bodies and will become the law of this Nation. In speaking on this subject I want again to make it clear that I am not criticizing the honest laboring men and women of this Nation who earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, and who are making such a worthy contribution to our war effort. I am fighting only those rosy-cheeked labor-leader racketeers who toil not, but who live in luxury from the loot they steal from the pockets of honest working people by charging them for their God-given right to work, and part of which loot they contribute to political campaigns of those who refuse to use their power and influence to outlaw labor-leader racketeering by legislation. I have very patiently and very persistently fought for such legislation since my first day in this Senate, and I intend to keep on fighting for it. I hope we will soon enact some sound, honest, effective legislation along this line.

In this time of great national stress I want to warn my colleagues who come from the cold and frozen northern States that next winter your constituents will perhaps be cold again because they cannot burn in their stoves and furnaces the oil that was not transported through the 24-inch pipeline while construction of the line was stopped by the labor-leader racketeers. They also will be unable to heat their homes and factories with the coal that is today not being mined on account of the coal strike called by labor-leader racketeers. Also I wish to close by saying that while most of the people of this Nation despise these labor racketeers who call strikes during wartime, yet let us not overlook the fact that outside of the moral or unwritten laws of fairness, decency, and loyalty to our Nation, they have violated no Federal laws, except the laws which Congress has failed to pass.

THE LABOR SITUATION AND LABOR'S CONTRIBUTION TO THE WAR EFFORT

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, we have listened to several discussions, both yesterday and today, with reference to the labor situation in the country generally and with reference to the coal situation in particular.

Mr. President, I am one who believes that we can be proud of the contribution which has been made by labor in this country since the beginning of the emergency. The record is generally excellent. Our production at home has broken every record heretofore established. Our record, compared with the records available in industrial countries abroad, is far better, in every case, than the very best that was ever made by any other nation in the world. The American workman will produce as much in a 36-hour week as the workman in a foreign country will produce in 48 or 50 hours a week.

In addition to that, Mr. President, labor has made a long-range contribution to the Nation's war effort. I can go back to the turn of the century when, as a very young man, it was necessary for me to engage in the most hazardous type of railroad work. I know the conditions which existed in every community of the country in those early days and I know that if those conditions now prevailed, instead of 50 percent of the young men being rejected in the early days of the draft law the rejections would perhaps have been such that an army of the magnitude of our present Army would be impossible of recruitment. To the improvement of the standards which have lifted American manhood in strength, physically, and mentally, and have resulted in a higher degree of safety, greater facilities for adequate education, better health and better housing, organized labor has made a noteworthy contribution. I think now of the long hours, of the little children snatched from school, of the night work forced upon women and young girls, of the scandalous tenement exposures which were revealed in my own State, and I can say that were it not for the power and strength and the leadership of labor many of those barbaric practices would persist today.

Of course, Mr. President, labor is made up of human beings, and human beings, no matter where they may be or what vocation they may follow—and the statement applies to those who are engaged in industry, in finance, and in every other walk of life as well as to labor—are subject to the same errors. Because of that, labor has made mistakes, mistakes which have seriously injured or retarded the progress of the labor movement, and made it more difficult for those who would speak for and espouse and advocate the cause of labor.

In my judgment it would be an indefensible error for labor to engage in any strike which would, in any way, retard the Nation's war effort. While there have been periodic transitory and spasmodic outbreaks, there has yet to be a major strike since the leaders of organized labor signed a nonstrike agreement, and it is my prediction that there will be no major strike. The patriotism, the loyalty and the devotion of the workers of America, and the women as well, whose sons and daughters are in this war effort, are of such high degree that they will not strike while our brave and patriotic troops are scaling the mountain heights in Alaska, are engaged in the jungle warfare of the South Pacific, or are battling the enemy on the sandy deserts of Africa, or while our heroic men in the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Coast Guard are locked in mortal combat with the enemy on the seven seas. A large proportion of the young men who constitute the Nation's fighting forces come from the homes of labor, and many of them are the sons of fathers who go down into the bowels of the earth to mine the solid fuel for war effort needs. Boys with malaria in their blood streams as a result of military service in far-off lands, boys with inadequate and inferior meals in their mess kits, boys bleeding from a hundred wounds out there on the no man's land of this war come in great part from the homes of the workers of America; and no man with a son engaged in this conflict, no man loyal to the flag of our country, will refuse to honor the instructions of the Commander in Chief, because to do so would be not only detrimental to labor iteself, it would be devastating to all that is holy and noble upon this earth.

Mr. President, the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of our forces, the man who speaks for democracy when he speaks, the very symbol of justice and righteousness in conquered countries, where hunger and squalor, resulting from the mandates of the cruel dictators abide, the very hope of the world calls upon the patriotic miners of the country to return to their mines in these words:

> As President and Commander in Chief, I order and direct the miners who are not now at work in the mines to return to their work on Monday, June 7, 1943. I must remind the miners that they are working for the Government on essential war work.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator from New York probably is as well versed in matters relating to labor as is any other Member of the United States Senate. He is making a most important speech on a subject which is of interest to every citizen of this country. There are not now many Senators on the floor, and, because there are not, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield for that purpose?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I was reading to the Senate the order issued by the President and Commander in Chief with reference to the return to work of the miners now on strike. The order issued by the President is as follows:

> As President and Commander in Chief, I order and direct the miners who are not now at work in the mines to return to their work on Monday, June 7, 1943. I must remind the miners that they are working for the Government on essential war work and it is their duty no less than that of their sons and brothers in the armed forces to fulfill their war duties.
> Just as soon as the miners return to work, the disposition of the dispute between the miners and the operators will forthwith proceed, under the jurisdiction of the War Labor Board and in accordance with the customary and established procedures governing all cases of this sort.

Mr. President, in my judgment, no man and no organization under present-day circumstances and conditions can afford to defy the President of the United States. It is my opinion, as I was saying to the Senate when the quorum call was had, that up until this late date organized labor has faithfully adhered to its no-strike policy; and that statement applies to the leaders of labor without exception. It is my studied opinion that when the record of this war is history, the same statement can be repeated as a truism. In other words, I believe that when the leaders of labor signed the no-strike pledge they knew what they were signing, they were aware of the conditions under which we are burdened, and they realized that labor would resort to arbitration and mediation and conciliation in the settlement of their disputes.

Mr. President, the Truman committee, of which I am a member, took up the matter of work stoppages as a result of strikes, and they particularly had in mind the possibilities of a coal strike. In making their report to the Senate and to the country they voiced sentiments with which I am in hearty accord and which bear with particular emphasis on the conditions in which the country finds itself today.

In reading that report I find the following:

> This Nation is fighting for its very existence and for the preservation of all our rights, including the right of labor to seek by proper means a fair and just share of the goods produced. In such a situation, our Government has the right and duty to tell, not ask—

And no doubt they had in mind the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief, as the spokesman—> labor and those who represent it and management and its representatives that there shall be no stoppage of work in essential war industry.

> At the same time, Government must recognize that when it tells labor not to exercise during wartime its right to strike, it is depriving labor of its chief weapon with which to force management to be fair to labor. Government must, therefore, assume a duty to labor to see that it gets fair and square treatment.

Mr. President, I am familiar to a limited degree with the problems and the difficulties under which the miners are called upon to work, and it has been my thought that until recent years we tolerated a condition which we had no right to permit to exist in this country. The miners of the country were driven as slaves would be driven in other countries. The conditions under which they worked were in some instances cruel, if not brutal. The wages of the miners were inadequate. The homes of the miners were hovels. The diet of the miners was little better than a starvation diet. But, to the lasting credit of the present President of the United States and a friendly majority in the House and the Senate, a majority made up, as it was, by both Republicans and Democrats, the condition of the mine workers of America has been improved so that it is far better than it was prior to 1932. I do not mean to say by that, that justice in the fullest measure or even in a most reasonable measure has been done to the miners of America. I do not mean to say that they have no disputes to arbitrate, no grievances to mediate, for they have; but I do mean to point out the fact that they have a friendly administration and, above all, they have in the President of the United States one of the best friends they ever have had in the White House in the history of the Nation.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. First, I wish to say that I know the Senator from New York is a real friend to labor. His record clearly indicates his belief in labor and his desire to have labor accorded fair treatment and fairer opportunities. Second, let me say that the President of the United States has, with the aid of Congress—both the House and the Senate—given the miners the greatest opportunity to improve themselves that I believe they ever have had under any other administration in the history of the country.

With those two things true, and admitting that the miners have grievances, in my opinion they have no grievances which should not be arbitrated before the War Labor Board or other appropriate agencies. It seems to me to be a great mistake when any labor leader refuses or any group of labor leaders refuse to take their grievances or their disputes before a legally constituted body of the United States.

I do not believe I have ever seen the men and women of the country so deeply stirred over the prospects of any other strike as I have over a coal strike. There are in the country men who realize, as does the Senator from New York, that, from the standpoint of production, labor has made the greatest showing that has ever been made in history; but they view with the greatest alarm, and they are deeply stirred over, the prospects of a strike in the coal industry—a strike which would impede the progress of our people in bringing the war to a successful conclusion.

Yesterday I received a telegram from Sergeant York, one of our greatest heroes, who lives on the borders of my State. I agree with him that the patriotic miners, regardless of their interests, must avoid a strike, and that in the interest of all the people the strike must not come to pass.

I express my appreciation of the fine statement the Senator from New York has been making, and I say that his record entitles him to speak with authority on this subject.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I thank the able junior Senator from Kentucky, and I agree with him when he states that the miners have grievances, and that we have set up agencies to hear those grievances.

I desire to reiterate what I said in the beginning of my remarks—that I believe the leadership of labor in this country is patriotic, that the personnel or membership of labor is patriotic, and that no strike which might impede or retard the war effort will have the sanction of the leadership which signed the no-strike agreement.

Mr. President, I want it to be understood that I am proud of the accomplishments of labor. I think that labor in this country has made a great contribution, first of all, over a long period of years in lifting the standards of the men and women who work for a living; second, it has made a great contribution by its production volume, which has broken every record in this country and in the world.

I have no grievance against any labor leader unless one who would either violate the no-strike agreement or cause work stoppage which would injure or retard the Nation's war production. As I stated in the beginning, in my judgment, that will not happen. The patriotism of the men who work in the mines, the stake they have in the war, and the flesh and blood from their homes in every American unit in our military forces throughout the world will, in my judgment, motivate them along proper channels and right ideals.

Yesterday my able and distinguished colleague [Mr. WAGNER] made this statement to the Senate:

> The right to strike is a part of the liberty we are fighting for. The Labor Act preserves that liberty. But there is nothing in that act which says that labor cannot agree not to strike during a war, or voluntarily put restraints on its customary privileges, so as to lend its full strength in a democratic war.

That is what labor will do. It will not strike against the Nation's war effort.

> The no-strike pledge was agreed to by the president of the United Mine workers. The area of negotiation and award under the War Labor Board's jurisdiction in this controversy covers all the justified demands of the coal miners.
> I have spoken out in defense of labor and the miners many times in the past when popular feeling ran high against them. I will do so again when their cause is just.

Those sentiments are my sentiments. That expression of friendship by the senior Senator from my State, whose record in behalf of labor stands out in comparison with that of the very best of friends labor has in this legislative body or any other legislative body in the country, reechoes my sentiments.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. While all of us agree that under certain conditions labor has the right to strike, does my friend from New York agree with the statement that there is no right possessed by labor or anyone else to strike against the Government of the United States?

Mr. MEAD. Labor has agreed, in the no-strike pledge, to forego the right to strike. The Government, compensating labor for giving up that right, has provided machinery which obviates the necessity of strikes. Therefore, there is no reason or cause——

Mr. CHANDLER. There is no right possessed by anybody to strike against the Government of the United States.

Mr. MEAD. That is especially true in time of war.

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY] has asked me to have inserted in the RECORD a statement, part of which I shall read, which bears upon the subject which we are now discussing.

> The members of the United Mine Workers of America should immediately return to work with or without the consent of their leaders and produce the coal which is needed so badly to successfully carry on our war effort. If they fail to do so and our war production should be stopped because of the lack of coal and we should then lose this war, the members of the organization will soon learn from our conquerers that they will not be permitted to enjoy the privileges which they have obtained during the past 10 years.

Mr. President, I have before me an address delivered by Lewis Merrill, president of the United Office and Professional Workers of America, in which he says:

> Organized labor will respect its no-strike pledge, and will find other methods which are genuinely in the interest of the workers and of the people to correct its grievances. This is labor's war, and it will not prove treasonable to itself.

Mr. President, the Congress of Industrial Organizations has adopted resolutions which reiterate its pledge that there shall be no strike against the Nation's war effort. Among other things, it says:

> Labor's rights must be protected, vigorously protected, but they must be protected within the framework of rational procedure. Public servants and leaders of labor must follow this tenet.

So, Mr President, as a friend of labor, as a member of organized labor, as one who has held minor but honored positions in labor, and as one who has followed its struggles sympathetically for a long period of years, as one who has taken advantage of every proper opportunity to defend labor, I say that labor must give to this Government, this democracy, this struggle for the emancipation of everything that is decent and just, its fullest contribution. It is my judgment that labor will give no less. It is my studied opinion that the miners of America will continue to mine the coal; and it is my hope that the agencies of Government set up to consider their grievances will accord justice to the miners so far as their demands are justifiable.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very happy indeed to hear the Senator express himself in sympathy with the miners. Of course, we all regret the strike or walkout of miners which has occurred and is now being maintained. But my recollection is that we have had many strikes in this country—on the west coast, on the east coast, and in the Northwest. That is regrettable. However, we have heard more criticism of labor leaders as a result of the action of the miners than we have ever previously heard, which rather leads me to the conclusion that as a result of certain pent-up emotions in the bosoms of the American people relative to the strike situation, they have given vent to their feelings by expressions of enmity toward Mr. Lewis.

I wish to say very frankly that I am in sympathy with the miners. A miner receives approximately only $7 a day. His time begins only when he puts his pick into the bowels of the earth to dig out the coal. He does not receive pay for the time consumed in getting upon the elevator, descending into the earth, and traveling on a little railway to the place where he is to use his pick and shovel and dynamite. That time is his own.

Seven dollars a day is not enough for a miner in view of the fact that the cost of living has risen so rapidly within the past several months. Today in Washington and elsewhere carpenters are paid $12 a day. A union carpenter worked for me last week. I paid him $1.50 an hour for 8 hours' work, which amounts to $12 a day. He is in no danger whatever while he is using his saw and hammer. The miner is in danger from the time he sets foot on the elevator to descend into the mine, where he takes the little railroad to travel for a mile or two in the bowels of the earth to the place where he starts digging, until he returns to the portal of the mine.

Miners and their families cannot make a living. I sympathize with what the Senator has said. We have no coal mines in the State of North Carolina, but nevertheless I am in sympathy with the coal miners. I hope, as does the Senator, that Government agencies may be able to find some way in which this problem may be adjusted.

I cannot believe all that has been said about Mr. Lewis. I know that he is said to be the character—the person who will stick up for his own people, and that when he believes he is right he will fight to the very end. It seems to me that Lewis has been fighting to help the members of his union, and has done everything he can do to help them. I believe that if he finds he cannot carry out his aims any further he will show the patriotism which we demand today of every man in America. I believe that John Lewis will show the American people that he is in favor of winning the war, that he is an American patriot, and that he will order the miners back to the mines. At least, I hope so. My sympathy is with the miners. We all know that they ought to be paid more money than they are now receiving. Everyone else has been given an increase in compensation, so why not grant it to the miners?

Mr. MEAD. My sympathies are with the miners in their justifiable grievances, and such grievances should be adjusted by the regularly constituted agencies of the Government.

Mr. REYNOLDS. They should be adjusted, and I hope they will be adjusted.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a statement made yesterday by the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY].

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I heartily endorse the statements made by Senator WAGNER, of New York, today on the floor of the Senate respecting responsible and irresponsible labor leadership.

Senator WAGNER has been an ardent supporter of labor as I have always been. We both want to see labor retain the fair and just gains which it has made during the past 10 years. However, those gains cannot be retained, in my opinion, unless the affairs of the labor organizations of this country are handled by responsible men who look to the welfare of their country as well as the welfare of their membership. I do not believe that the rank and file of the members of labor unions condone now or will ever condone any action of any leader of theirs which would place their country in peril in a time of war, or even in a time of peace. The membership of any labor organization which is led by any man or men who will endanger their country's future must retire them or the laboring men themselves will be the sufferers.

The members of the United Mine Workers of America should immediately return to work with or without the consent of their leaders, and produce the coal which is needed so badly to successfully carry on our war effort. If they fail to do so and our war production should be stopped because of the lack of coal and we should then lose this war, the members of the organization will soon learn from our conquerors that they will not be permitted to enjoy the privileges which they have obtained during the pas 10 years.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I have heard that Mr. Lewis has ordered or invited the miners to return to work on Monday next. Has the Senator heard that?

Mr. MEAD. Yes. I have just been so advised by my distinguished colleague from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. WHEELER. I do not have the floor, but I should like to finish my statement.

There has been much said about submitting the controversy to the War Labor Board. Frankly, I do not think any lawyer would submit a case to a board whose members had made up their minds in advance. It is quite impossible for me to see how the Board could do anything but turn the miners down, when the order to "hold the line" has already been issued. They could not receive more than was allowed under the Presidential order.

I had occasion to talk to the head of the Labor Board when he issued a statement to the effect that the miners should not negotiate further with the operators. I asked him to cite the law permitting or authorizing him to make any statement to the effect that neither the miners nor the company should negotiate. I have examined the law. I can find nothing in any law which would give any official the right or authority under any circumstances or conditions, to say that the miners and the operators should not continue to negotiate if they wish so to do. I think the War Labor Board went far beyond its authority when it issued such a statement.

I am glad, as I know every other Member of the Senate is, that Mr. Lewis has invited or ordered the miners to return to work. I have no doubt that they will return. However, I believe every Member of the Senate realizes that the miners are engaged in one of the most hazardous occupations in the United States. Certainly those who know anything about mining, whether it be hard-rock mining, or coal mining, know that it is a most hazardous occupation.

As I have stated before, in every mining industry in the United States except the coal mining industry, the miners receive pay from collar to collar. The only miners who do not receive pay from collar to collar are the coal miners. I have it on the authority of coal operators themselves that the average time consumed from the time the men leave the collar of the mine until they arrive at the point of actual work, and the time consumed in returning from there to the collar of the mine, is approximately 1½ hours.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I interrupt merely because the information was given to me just a few moments ago by Mr. Bell, of the Associated Press, that Mr. Lewis had signified his willingness to have the policy committee direct the coal miners to return to work. I am not quoting the exact language, but in view of what the Senator said I thought the Senator from New York should read the bulletin which has been issued, and which, of course, is of very great interest to all Senators.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, my distinguished colleague [Mr. HATCH] handed this bulletin to me a moment ago, from which I shall quote. In a letter to John L. Lewis, Mr. Ickes said:

As operator of the coal mines on behalf of the United States Government I expect that you will direct the members of the United Mine Workers of America to return to work on Monday, June 7.

Mr. Ickes used the words "I expect that you will direct."

In his reply Mr. Lewis made the following statement in acknowledging the letter of Mr. Ickes:

I have no power to direct. I shall, however, recommend to the policy committee of the United Mine Workers of America that it direct the mine workers to return to work on Monday, June 7.

It was my opinion from the very beginning that the elected representatives of the United Mine Workers of America who participated in the conference and signed the no-strike agreement would live up to their agreement.

Mr. President, coal miners are loyal to their country. For months the draft boards in the mining districts were not called upon to draft men for military service because their quotas were filled from among the great number of miners who volunteered.

Knowing the miners as I do, particularly the miners of Pennsylvania, knowing of their patriotism and loyalty, and knowing of the overwhelming numbers of them who volunteered, and having handled, as I did years ago, many trains of coal which came from the mines, it was my overwhelming judgment that when it came to the judgment of their own economic well-being, and the well-being of our fighting men, they would make every sacrifice necessary. So I am very glad to be able to read this statement, and I hope that in every district in the United States where miners are employed, whether or not the policy committee has opportunity to take affirmative action before Monday—every last miner will return to his work and produce the maximum volume of coal possible of production.

The miners have grievances, as I said a moment ago. Those grievances we were told by the newspapers were at one time close to adjustment; in fact, the miners and the operators were only 50 cents apart. We know that as the result of a court decision portal-to-portal pay can now be placed on a legal basis, and perhaps the miners will be given that compensation. At any rate, the miners should and will have friends in this body and in the other body and throughout the United States as a result of their acquiescence in the order issued by the President of the United States.

After all, the President is our leader; we have no other leader; he is the one man we must follow in this crisis; it is a case of sink or swim with that leadership. That leadership, Mr. President, I embrace and you embrace, and every patriotic man and woman in America, regardless of his station in life or his political affiliation or any other consideration, must follow the leadership of the present President of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 495) to establish a Women's Army Auxiliary Corps for service in the Army of the United States, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. MERRITT, Mr. ANDREWS, and Mr. SHORT were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the Executive Office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia, Mr. FITZPATRICK, Mr. STARNES of Alabama, Mr. HENDRICKS, Mr. WIGGLESWORTH, Mr. DIRKSEN, and Mr. CASE were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2584) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 2766) amending the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 2766) amending the provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, before I yield the floor, I should like to make a few observations with reference to the pending legislation, and I wish to do so as a member of the Civil Service Committee of the Senate. Prefacing my remarks so that every Senator may know my attitude, let me say that I have opposed every bill of this character which has been brought before the Senate since I became a Member of this distinguished body. I voted against the proposal calling for the confirmation of regional and field officers of the War Manpower Commission, whose confirmation by the Senate is now required.

I supported the civil-service requirement with reference to appointments by O. P. A. and W. P. B., and other war agencies. I favored civil service insofar as O. P. A. appointees are concerned in the districts, in the States, and in the regions created by that organization. My position, therefore, Mr. President, has been consistent.

I have never sought the appointment of anyone in any of the war agencies as being a matter in which I was personally concerned. I believe, however, Mr. President, that the proposed legislation the Senate is now considering should be studied by the Civil Service Committee of the Senate. In my opinion, there is confusion and misunderstanding in the minds of many as to what are and what are not positions in the Federal service that come under the definition of policy-making positions. A more definite line of demarcation would result if the problem were given careful study by those deeply concerned with civil-service matters.

I believe the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to be helpful and in the right direction.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator has just expressed my own thought. I believe the O'Mahoney amendment to be helpful and in the right direction, but even it does not really reach the problem with which we are concerned. The Senator from New York, who is a member of the Committee on Civil Service, and who, as I happen to know, has spent as much time and work in trying to improve the merit system of this Government as has any other man in the Congress—and I want to compliment the Senator for it—understands that that really is our task; that is the thing in which all of us should be interested. Of course, Mr. President, you know and I know, and everyone else who has had any connection with Government departments knows, that the civil service is not perfect by any means; it has plenty of faults; but our job is to correct those faults, rather than to destroy the merit system and return to the spoils system.

Mr. MEAD. My colleague from New Mexico is absolutely correct.

The amendment which I am discussing is an amendment which is pointed in the right direction, and with study by the Civil Service Committee, I am sure that a very definite policy may be formulated and adopted.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield further to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I merely wish to say now, and I should like to have the RECORD show and every Senator to note, that those of us who oppose the pending bill are definitely in favor of the confirmation of every genuine policy-making official; there is no question about that.

Mr. MEAD. I will say to my distinguished colleague that that is my attitude.

Mr. HATCH. I should like to add a thought which comes to my mind on recalling a statement in an editorial, I think, in one of the Washington newspapers, that while we favor, as did the newspaper, the confirmation of those who are really policy-making officials, there is no need for taking a steam shovel to fix a watch. No one would take a steam shovel to fix a watch; but that is exactly what the proponents of the pending bill are doing; they are taking a steam shovel and, with sledge hammer blows, trying to fix a watch.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, to add another illustration to the one just given to the Senate by my distinguished colleague from New Mexico, I need but remind you of the situation that existed in this country before the merit system was adopted, and then to ask for a consideration of the problem of the average Senator, if we were called upon to make appointments which would necessarily have to be made if there were no Civil Service Commission. Think of the conditions which would exist in the postal services of the United States, where at one time it was thought more necessary that a carrier carry his district on election day than to carry his mail bag every day of the workingweek. Think of the burden all of us, especially those from so large a State as mine, would have to bear when called upon to confirm and consider appointments of thousands of men in the various offices and agencies of the Federal Government. I would have no time to do anything else than to consider the long lines of personnel who would have to be appointed in the various departments and agencies of our Government.

The civil service has made a marked contribution to the efficiency of Government and to the efficiency of the legislative division of the Government.

Therefore, Mr. President, as I stated in the beginning, I hope that the pending bill will be referred by the Senate to the Committee on the Civil Service of the Senate, where it can be studied, where hearings will be held, and where an attempt will be made to define what are and what are not policy-making positions.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. If the Senator had done me the honor to read the minority views which I filed, he would have found that I recommended that the course which the Senator now proposes should be followed, and at the appropriate time, if some other Senator does not make the motion, I expect to move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Civil Service; and I hope very much that the Senate will adopt the motion.

Mr. MEAD. If the motion shall be made, I shall be very happy to support it, and if the bill shall be referred to the Committee on the Civil Service, I do not believe anyone would find fault with the consideration it would receive at the hands of that committee.

Let me read a list of the personnel of the Senate Committee on the Civil Service, a committee which has been studying civil-service matters since its inception, a committee which is never called upon to consider matters which should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, a committee never called upon to take over the troubles of the Finance Committee, a committee which never delves into problems affecting the Appropriations Committee. Therefore I believe that when a civil-service matter comes up, it should be referred to the Civil Service Committee, which, for a long period of years, has made a specialty of studying civil-service matters.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I say frankly that I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum. I shall not do so unless the Senator agrees, but I should like to have Senators here on the floor listen to what the Senator is now saying. Will he yield for that purpose?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I should like to yield for that purpose, but I have an idea that my speech is about concluded, and that another Senator is very anxious to take the floor, and under the circumstances I shall have to ask that I be permitted to continue my speech.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say to the Senator that I appreciate very much his yielding as he did a while ago, and it was only because of my desire to have other Senators hear what the Senator is saying that I wanted now to suggest the absence of a quorum. I regret that more Senators are not present.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the able Senator for his compliment and for his deep interest in my remarks and in the proposal which we are now considering. I stated a moment ago that if this proposal, purely a civil-service proposal, were sent to the one committee created by the Senate to consider civil-service matters, no harm would be done. Listen to the roster of the personnel of that committee.

The senior member is the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the author of the pending bill. There are also on the committee Senators GEORGE, of Georgia; BYRD, of Virginia; DOWNEY, of California; MEAD, of New York, and one or two new Senators, including Senator SCRUGHAM on the Democratic side, and on the Republican side there are Senator LANGER, Senator BURTON, Senator AIKEN, and Senator BROOKS.

I believe that the Senate is willing to let those men study this problem, and I know that when the time to vote comes, they will consider the question of being afforded an opportunity to study the pending bill. I hope the time will come when labor matters will be sent to the Committee on Education and Labor, when matters pertaining to finance will always go to the Finance Committee, and civil-service matters will go, not to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but to the Committee on the Civil Service of the Senate. That is the way such matters are handled in another body.

What is the use of training men to become specialists along certain lines, and then, when a very serious problem comes before the Senate, send it for consideration to a committee which seldom considers a question of the character involved?

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. There would be great force and merit in the Senator's argument if the members of the Civil Service Committee had been as anxious and as industrious about having possession of the bill when it was first introduced. I should like to know what is the matter with the Committee on the Judiciary. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico is on the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Not yet. The distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is on the Judiciary Committee, the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is on the Judiciary Committee, and without any objection from anyone, so far as I am informed, this bill was sent to the Judiciary Committee. That committee considered it for a long time, and carefully, and voted 10 to 4 to report the bill to the Senate. What is the reason that at this time the Civil Service Committee comes in and asks for it? Where has the committee been all the time when the bill has been under consideration, from the time it was first introduced? Where were they then?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from New York yield to me again?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. One of the great difficulties in the Committee on the Judiciary, in the consideration of this particular bill, was the absence of the Senator from Kentucky, who was not present except on the day we finally voted, as I recall.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is not accurate about that, but I certainly was present the day the vote was taken, and that was the important day. I was one of 10 present who voted for the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator from New York yield further?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I did not wish to get into a discussion with my friend from Kentucky, and if I offended him by making the statement about his absence, it was merely a remark made in good humor, and I withdraw it, and ask that it be stricken from the RECORD. Is that satisfactory?

Mr. CHANDLER. It will not be stricken, because everybody in the United States will know the Senator made the remark, and he might as well leave it in the RECORD.

Mr. HATCH. I was not serious; but the Senator was not present when in the Committee on the Judiciary I raised this exact question, and said the bill should go to the Committee on Civil Service. That is where it should have gone then, and that is where it should go now. If I offended my friend from Kentucky, I apologize deeply, and I am very sorry.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not mind that the Senator calls attention to my absence from the committee meetings, but I will not call attention to the Senator's absence—and all of us are absent at times. I take it that when we are absent there is some reason for it. But I will answer the Senator by saying that the day when the committee voted on the bill I was there, and voted for it.

Mr. HATCH. The Senator voted for the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is on the record, too. I have been present not only in the committee, but in the Senate, on every other important matter that has come up since I have been a Member of the Senate, and all Senators cannot say as much. I do not know whether the Senator from New Mexico can do so or not. If he can, I am very glad; if he cannot, I will not call attention to the fact that he cannot.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say in all earnestness that I have observed the conduct of the Senator from Kentucky since he has been a Member of the Senate of the United States. I have observed his votes on all important measures, and I wish to say publicly, as I have said privately, that I think the Senator from Kentucky has made a most enviable record in the Senate of the United States. I congratulate the Senator on the record he has made.

Have I sufficiently apologized to the Senator?

Mr. CHANDLER. If my friend the Senator from New York will yield——

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. My friend the Senator from New Mexico is using the same salve on me that he used on the Senator from New York awhile ago to obtain a quorum call. I am grateful to the Senator for his statement, but with the permission of the Senator from New York, I wish to call attention to the other members of the Committee on the Judiciary, and say that, so far as I know, no objection was made to the bill going to the Committee on the Judiciary at any time, until the Senator from New Mexico said he made an objection after the bill had already gone to the committee. No effort was made, so far as I know or have been informed, on the part of any Senator to prevent the bill going to that committee. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] when he introduced his bill, if the Senator from New York will indulge me a moment?

Mr. MEAD. I shall be glad to.

Mr. McKELLAR. January 25, 1943.

Mr. CHANDLER. That is the first month of the present session. So far as I am informed no effort was made by any Senator to have the bill go to the Civil Service Committee or to any other committee, and the bill went to the Committee on the Judiciary, and was carefully considered by that committee.

Mr. President, the Senate Committee on the Judiciary is a very good committee. The Senator from Montana [Mr. WHEELER] is a member of that committee. So are the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VAN NUYS] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN]. I have already referred to the fact that my friend from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] is a valuable, hard-working member of that committee. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is a member of the committee. So is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. So are the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Utah [Mr. MURDOCK], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. McFARLAND], and the Senator from Florida [Mr. ANDREWS]. We find among Senators on the other side of the aisle that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. AUSTIN] is on the committee, and so are the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DANAHER], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

After nearly 6 months' consideration of the bill the committee voted 10 to 4 to report it to the Senate. Of course, if Senators desire to send the bill to the Civil Service Committee now and have that committee go over the bill again, when I know that the Senator from New York [Mr. MEAD] wants to kill the bill, that is perhaps a good way to kill it. I prefer, so far as I am concerned, to have the Senate pass upon the bill, because it is now before us by reason of a large majority vote of the membership of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I thank the Senator from New York for yielding to me.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I shall yield the floor in a very few moments. I understand there is a possibility of another bill being brought up for consideration before the Senate adjourns today. I do not want to postpone such action. I wish to say that I agree with everything my distinguished colleague the Senator from Kentucky has said concerning the members of the Committee on the Judiciary. They are all capable, fine, scholarly men. I believe we could call the roll of the Senate, and without hesitation, I would be in unanimous agreement with the Senator from Kentucky if he were to insist that all the Members of the Senate are fine, scholarly persons, because I know they are.

The only point I wanted to make, Mr. President, was that when I became a Member of the Senate, after having served a long time in the House, and found that measures which I introduced were referred to various committees of the Senate, and when I looked around in the Labor Committee for labor bills and found that they were in the Finance Committee, when I looked for civil-service measures and was told that they were in the Committee on Foreign Relations, or in some other committee, I became confused. I was trained in a body where procedure was different than that. As the result of 20 years of experience in the other body I had a different idea with respect to reference of bills. I made inquiry and was told that the rules of the Senate are different from those of the other House. I was told that one time the Vice President made a decision which, liberally interpreted, meant that any Senator could send any bill to almost any committee to which he wanted it referred.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MEAD. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. McKELLAR. The inference is that——

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I do not yield as yet.

Mr. McKELLAR. Very well.

Mr. MEAD. I know that if the distinguished author of the bill wanted it sent to the Civil Service Committee, and if he were to ask to have it sent to that committee, I am sure the committee would not object, and I am sure the Senate would not object. On the other side of the picture, if an individual member of the Senate Civil Service Committee were to rise in his wrath and demand that the bill be taken away from the Committee on the Judiciary and referred to the Committee on Civil Service he would be making a futile effort. I wanted to point out that I am of the opinion that proposed legislation should be sent to the committee which is trained to handle the particular type of legislation involved. I have no objection to the consideration given this bill by the Committee on the Judiciary. Its members are all fine men, they are all capable of considering this bill or almost any other bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know the Senator from New York does not want to do me an injustice by inference, but I am afraid his argument is doing me an injustice by inference. I had nothing whatsoever to do with what committee to which the bill was referred. I am not a member of the Committee on the Judiciary. I did not ask that the bill be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. Therefore in the natural order of business I suppose it was referred by the Vice President to the proper committee. I know nothing about that at all. Of course, feeling the interest I did in the bill, I should have preferred—if I had had any preference about the matter—that it be sent to some committee of which I was a member. I did not take any part in that matter, and am not going to take any part in an attempt now to rerefer the bill to some other committee. The Committee on the Judiciary has to my mind faithfully studied the subject, it has gone over the bill with the greatest care, and it has made a favorable report on it, by vote of 10 to 4. So I want the Senator, the Senate, and the public to know that neither directly nor indirectly have I had anything to do with the reference of the bill.

Mr. MEAD. I know the Senator from Tennessee is correct in his statement, and I know it is in keeping with his record in the past. I know that if the Senator wanted the bill referred to the Civil Service Committee, where he is associated with us as a member, it would be referred to that committee.

However, Mr. President, I do not believe we should waste our time and the country's time by making political appointments. I believe the integrity of the Senate and of Senators is better protected by having Senators give more of their time to the effort to pass upon vital Senate confirmations rather than in making political appointments. Our job is to pass upon vital confirmations. That is our constitutional prerogative. That is the one job we should consider, insofar as personnel matters are concerned.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. MEAD. Yes; but I desire to conclude my remarks.

Mr. CHANDLER. I shall interrupt the Senator only a moment.

Mr. MEAD. Very well; I yield.

Mr. CHANDLER. My friend the Senator from New York agrees that the Postal Service is about as efficient as any other Government service we have, does he not?

Mr. MEAD. Yes.

Mr. CHANDLER. Does the Senator think we have had any great trouble in confirming the nominations of post-office appointees?—and we confirm the nominations of all appointees who are to receive more than $1,000 a year. Does the Senator think that any trouble or any lack of efficiency has occurred because we confirm those appointments?

Mr. MEAD. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Yes.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I was one of the sponsors of the bill, now the law, bringing postmasters of the first, second, and third classes under the civil service. I believe that was a step in the right direction and increased the efficiency of an already efficient department. The task involved is not a difficult one. When every citizen of the United States within the district of a post office is publicly invited by the Commission to take an examination, and, when, after every man or woman qualified to take the examination, and desirous of taking it, does take it, the Civil Service Commission—not the Senator, not the Representative, not the Postmaster General, but the Civil Service Commission—gives the Post Office Department the names of three eligibles, that reduces the job, and that assures the Senate and the country that a qualified eligible is available. Then the Post Office Department sends one of the three names to the Senate committee—a very simple task. If that process were followed by the O. P. A., by the W. P. B., and by the War Manpower Commission, if it had the authority to do so—it does not have such authority—a more orderly procedure would result.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. If that be the case—and we have to be realistic about these matters—why is it that the average Member of Congress is asked which one of the three he desires to have appointed?

Mr. MEAD. I cannot speak for the average Member of Congress, but I know I am not asked.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The average Member of the House of Representatives is asked in the case of appointments in his district.

Mr. MEAD. Of course, I cannot answer for them, but again I say that the task of selecting from an eligible list is altogether different from the task of picking someone because of some other consideration.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. STEWART. The difference there is that we pick from three men, whereas in the instance to which reference has been made, and in the case of the evil which the bill would correct, we would pass upon only one man.

Mr. MEAD. I believe in the system which allows us to pick from three well-qualified persons—persons qualified by the recruiting agencies set up by the Government of the United States and approved by the Congress for the recruitment of Federal personnel.

Mr. President, while on that subject, let me say that I believe that appointees scrutinized by the Senate are in many instances better than those who are selected by an agency of the Government, without reference to the Senate or to the civil service. I maintain that appointees who are scrutinized by the civil service—appointees qualified as a result of an examination conducted by the civil service—are even better than those who are selected only after scrutiny by the Senate.

Mr. President, the only objection I have to the appointments made by the W. P. B., the O. P. A., and other agencies of the Government is that in the past they have not followed the civil-service rules and regulations set down in the legislation giving to them the power to organize their agencies and recruit their personnel. What they did in a great many instances—and perhaps because of the burden of the war—was to select the employee. Then, after the selection, they wrote the qualifications, and then they asked the Civil Service Commission to rubber-stamp him. As a result of that method of selectivity in my State, we found appointees who were seeking deferment from the draft and whose administrative experience was very limited, and in some cases nil.

Mr. President, today the Civil Service Commission is functioning in connection with all the war agencies. An examination is held in the first instance. The people in the community are invited to take the examination, and then the eligible list is sent to the agency which desires to have the appointment made. The trouble in the beginning was, as I have said, that the agency made the appointment, then wrote out the qualifications, and then asked the civil-service agent to rubber stamp the appointee. As a result, nepotism crept into the agencies of government, favoritism and discrimination were found here and there, and politics which would not be countenanced by Members of the Senate was discovered in one instance after another. However, that situation has been corrected as a result of a greater degree of stability in the matter of civil-service examinations.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. I wonder if the Senator from New York, who is eminently qualified to speak on the civil service, would approve of a system whereby the head of an agency designates the qualifications of the person to whom he wishes to give the appointment, then recommends certain appointees, then has the Civil Service Commission send an emissary into the community and has him proselyte individuals to apply for the position, and then turns down the recommendation of the head of the department?

Mr. MEAD. There are many instances which I could not support or recommend.

Mr. McCARRAN. What I have in mind is this: The Senator speaks about politics. It looks to me as if a new brand of politics is being set up by the Civil Service Commission, judging from some of its actions in recent times with which I have come in contact.

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I will say that in the early recruitment of personnel for the O. P. A.—and the same situation probably applies with respect to other agencies of Government, as well—the recruiting activities as a result of the war emergency were taking so much of the time of the Civil Service Commission that it was physically impossible to hold all the examinations which were necessary. So, many of the agencies were given forthright power to make appointments, and then, later on, to have the applicant qualified. Many abuses resulted from the conferring of that authority, and the situation was not good; and I brought those cases to the attention of the Civil Service Commission.

However, today, as a result of the progress made by the Civil Service Commission in keeping approximately even with the demands upon it, the people of a community are now invited by a notice printed in a local newspaper to participate in the examination. That is being done now in my city. As a result of the invitation, an eligible list will be made available to the O. P. A., and the O. P. A. will be able to make an appointment from the list thus established. That is being done in every city in my State. Before the appointment is made, a civil-service examination is conducted, and a civil-service eligible list is given to the appointing power.

Mr. President, I do not want to say anything further except that I hope the bill will be referred to the Committee on Civil Service, for further study. I believe that my position is supported by the contention made during the debate that neither the amendment nor the bill itself clearly defines and clarifies what is or what is not a policy-making position. So, until that is done, I think the bill should be referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MEAD. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Two agencies of the Federal Government which are highly respected by the American people are the F. B. I. and the General Accounting Office. Why is it that, yesterday, the Comptroller General of the United States, the head of the General Accounting Office, in appearing before a committee of the Senate, expressed the opinion that he would rather select his personnel himself, and through his own agency, than through the civil service; and why is it that the F. B. I. selects a personnel which is so highly respected, without going to the civil service?

Mr. MEAD. Mr. President, I have concluded my remarks, and I now yield the floor.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

STRIKES IN DEFENSE INDUSTRIES

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the House amendments, request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, in view of the extreme urgency of the matter, I am wondering if the conferees could meet immediately and bring in a report on Monday or Tuesday. The Senator from Texas knows as well as I do the seriousness of the situation which exists.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the disposition of the Senator from Texas is for the conferees to go to work immediately on the bill and submit a report as soon as practicable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the House has not as yet appointed conferees.

Mr. CONNALLY. The House required a month to pass the bill after it passed the Senate, although it had been working on the subject for about a year. I think we ought to have a brief period——

Mr. BYRD. The emergency is serious.

Mr. CONNALLY. I realize the seriousness of the emergency. The Senator from Texas has realized it all along. It is also desirable to enact the bill in such form that it will be understandable. I have not been able to read in detail all the amendments of the House. I assure the Senator that so far as the Senator from Texas is concerned there will be no delay. I am anxious to get the bill into shape and bring it back to the Senate at the earliest practicable moment. If the House appoints conferees, I am willing to meet with them tomorrow.

Mr. MCNARY. Mr. President, I am advised that the House did not appoint conferees. The bill is messaged to us without action of that kind.

Of course, the Senate started the proceedings. The bill was first passed here. We have the papers. The bill will now have to be returned to the House for appointment of conferees; and inasmuch as the House has adjourned until Monday, no action can be taken until that day. If the motion of the able Senator from Texas should be agreed to and conferees on the part of the Senate should be appointed, the bill would have to be remessaged to the House, and the House would then have to appoint conferees. However, that could not be done earlier than Monday of next week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. VAN NUYS, Mr. HATCH, Mr. AUSTIN, and Mr. DANAHER conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 796 be printed in the usual bill form with the House amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD for the information of the Senate, Senate bill 796, the so-called Connally antistrike bill, in the form in which it passed the House of Representatives, with the House amendments thereto.

There being no objection, Senate bill 796, as passed by the House of Representatives today, showing the House amendments thereto, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

At any time after the employees of a war contractor, or their representatives, give notice under section 2, such employees or their representative may request the Secretary of Labor to take, through the United States Conciliation Service, a secret ballot of the employees at the plant, plants, mine, mines, or other place or places of employment, or in the bargaining unit or units, with respect to which such notice applies, for the purpose of determining whether such employees favor or oppose such proposed strike. Upon receiving any such request, the Secretary of Labor shall direct the United States Conciliation Service to take forthwith such secret ballot, and after the taking of such ballot the Secretary shall by order forthwith certify the results thereof, which shall be open to public inspection.

"(b) Any person who violates any of the provisions of section 2 or 3 shall on and after such violation cease to have and cease to be entitled for a period of 1 year to (1) the status of a representative or labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act; (2) the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purposes of section 4 of the act of March 23, 1932, entitled 'An act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.'

"(c) In case any individual who violates any of the provisions of section 2 or 3 is an officer or representative of a labor organization, then on and after such violation and so long as such individual is an officer or representative of such labor organization, such labor organization shall cease to have or be entitled to the status of a labor organization under the National Labor Relations Act and cease to have the status of a person participating in or interested in any labor dispute for the purposes of section 4 of the act of March 23, 1932, entitled 'An act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes.'

"REGISTRATION OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

(a) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this act and annually thereafter every labor organization in which employees of any war contractor participate, through its president, or other authorized officer shall register its identity with the National Labor Relations Board and shall state under oath the following information: The name of the labor organization; the address at which it has its principal office or does business; the names and titles of the officers; initiation fees; annual dues charged; assessments levied during the past 12-month period: Provided, however, That it is not the intention of this section to require any State, sectional, or local reports of individual insurance benefit assessments; limitations on membership; number of paid-up members; date of the last election of officers; the annual salary of each officer, including bonuses, travel and other expenses; and the date of the last detailed financial statement furnished all members, and the method of publication or circulation of such statement.

With such information shall be filed under oath detailed and intelligible financial statements and a copy of the constitution and by-laws of the labor organization.

"(b) Every labor organization established after the date of enactment of this act in which employees of any war contractor participate shall, when established and annually thereafter, register with the Board and furnish the information required of existing labor organizations under the provisions of subsection (a).

"SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. For the purposes of this section 'labor organization' shall have the same meaning as under the National Labor Relations Act."

"SEC. 7. When possession of any plant, mine, or other property has been, or is hereafter taken by the Government under authority of section 9 of the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, as amended, or otherwise, by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable but in no event more than 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

"NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

"SEC. 8. The National War Labor Board (hereinafter called the 'Board'), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes,' and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"(a) Whenever the United States Conciliation Service certifies that a labor dispute (excluding any matter coming within the purview of the Railway Labor Act) exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board such a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(b) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Act; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; the act of October 2, 1942, hereinbefore referred to; and the regulations and orders issued under such acts; and where no law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

"(c) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"POWER OF BOARD TO COMPEL ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

"SEC. 9. The National War Labor Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, which it deems relevant to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

"MAINTENANCE OF THE STATUS QUO

"SEC. 10. (a) After the Board has taken jurisdiction of a dispute as provided in section 8, the Chairman in order to effectuate the purposes of this act shall have power to issue an order (1) requiring any person to refrain or cease and desist from calling, or assisting in any manner, a strike arising out of such dispute; or (2) requiring the employer, who is involved in the dispute to refrain or cease and desist from practices which change the situation existing at the time the dispute arose, or which by changing an existing situation led to the dispute, and which the Chairman shall deem prejudicial to the prompt settlement of the dispute. No order of the Chairman or process of any court under this act shall require an individual employee to render labor or services without his consent, nor shall any provision of any such order or process be construed to make the refusal to work of an individual employee a violation of such order or process or otherwise an illegal act.

"(b) Such order shall be effective for such period as the Chairman shall determine, but shall, in any event, terminate within 5 days after the findings and recommendations of the Board or within 60 days after the date on which the order was issued, whichever first occurs. Any further order issued under subsection (a) in connection with the same dispute shall not extend beyond the termination date of the original order but terminate at the same time as such original order.

"REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD

"SEC. 11. The Board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind regulations providing appropriate procedures for carrying out the powers vested in it by this act.

"Whenever any such plant, mine, or other property has been or is hereafter so taken by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event more than 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

"INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS

"SEC. 12. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or other property is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or property, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or property by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

"(b) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

"TERMINATION OF ACT

"SEC. 13. Except as to offenses committed prior to such date, the provisions of this act and the amendments made by this act shall cease to be effective at the end of 6 months following the termination of hostilities in the present war, as proclaimed by the President, or upon the date (prior to the date of such proclamation) of the passage of a concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress stating that such provisions and amendments shall cease to be effective.

"SEC. 14. No member of the Board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which such member has a direct pecuniary interest as an officer, employee, or representative of either party to the dispute."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants, mines, and other properties in the prosecution of the war, and preventing strikes, lock-outs, and stoppages of production, and for other purposes."

TRAINING OF NURSES FOR ARMED FORCES AND CIVILIAN NEEDS

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2664, a bill to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes. I have obtained the consent of the Senator from Tennessee and of the leaders on both sides. I hope the consideration of the bill will not be prolonged.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, as I understand, the Senator is asking unanimous consent temporarily to lay aside the pending bill.

Mr. BAILEY. That is all I am asking.

Mr. McKELLAR. If consideration of the Senator's bill should consume too much time, I would have the right to ask for the regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. That is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. With that understanding I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 2664) to provide for the training of nurses for the armed forces, governmental and civilian hospitals, health agencies, and war industries, through grants to institutions providing such training, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Education and Labor, with an amendment, in section 3, on page 4, line 10, after the word "training", to insert "to the extent that such maintenance is not compensated for by the value of their services during such period;".

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think we should have a brief statement from the able Senator from North Carolina as to the purposes of the bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, as I understand, the bill was passed by the House by practically a unanimous vote. A similar bill, introduced by myself, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and it was unanimously approved by that committee. I think I can make a brief statement which will be satisfactory.

The purpose of the bill is to bring to the aid of our Government, in view of the armed conflict in which we are engaged and the great number of soldiers participating, a sufficient number of adequately trained nurses for the hospitals, camps, and field stations.

Our information is that there is a very great shortage of nurses. The number now available is altogether inadequate. It is proposed, therefore, that the Government shall undertake, through the office of the Surgeon General, to provide for the training of nurses and, of course, to pay certain expenses, although the bill carries no appropriation or authorization. It is in contemplation that recommendations will be made to the Committee on Appropriations by the Surgeon General.

The plan set out in the bill is as follows:

(a) That no student or graduate nurse will be included under the plan unless in the judgment of the head of the institution such nurse will be available for military or other Federal governmental or essential civilian services for the duration of the present war, and such nurse so states in her application for inclusion under the plan.

It is further provided that the institution in which the nurse takes the training—

Will pay student nurses under the plan a stipend at not less than the following monthly rates: $15 for the first 9 months of study; $20 for the following 15 to 21 months of combined study and practice, depending upon the curriculum of such institution.

Further, as to the expense to the Government, it is provided as follows:

From the sums appropriated therefor the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay each institution, with a plan approved under section 2—

To which I have just referred—

(1) with respect to items furnished student nurses thereunder, amounts determined by the Surgeon General to compensate such institution for—

(A) reasonable tuition and fees for the courses of study and training;

(B) reasonable maintenance provided pursuant to section 2 for the first 9 months of their course of study and training, to the extent that such maintenance is not compensated for by the value of their services during such period.

The language "to the extent that such maintenance is not compensated for by the value of their services during such period" is the committee amendment.

(C) uniforms and insignia, provided in accordance with section 2; and

(D) the minimum rate of stipend specified in section 2 for periods prior to completion of the course of combined study and training referred to in such section; and

(2) with respect to items furnished graduate nurses thereunder, amounts determined by the Surgeon General to compensate such institution for reasonable tuition and fees for postgraduate and refresher course of study, and reasonable maintenance for graduate nurses undertaking postgraduate courses, or such portion of such amounts as may be determined in accordance with regulations of the Surgeon General.

The matter has been very thoroughly canvassed. The bill comes to us supported by the proper departments of the administration and by the Surgeon General. It is directly associated with the war effort and is indispensable.

With that statement I turn the matter over to the chairman of the committee, Mr. THOMAS of Utah.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, there is not much more to be said about the general scope of the bill. It is a war measure. Like most of the other war legislation, it will come to an end 6 months after the termination of the war.

At the present time the Government is training approximately 49,000 nurses, so this is not a new thing in any sense, but there is a demand for 65,000 nurses in training to take care of the demands which are being made upon the nursing profession.

This bill would, in a sense—but not in exactly the same sense—contribute to the training of nurses exactly what the Auxiliary Corps is contributing to the training of women in so many other lines.

The committee amendment merely provides that whenever any service is rendered by student nurses to the institution, the institution will pay back to the Government the value of such services. Therefore there could be no objection to the amendment. It merely provides for something which has already been done, and I hope the amendment will be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Following section 7 it is proposed to insert a new section as follows:

SEC. 8. There shall be no discrimination against any institution on account of the size thereof or the number of nurses employed or student nurses training therein.

Mr. BAILEY. I believe the purpose of the amendment is clear. The purpose is to prevent discrimination against small institutions. As I understand, the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor has agreed to accept the amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1, line 7, after the word "act", it is proposed to strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the following: "Provided, That there shall be no discrimination in the administration of the benefits and appropriations made under the respective provisions of this act, on account of race, creed, or color."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, as I realize that the hour is late, I shall say only a brief word, but it is both pertinent and important to point out that only this afternoon I learned of the fact that there had been a typhoid epidemic in southern New Jersey, a mild epidemic, I am glad to say. In several instances the disease appeared among the Bahamians who were recently brought to New Jersey from the Bahamas to help relieve the shortage of farm labor in the southern part of my State. The fact that these cases of typhoid have appeared in this particular group shows the importance and need of the greatest possible medical care, and not only as provided by the bill itself, but as provided in my amendment, just agreed to, which provides that there shall be no discrimination so far as race, creed, or color is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be offered, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill H. R. 2664 was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Clerk is authorized to renumber the sections.

THE COAL STRIKE

Mr. MOORE. Mr. President, as an illustration of the temper of the American people with reference to the coal strike, I should like to read into the RECORD a telegram among many which I have received within the last day or two, together with my answer thereto, as well as an editorial which appears in an Oklahoma newspaper of this date.

The telegram is as follows:

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., June 3, 1943.

Hon. ED MOORE,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

It is absolutely disgusting to me and 129,000,000 other Americans to see how strikes are tolerated and labor racketeers appeased at this probably the most crucial time in our history. It creates a great inspiration for the families like me who have men in the armed services to buy bonds and carry on and it must be a wonderful inspiration for the men actually in service. Isn't this a splendid opportunity to force through Congress immediately legislation outlawing strikes in all types of industry working for the war effort for the duration and setting up other labor regulations so badly needed and which have been discussed in Congress many times and on which action was avoided by those in high places by setting up additional boards and committees. If the present Government can't whip John Lewis and the other labor racketeers, how can they whip the Axis forces? Everyone I talk with out here feels the same way and it's too bad this is not election year. What are your thoughts in the matter and what is the Senate planning to do to help solve this terrible mess?

C. L. MAYHALL.

My answer to the telegram is as follows:

JUNE 4, 1943.

C. L. MAYHALL,
Oklahoma City, Okla.:

Re tel. A very pertinent inquiry might be, What secret weapon has been placed by the Government in the hands of labor racketeers you refer to that the Government now does not dare exercise its sufficient power to prevent strikes, thereby endangering the war effort? I favor complete repeal of the Wagner law and enactment of a decent law for the protection of the employer and employee against abuses by either against the other and for the protection of labor against the exploitations of labor tyrants.

E. H. MOORE,
United States Senator.

The title of the editorial which I wish to read into the record is:

Defeat Our Domestic Enemies First.

The editorial is as follows:

People are fed up on strikes in war industries. People are fed up on John L. Lewis and all other domestic enemies who are now attempting to paralyze the fighting strength of our armies and navies. At the war's most critical stage, when our armies in Europe and Africa are poised to strike a vital blow at Hitler's fortress of Europe, a domestic enemy at home is about to shoot them in the back by shutting down all of our war plants.

Immediately after our armies and navies have won the battles of Tunisia and the battle of Attu, a domestic enemy with 500,000 troops at his command attacks America in its very vitals and calls a halt on the production of coal for steel mills, ship yards, railroads, and thousands of munition factories.

The flow of ammunition, guns, and airplanes, without which armies cannot exist, will be stopped for a million soldiers in Africa, a million in England, and a million on Pacific battle fronts. John L. Lewis and his 500,000 followers can accomplish more deadly damage to America and her allies than 5,000,000 Japs or 5,000,000 Germans. Unless they get an increase of $1.50 per day each, they are willing to have a foreign enemy defeat the flower of American manhood on battlefields.

What is the use of defending ourselves on foreign battlefields if we will not defend ourselves at home in our own back yard?

Fifteen months ago this paper started a prairie fire by demanding that Congress pass laws which would absolutely outlaw all strikes in war industries. The American people rose up and demanded that strikes be outlawed. Union leaders became frightened and rushed into print with page advertisements that there would be no more strikes. The promise of labor leaders that there would be no strikes is worth exactly as much as the promises of Hitler and no more.

Congress blustered but did nothing. It will do nothing now unless 80 percent of the American people rise up in their wrath and compel Congress to act.

Congress can stop every strike in the United States within 48 hours by enacting a law with the following provisions:

1. To automatically freeze in every bank or depository the funds of all unions, local or national, which cease work or go on strike.

2. The appointment of a custodian of domestic enemy property to seize and assume custody of the funds of not only the local but of the national union organizations of any union that goes on strike.

3. Provide for the assessment by courts of enormous fines against every striking union and against each member participating in the strike.

4. Provide that the President of the United States shall have the power to set up an industrial army and to draft all the workers of any designated industry into such an industrial army as a body and without going through the red tape of local draft boards. That the President as Commander in Chief shall assign Regular Army officers to take command of the industrial army and to place officers or soldiers on guard over every working unit in mines or factories where strikes have been called to see that each individual produces his normal output.

5. Provide that every worker shall be subject to military discipline and that deserters or mutineers shall be punished by the guardhouse or the firing squad exactly the same as soldiers in the fighting army.

If our cowardly Congress does not pass such laws, it will be abandoning our armies and navies to the sabotage of the most dangerous enemy we have, the enemy in our back yard. If such a law is not passed, America will have a government of the people by the unions and for the unions.

Congress has seen nearly 15 months of union promises not to strike, but so long as the people lie low, Congress will lie low. Seventy-five percent of the Members of Congress are pusillanimous patriots. They want the vote of union strikers; they will pass no law to curb striking unions unless every citizen who feels that strikers should be controlled writes or wires a protest to each of his Congressmen and Senators.

If you want your Congressmen to enact laws that will put all strikers in an industrial army with top sergeants and other military personnel in complete charge of their work and that will freeze every dollar of funds and incoming dues to striking unions then sign and clip out this pledge, and mail a copy to every Member of Congress you know. We demand a law to stop strikes.

To Members of the United States Congress: We are fed up with the way Congress has dodged its duty to outlaw and prevent strikes. We demand a law that will immediately stop all strikes and guarantee full production.

If you, as a Congressman, have not the "guts" to pass such a law, we will vote in 1944 only for candidates who will pledge themselves to pass such laws.

We want action now.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, eternal and invisible, whose only begotten Son was proclaimed by the morning stars and whose mercy is free and forever, be gracious to hear our humble prayer. Do Thou enable us to accept the discipline of these days of turmoil and burden. Waiting with cheerful hope and content to suffer, garrison our souls with the benedictions of the spirit of sacrifice and courage; through these virtues we shall help to shape a new world for a new humanity.

Make us to understand that in these hours of peril, murmurings, skepticisms, and despair are offensive to the Lord of righteousness and truth. Thou who art the sum of all wisdom, arm us with that faith which energizes love, ideals, and supplies the motive power which urges on to the golden goal. Enable us to reckon lightly the things of time, the delights of the flesh, and the treasures of earth; when gained unjustly and held in the spirit of ungodliness in the end they tunnel the way of spiritual darkness. Blessed Lord, turn human frailties into strength and disobedience into loyalty that we may hear and heed the pilgrim chant:

"If any man would come after Me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow Me."

In the name of our dear Redeemer. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

USE AND OPERATION OF WAR PLANTS IN PROSECUTION OF THE WAR

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of S. 796, with Mr. COOPER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday, 8 minutes remained for debate on the pending amendment.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. McMURRAY] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. McMURRAY. Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the members of this Committee assembled here today are in somewhat better humor than they were when the Committee rose yesterday afternoon.

We are dealing with a very, very critical problem. I do not like to say it, but I must say that I do not think the time has been evenly divided on this issue so that all sides have had an equal chance to be heard. However, the parliamentary situation is such that it seems impossible to get any reasonable legislation at all unless we first defeat the Smith amendment to the Harness substitute and then defeat the Harness substitute. Unless this is done I do not believe any reasonable legislation can ever be voted on.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. Having defeated the Smith amendment and the Harness amendment, what would the gentleman then propose in respect to legislation?

Mr. McMURRAY. If the Smith amendment is defeated, and the Harness substitute is defeated, then there will be offered another substitute amendment.

Mr. COLMER. Will the gentleman support that?

Mr. McMURRAY. I shall state my position if and when that is brought before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] is entitled to recognition.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HARE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I have only 2 minutes and I prefer not to yield.

Mr. HARE. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if he would be willing to insert in section 2, following the word "representative," a provision that manufacturers and employees notify the Federal Trade Commission in addition to the Department of Labor, because if this bill goes on for 2 years there may be questions growing out of lock-outs, and labor would want to know the reason why, and my thought was the Federal Trade Commission could make the investigation.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. I shall be glad to give that consideration.

Mr. Chairman, since my substitute bill and the amendments proposed have been published in the RECORD, you will find that it is a very simple piece of legislation, which, in my humble opinion, will solve this whole question of strikes. It leaves in the hands of American labor the determination by secret ballot whether the workers shall strike. I have sufficient confidence in the patriotism of the rank and file of labor to say that there will be no strike if we give them an opportunity to vote on the question.

The amendment of the gentleman from Virginia embraces five sections of the Senate bill and pertains to the functions of the War Labor Board. The part of these sections which suspends the Norris-LaGuardia Act, however, has been deleted.

There is one sentence in this amendment which is not satisfactory to any of us, and a motion will be made to strike that from the amendment and I sincerely hope that motion will prevail. I refer to the sentence which appears in the original bill, on page 17, beginning with line 6, which says:

> In no event shall the Board have power under this act, or otherwise, to require as a condition of employment that any individual become or remain a member of a labor organization.

That, I believe, might upset a great deal of work that the War Labor Board has already done, and certainly we do not want to further confuse the already complicated situation. I hope that this sentence will be stricken from the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, somebody said:

> There is so much good in the worst of us and so much bad in the best of us that it hardly behooves any of us to talk about the rest of us.

Another old sage said:

> I wholly disagree with what you say, but I will fight to the death for your right to say it.

I believe that was Voltaire.

Notwithstanding what happened yesterday I am here this morning quite happy, quite cool, and in good humor, and with no hostile feeling toward anyone, and with that in mind I want to take up these amendments and substitutes for the bill we are considering.

First of all, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the vote will first come on the Smith amendment to the Harness substitute. If that is adopted, the vote will then come on the Harness substitute as amended. There will then be an amendment offered, as I understand, to the Harness substitute as amended, first, to strike out sections 2 and 3.

I should like to recount to the House that when this legislation was under consideration by your Military Affairs Committee, I selected three of the majority members, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON], the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], and three of the minority members, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ELSTON], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS], to draft for the committee as a result of the long and arduous hearings a bill for the consideration of the whole Committee. They included sections 2 and 3 relating to lock-outs and strikes in that bill, and it was adopted by the Committee unanimously and without question and everything was agreeable until the representatives of the Department of Labor and other departments came up last week for a hearing. As a result of that, some of the members thought that they ought to change their minds, and they have a right to do that. I am not finding fault with them. But I do hope and trust, and I earnestly urge, that the House retain those two sections in the legislation, because without them we shall have weakened the legislation materially. In fact we will have carved the very heart out of it. If we are going to pass anything at all, I think we ought to pass something that will make it effective, so that if there is anybody in the Government that wants to stop these strikes and protect the national war effort they will have the power and authority to do it and will not be permitted to resort to an alibi and say, "We tried to persuade somebody but we could not persuade them. We tried to appease somebody and they would not be appeased."

In other words, I think the House of Representatives ought to assume its legislative responsibility and pass what it thinks in its candid judgment ought to be the law, and then deal with the other body when the time comes for doing so. As I understand, the committee bill—and I stand flat-footed for it—it is an amendment to the Connally bill and as such, with whatever amendments are added to it, it will go back to the Senate as an amendment to the Connally bill, S. 796, and probably go immediately to conference. For myself I have only tried to augment and strengthen the power and authority of the President's War Labor Board, and that is one of the principal features of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DIRKSEN. As I understand, under the rule we are considering the House bill as an original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. Under the rule, the committee substitute is being considered as an original bill.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Pending, then, is the Harness substitute in the nature of an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And pending thereafter is the Smith amendment to the Harness amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I understand, then, Mr. Chairman, that the amendments that are on the desk now which are in the nature of perfecting amendments to the Smith amendment would be out of order because they violate the rule as to amendments in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COLMER. The amendments that are on the Clerk's desk to perfect the Harness amendment will be in order if the Harness amendment is adopted, but there will be no further time for debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct in that there will be no further time for debate, but any further amendments to the Harness amendment may be considered after the Smith amendment is disposed of.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I understood the chairman to state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] a minute ago that amendments to the Smith amendment are out of order due to the fact that they are amendments in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. If a point of order on that ground were made, it would have to be sustained under the rules of the House in that the amendment would be in the third degree.

Mr. SPARKMAN. In the event the Smith amendment is adopted without such amendments having been considered, it then becomes part of the Harness substitute. Then, while the Harness substitute is before the committee for amendment, may amendments be offered to that which might affect some of the language contained in the Smith amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It would be difficult to pass on that question until the Chair can at least see the form in which the proposed amendments are presented.

Mr. SPARKMAN. With particular reference to the amendment at the desk to be offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT], which I understand the gentleman from Virginia has agreed to and which I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] to say he hoped would be adopted, striking certain language from the Smith amendment—it is the last sentence in the first section ending on page 17—if the Smith amendment should be adopted would an amendment later offered to the Harness substitute to strike that particular language be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it would not be in order, for the reason that an amendment that has previously been agreed to cannot be amended.

Mr. MERRITT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MERRITT. The gentleman from Alabama submitted the parliamentary inquiry I intended to ask, but do I correctly understand that the amendment I have on the Clerk's desk that will enforce the Smith amendment will not be considered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot say that to the gentleman. The Chair, in response to the parliamentary inquiry submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, stated that if an amendment is offered and a point of order is made against it, the Chair will then rule on the question.

Mr. MERRITT. Is it in order now for me to offer my amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may certainly offer an amendment; and if he does so, the Clerk will report it.

Mr. MERRITT. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: Strike out of the Smith amendment the language in the committee bill on page 17, beginning with the word "In" in line 6 and ending with the period in line 9.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not in order as it is an amendment in the third degree.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point of order against the amendment that it is in the third degree. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair rules, may I submit a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the question has been passed on.

The CHAIRMAN. One point of order at a time is all the Chair can entertain. Does the gentleman from Virginia desire to make a point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I want to submit a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late.

Mr. WRIGHT. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules that point of order, because the gentleman from Pennsylvania was on his feet, and the point of order was timely. The amendment had just been reported.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDREWS. Assuming that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT] is not in order and the Smith amendment as now written should be defeated, will it be in order then for the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to reoffer his amendment with the language referred to withheld from the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It would, because that would be a different amendment.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. If the gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment to conform, that is, to strike out such language as the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRITT] attempts to delete by amendment, that would be in order as a unanimous-consent request, would it not?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia could submit a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to strike out section 6 of the Harness substitute. When will it be in order to offer that?

The CHAIRMAN. After disposition is made of the Smith amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request, and if there is no objection, I desire to make a very brief explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, those of us who want to do something right about this thing, on both sides, realize the difficulty of the situation. We have been trying to reach something that we think is fair, everybody giving and taking a little bit. I am willing to have that portion go out, and I am in hopes, when I submit this unanimous-consent request, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WRIGHT], who raised the point of order, and who is an advocate of the welfare of organized labor, will not object, because we are just trying to get down to something and make concessions. This is a concession to his wishes, and I desire to submit a unanimous-consent request——

Mr. CELLER. I object.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have not yet stated the request. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the language on page 17 of the committee bill, which appears in the amendment which I offered, reading as follows, may be eliminated, that language being, commencing on line 6, as follows:

In no event shall the Board have power under this act, or otherwise, to require as a condition of employment that any individual become or remain a member of a labor organization.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia to so modify his amendment?

Mr. CELLER, Mr. LESINSKI, and Mr. O'BRIEN of Illinois objected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MAY) there were—ayes 73, noes 204.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk; and in view of the fact that this amendment does nothing but eliminate the language to which I have referred, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with and that it be placed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance of the matter, I think the amendment should be read. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the amendment.

Mr. MERRITT (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Virginia to the Harness amendment: After the title "Registration of Labor Unions", insert the following:

"NATIONAL WAR LABOR BOARD

"SEC. 8. The National War Labor Board (hereinafter called the Board), established by Executive Order No. 9017, dated January 12, 1942, in addition to all powers conferred on it by section 1 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, and by any Executive order or regulation issued under the provisions of the act of October 2, 1942, entitled 'An act to amend the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, to aid in preventing inflation, and for other purposes,' and by any other statute, shall have the following powers and duties:

"(a) Whenever the United States Conciliation Service certifies that a labor dispute (excluding any matter coming within the purview of the Railway Labor Act) exists which may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, and cannot be settled by collective bargaining or conciliation, to summon both parties to such dispute before it and conduct a public hearing on the merits of the dispute. If in the opinion of the Board such a labor dispute has become so serious that it may lead to substantial interference with the war effort, the Board may take such action on its own motion. At such hearing both parties shall be given full notice and opportunity to be heard, but the failure of either party to appear shall not deprive the Board of jurisdiction to proceed to a hearing and order.

"(b) To decide the dispute, and provide by order the wages and hours and all other terms and conditions (customarily included in collective-bargaining agreements) governing the relations between the parties, which shall be in effect until further order of the Board. In making any such decision the Board shall conform to the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended; the National Labor Relations Board; the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942, as amended; the act of October 2, 1942, hereinbefore referred to; and the regulations and orders issued under such acts; and where no law is applicable the order of the Board shall provide for terms and conditions to govern relations between the parties which shall be fair and equitable to employer and employee under all the circumstances of the case.

"(c) To apply to any Federal district court for an order requiring any person within its jurisdiction to obey a subpena issued by the Board; and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on any such court to issue such an order.

"POWER OF BOARD TO COMPEL ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

"SEC. 9. The National War Labor Board, by its Chairman, shall have power to issue subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and the production of any books, papers, records, or other documents, which it deems relevant to any inquiry or hearing before the Board or any designated member or agent thereof. Such subpenas shall be enforceable in the same manner, and subject to the same penalties, as subpenas issued by the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, approved March 27, 1942.

"MAINTENANCE OF THE STATUS QUO

"SEC. 10. (a) After the Board has taken jurisdiction of a dispute as provided in section 8, the Chairman in order to effectuate the purposes of this act shall have power to issue an order (1) requiring any person to refrain or cease and desist from calling, or assisting in any manner, a strike arising out of such dispute; or (2) requiring the employer, who is involved in the dispute to refrain or cease and desist from practices which change the situation existing at the time the dispute arose, or which by changing an existing situation led to the dispute, and which the Chairman shall deem prejudicial to the prompt settlement of the dispute. No order of the Chairman or process of any court under this act shall require an individual employee to render labor or services without his consent, nor shall any provision of any such order or process be construed to make the refusal to work of an individual employee a violation of such order or process or otherwise an illegal act.

"(b) Such order shall be effective for such period as the Chairman shall determine, but shall, in any event, terminate within 5 days after the findings and recommendations of the Board or within 60 days after the date on which the order was issued, whichever first occurs. Any further order issued under subsection (a) in connection with the same dispute shall not extend beyond the termination date of the original order but terminate at the same time as such original order.

"REGULATIONS OF THE BOARD

"SEC. 11. The Board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind regulations providing appropriate procedures for carrying out the powers vested in it by this act.

"Whenever any such plant, mine, or other property has been or is hereafter so taken by reason of a strike, lock-out, threatened strike, threatened lock-out, work stoppage, or other cause, such plant, mine, or other property shall be returned to the owners thereof as soon as practicable, but in no event more than 60 days after the termination of the conditions which caused possession of such plant, mine, or other property to be so taken.

"INTERFERENCE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION OF PLANTS

"SEC. 13. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or other property is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or property, or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or property by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein. No individual shall be deemed to have violated the provisions of this section by reason only of his having ceased work or having refused to continue to work or to accept employment.

"(b) Any person who willfully violated any provision of this section shall be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MERRITT) there were—ayes 191, noes 137.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, on that I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed Mr. SMITH of Virginia and Mr. MAY to act as tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were ayes 170 and noes 113.

So the amendment to the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the Harness substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Strike out section 6 of the Harness substitute.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, section 6 does not appear here and nobody can tell what it is. I would like to have the amendment read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANCOCK: Strike out section 6 of the Harness substitute.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 6 of the Harness substitute be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 6. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 2, sec. 251), is amended to read as follows:

" 'SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to, Congress are to be voted for, or for any candidate, political committee, or other person to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. For the purposes of this section "labor organization" shall have the same meaning as under the National Labor Relations Act.'

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] to the Harness substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HANCOCK) there were ayes 83 and noes 156.

So the amendment to the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER to the Harness substitute: After section 7 of the Harness amendment insert the following new section:

"CONSPIRACY TO INTERFERE WITH GOVERNMENT OPERATION

"SEC. 8. Any person who shall willfully, during the present war or during the period of national emergency as proclaimed by the President on May 27, 1941, conspire with one or more persons for the purpose of bringing about (a) a cessation of production at any plant, mine, or other property in the possession of the United States, (b) a slowing down of production at any such plant, mine, or property, or (c) any other interference with production at any such plant, mine, or property, shall be guilty of a felony, and upon conviction shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."

Page 23, line 2, strike out "14" and insert "15."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] to the Harness substitute.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. COLMER) there were ayes 63 and noes 181.

So the amendment to the substitute amendment was rejected.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. KILDAY to the amendment offered by Mr. HARNESS of Indiana: Strike out all of section 5 of said amendment.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that section 5 of the Harness amendment be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

"REGISTRATION OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 5 (a) Within 60 days after the date of enactment of this act and annually thereafter every labor organization in which employees of any war contractor participate, through its president or other authorized officer, shall register its identity with the National Labor Relations Board and shall state under oath the following information: The name of the labor organization; the address at which it has its principal office or does business; the names and titles of the officers; initiation fees; annual dues charged each member; assessments levied during the past 12-month period; limitations on membership; number of paid-up members; date of the last election of officers; the annual salary of each officer, including bonuses, travel, and other expenses; and the date of the last detailed financial statement furnished all members and the method of publication or circulation of such statement. With such information shall be filed under oath detailed and intelligible financial statements and a copy of the constitution and bylaws of the labor organization.

"(b) Every labor organization established after the date of enactment of this act in which employees of any war contractor participate shall, when established and annually thereafter, register with the Board and furnish the information required of existing labor organizations under the provisions of subsection (a).

"(c) Any labor organization which fails to register with the Board and file the information required by this act shall be disqualified to act as the representative of employees in collective bargaining for such time as such failure shall continue: Provided, That in the initial registration only if information on a particular point is lacking, the statement 'no information' or 'no record' shall be considered an answer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the Harness amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. THOMASON to the Harness amendment: On page 9 strike out all of section 2 and section 3 of the Harness amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. THOMASON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the Harness amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GWYNNE to the substitute offered by Mr. HARNESS of Indiana: After section 8 add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 9. No members of the Board shall be permitted to participate in any decision in which such member has a direct pecuniary interest as an officer, employee, or representative of either party to the dispute."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HARNESS] as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAMSPECK) there were—ayes 188, noes 87.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the committee substitute as amended by the Harness amendment as amended.

The committee substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COOPER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense, pursuant to House Resolution 234, reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

Mr. RAMSPECK. On that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 238, nays 136, answered "present" 1, not voting 57, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill S. 796 will be corrected.

There was no objection.

WOMEN'S ARMY AUXILIARY CORPS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 495, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. MAY, THOMASON, MERRITT, ANDREWS, and SHORT.

GENERAL EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill S. 796.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY]?

There was no objection.

ACQUISITION AND CONVERSION OF CERTAIN AUXILIARY VESSELS FOR UNITED STATES NAVY

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the full report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2; and agree to the same.

P. H. DREWRY,
WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
MELVIN J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID I. WALSH,
M. E. TYDINGS,
JAMES J. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1563) authorizing the acquisition and conversion or construction of certain auxiliary vessels for the United States Navy, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

Amendment No. 1: With this amendment as proposed by the Senate the Navy would not have control over vessels being constructed by the Maritime Commission for the Navy contracted for subsequent to July 25, 1942.

The Senate recedes from its amendment and agrees to the House version.

Amendment No. 2: Without the proviso to section 2 inserted by the Senate this section may, in the future, be construed as giving the Navy Department final jurisdiction in the design and construction of vessels built by the Maritime Commission for other departments of the Government, or of vessels built for our allies.

With the proviso retained in the bill, it will not interfere with the Navy's auxiliary vessels program, but will limit the Navy's authority to vessels built for it by the Maritime Commission.

As this bill is intended to apply only to vessels for the Navy, the managers on the part of the House accept the Senate amendment.

P. H. DREWRY,
WARREN G. MAGNUSON,
MELVIN J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill that authorizes 1,000,000 tons of auxiliary ships. The Senate amended the bill by putting a proviso in it to the effect that the Navy could only have jurisdiction as to the design with reference to the auxiliary ships being built by the Maritime Commission for the Navy. We accepted that amendment.

The Senate also amended it by precluding the Navy from having jurisdiction of the designs of ships from July 25, 1942, to date. The Senate receded from that amendment.

Mr. Speaker, if there are no questions, I ask for adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to. A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ABOLISHING CERTAIN NAVAL TRUST FUNDS

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 2584) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers on the part of the House may be read in lieu of the full report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement of the managers on the part of the House.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2584) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

CARL VINSON,
PATRICK H. DREWRY,
MELVIN J. MASS,
Managers on the part of the House.

DAVID I. WALSH,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS,
JAMES J. DAVIS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2584) to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to such amendment, namely:

Amendment No. 1: The amendment made by the Senate provided that all officers and enlisted personnel would have deducted from their pay the sum of $2.40 each year to be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

Such deductions are not made from like personnel of any other of the services.

The Senate recedes from its amendment and accepts the House version.

CARL VINSON,
P. H. DREWRY,
MELVIN J. MAAS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, this bill and the conference report relate to the abolishment of what is known as the hospital fund. The hospital fund under previous law is created by the fines and forfeitures and a 25-cent deduction from the monthly pay of officers and enlisted men. In view of the fact that the committee has adopted the policy of abolishing the hospital fund and transferring it into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts, we do not feel that the enlisted and officer personnel should be required to pay $2.40 to go into the fund. The maintenance of the hospital is to be in the same manner as the Army hospitals; that is, by direct appropriation.

Mr. MAAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. MAAS. This merely puts the Navy on an exact par with the Army?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. That is correct. Mr. Speaker, if there are no questions I ask for the adoption of the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I would like to know if the Speaker will recognize me at this time to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill H. R. 2589.

The SPEAKER. Is there a unanimous report from the committee?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. There is a uanimous report from the members who were present this morning. It relates to the WAVES legislation, and we have met the opposition that was pointed out on the floor during the last consideration of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is that the bill the gentleman spoke to me about?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. It is.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the gentleman conferred with the minority leader?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I have conferred with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS]. I did not speak to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], but I did say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS] that I would ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the gentleman did not speak to me, as I have informed a good many Members of the House that there would be no other legislation taken up for consideration this afternoon.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, what I am saying now has no application at all to my distinguished friend from Georgia, and this expressly does not apply to his present unanimous-consent request, because there is no more cooperative and able Member of the House than the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON]. However, for the RECORD I wish to say that I shall insist that all unanimous-consent requests in the future be taken up with the minority leader and the majority leader.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I agree with what the gentleman says.

Mr. McCORMACK. And I shall insist upon that.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I asked the Speaker if he would recognize me to make the unanimous-consent request.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am merely making an observation, and as I indicated, I eliminated the gentleman from Georgia in my statement.

Mr. VINSON of Georgia. I withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. And in the future I suggest the presiding officer should be consulted.

INDEPENDENT OFFICES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1944

Mr. WOODRUM of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1762) making appropriations for the executive office and sundry independent executive bureaus, boards, commissions, and offices, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

I have spoken to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN] and he has no objection.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees on the part of the House: Messrs. WOODRUM of Virginia, FITZPATRICK, STARNES of Alabama, HENDRICKS, WIGGLESWORTH, DIRKSEN, and CASE.

WHEAT FOR FEED

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Joint Resolution 133, to permit additional sales of wheat for feed.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the act approved March 25, 1943 (Public Law 18, 78th Cong.), be amended by deleting "two hundred and twenty-five million bushels" and inserting in lieu thereof "two hundred and seventy-five million bushels".

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the author of the resolution to give us a brief statement of what is proposed to be done under the resolution.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, this resolution simply amends Public Law No. 18, which authorized the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell an additional 100,000,000 bushels of wheat for feed. They have already sold the 100,000,000 and have received many other demands for wheat from feeders throughout the country.

I have received a report from the Commodity Credit Corporation in which they agree that this legislation should be passed, the object of which is simply to amend the present existing law by adding 50,000,000 bushels.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RIZLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The purpose of this resolution is simply to relieve the shortage and to take the wheat from Government storage?

Mr. RIZLEY. That is right. Demands have been received from all over the country that more of this wheat be released for feed, and this resolution will permit the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell an additional 50,000,000 bushels.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RIZLEY. Yes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. There is no other change in the existing law proposed by this amendment except to add this 50,000,000 bushels?

Mr. RIZLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No other change is proposed in the law as it now stands?

Mr. RIZLEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman if he has conferred with the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture about the resolution.

Mr. RIZLEY. I have conferred with the chairman of the committee; I also conferred with the Speaker and with the majority and minority leaders of the House.

Mr. PACE. The resolution is acceptable to the chairman of the committee?

Mr. RIZLEY. Yes.

Mr. PACE. He is absent and I make this inquiry for that reason.

Mr. RIZLEY. I have consulted him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. McGEHEE] be permitted to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OVER AND PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman tell us the program for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday the Consent Calendar will be called. Then there are three bills from the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair may say that there is the bill on the Consent Calendar on which, if it is not passed on the call of the calendar, the Chair has agreed to recognize the gentleman from Mississippi for a suspension on Monday.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. If I may interject, that is a bill from the Committee on Roads.

Mr. McCORMACK. There will be one suspension, as stated by the Speaker.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. That is the roads bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the roads bill. Does the gentleman from Mississippi know the number of the bill?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I do not recall the number of it, but it is the bill that was unanimously reported by the Committee on Roads. It is amendatory of existing legislation to provide for planning for future highway construction. It is the only bill reported by the committee.

Mr. McCORMACK. There are three bills reported out of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization to be considered, H. R. 1941, H. R. 1295, and H. R. 1291. I do not know whether or not these three bills will be disposed of on Monday, but the remainder of Monday after the call of the Consent Calendar and the suspension will be devoted to the consideration of such of these bills as may be disposed of. If they are not disposed of on Monday, their consideration will not continue on Tuesday.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Is the gentleman referring to the bills that were reported out of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization having to do with naturalization?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. A rule has been reported on each of these bills. One of them is a bill introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] permitting the naturalization of certain persons not citizens whose sons and daughters have served with the land or naval forces of the United States.

Mr. HARNESS of Indiana. Those three bills will be considered on Monday?

Mr. McCORMACK. They will be in order then. I do not know in what order they will be called up.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. These are the same three bills that have been on the program for several weeks?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. If they are not disposed of on Monday, that does not mean they will go over to Tuesday. I am assigning the rest of Monday to them, after the call of the Consent Calendar and the suspension.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In response to the question of the gentleman as to the number of the bill reported by the Committee on Roads, may I say that it is H. R. 2798, a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads," and so forth.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

On Tuesday two conference reports will be considered on the deficiency and Treasury-Post Office appropriation bills. If they are not disposed of on that day, they will, of course, continue on Wednesday.

After the disposition of these two conference reports, there will be called up the bill H. R. 2795, introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] and being handled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]. It is in relation to the disposition of surplus material. After that will come the Barden bill, the vocational rehabilitation bill

I have no knowledge now of whether or not the legislative appropriation bill will go to conference, but if it does and the conferees agree, sometime during the week we shall try to bring that conference report up for consideration.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MAY. The Women's Army Corps bill has just been sent to conference. I am hopeful that we can have a meeting on it tomorrow morning. When will it be possible to have the conference report on that bill considered?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am glad the gentleman from Kentucky made that observation, because, of course, whatever our program is, conference reports will always receive as early consideration as possible.

That is the program for next week.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes on the procedure on this antilabor legislation this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 6 minutes immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the committee of investigation authorized by House Resolution 38, not exceeding $100,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by the committee, signed by the chairman thereof, and approved by the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. MAGNUSON assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is this the resolution the gentleman talked to me about yesterday as carrying money for the Committee on Agriculture?

Mr. PATTON. That is right.

Mr. RAYBURN. This is the point to which I wish to call attention: When we agree to an investigation, we never can agree on the amount for which the committee will ask. I think this is a ridiculous amount this committee has insisted on and the Committee on Accounts has agreed to. I talked to the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture on yesterday and he agreed with me that $25,000 was what he would ask the Committee on Accounts for this morning. I said to him that I did not want the committee to report or to talk about anything more than $50,000. I said if they do not have enough they can get more. They could set up their budget for $25,000, and if they spend that this year of course we would give them more. I understand the chairman of the committee was not present this morning but the committee now reports a resolution for $100,000 to begin this one investigation. I just want to say this, that from now on when gentlemen come to me and talk about investigations, I am going to have some arrangement with them about how much money they are going to ask for before I agree to it.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. Of course, this is a privileged resolution. I just do not like to be treated in this way. Let me say this. The acting chairman of the Committee on Accounts endeavored to carry out the agreement that I had with him yesterday, but he was outvoted.

Mr. PATTON. We did have an agreement, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] has just said, between the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FULMER], the Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], and, I believe, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], and myself. I called up the resolution before the Committee on Accounts this morning. Quite a number of the members of the Committee on Agriculture appeared before the committee and made their explanation. They said that this little sum of $25,000—the amount that was agreed to with the Speaker, the chairman of the committee, and myself yesterday afternoon—was too small. They ridiculed the idea and said that $25,000 would just whip them before they got started—it would whip the very purpose for which they were organized.

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PATTON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. This is a privileged resolution, and it comes from the Committee on Accounts?

Mr. PATTON. Yes; by a unanimous vote.

Mr. MICHENER. And if enacted into law it is an authorization to expend that amount of money—$100,000?

Mr. PATTON. Yes.

Mr. MICHENER. And the Committee on Agriculture would not have to go before the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. PATTON. No.

The SPEAKER. This comes out of the contingent fund of the House.

Mr. MICHENER. Then as a matter of fact, what we would do here today is really to draw a check, if we pass this resolution, for $100,000 upon the contingent fund of the House, to be expended by this particular investigating committee?

Mr. PATTON. That is correct. The members of the Committee on Agriculture who appeared before our committee this morning stated that it was the purpose of the chairman of that committee to divide this investigating committee up into five to seven subcommittees, and that each one of them would go into different phases of agriculture, and of course when they made that statement it means this: When you divide the money among five subcommittees, each one gets only $5,000 apiece, to start with. I tried to carry out the agreement that I had had with the Speaker and the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. Will not the gentleman withdraw his resolution?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a statement about this.

Mr. PATTON. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I am a member of the Committee on Accounts. Practically the full membership of the Committee on Agriculture was before the Committee on Accounts this morning. We had a discussion lasting for practically an hour, as to what the Committee on Agriculture proposes to do. I do not know how many Members realize it, but if you will notice, we are rolling back prices on butter and meat and other things, and what else is being rolled back on by some of the Federal agencies here on the farmers I do not know. The Agriculture Committee wants to set up a committee of five as the chairman of the Committee on Accounts, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATTON], has said, and provide an appropriation of $50,000. If we are going to do a job, a hard job, a job that requires money, just $50,000 is an insult to the Committee on Agriculture, when it is put on paper. They say it is another boy play, that if you are going to give them a job, then give them enough money to do the job, and I say to you that if we are going to provide food in quantities and provide it for the armed forces, we are certain to have to go back on the farms and we cannot have rolling prices on butter and meat and eggs and what not, with no account investigations, and these members of the Committee on Agriculture which appeared before our committee this morning expressed themselves, and I am the man who made the motion to raise the appropriation from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. Let me finish. I have time and again voted for like sums and for other committees, not one-tenth the importance of this investigating committee, and I am happy that I voted for the $100,000 appropriation. If I did not think it was needed, I would not have made the motion, and the vote was unanimous. Even the chairman voted for it. When everybody else had held up their hands, I said to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATTON], "How do you feel about it?" and he also held up his hand, and so it was a unanimous expression from the Committee on Accounts.

Mr. PATTON. In deference to the Speaker and other Members, I think it is quite proper that I should withdraw the resolution at this time, and I will call it up again on Monday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas withdraws the resolution.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON PATENTS

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I present a resolution (H. Res. 250), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That until otherwise authorized by law there shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives the sum of $2,100 per annum, payable monthly, as compensation to an assistant clerk to the Committee on Patents, to be appointed by the chairman thereof.

Mr. PATTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that this resolution creates a new job of assistant clerk to the Committee on Patents. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN] has appeared before the committee several times and being a member of the committee he did not press it, but he finally came to the committee and said that the work was such that his experienced clerk had gone, just like many others have lost their splendid trained people, so he came before the committee with this resolution. It was unanimously agreed to by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my own remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the morning Baltimore Sun on taxation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. BURDICK addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include an article from a local paper.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a very fine article by Prof. Warren Seavey, of Harvard University, regarding the Chinese Exclusion Act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. CALVIN D. JOHNSON was granted permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.)

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of all other business and any special orders heretofore entered, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

THE MONETARY SITUATION

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, in this morning's issue of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD there appears the final and concluding installment of the reprint of Senator Cockrell's speech on money. My purpose in having this speech on money reprinted at this time is to provide the Members of Congress with a convenient reference of the history and principles of our monetary system, together with records of the negotiations in the past by the principal nations of the world for the establishment of an international monetary system. Coming at this time when this country and England propose to again undertake to establish a system of international money, I deem the facts and records presented in that speech of interest to every citizen of this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

COMPLETE FLORIDA BARGE CANAL NOW

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, I have here a very interesting editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of May 29. It gives further information concerning the imperativeness of completion at this time of the Intracoastal Waterway from Texas to New Jersey, with particular reference to the Florida portion of it.

The oil-scarcity situation in the Eastern States is growing more intense and acute every hour. It will grow more so, particularly with the coming of our offensive in Europe. That offensive may collapse unless we appropriate funds to construct this barge canal within the next 10 months. It is the responsibility of the Congress, and I urge that you assume this as your responsibility and appropriate funds for it.

The need of oil and gasoline of our armed forces in Europe is increasing hourly. This increase and demand will grow as our offensive in Europe expands. Oil sent to Europe must first reach the east coast of the United States. Our chief source of oil supply in this country is Texas, Louisiana, and Mississippi. These States border on the existing barge canal. This barge canal is now completed from these fields to Palatka on the St. Johns River, Fla. A stretch of some 30 miles will, with the Withlacoochee River, connect with Palatka on the St. Johns River, which is the east end of this great barge-canal system.

If this Florida link is completed, oil barges can and will operate directly from the oil fields to the east coast of all United States and on up to Trenton, N. J. Absolutely adequate quantities of oil, as well as sulfur and other war materials, can and will move through this system. Existing pipe lines and pipe lines now planned for construction and existing railroad facilities positively cannot bring to the east coast of our country adequate oil and gasoline supplies to be in turn from there transported across the Atlantic Ocean for our armed forces to use successfully and effectively in our pending and future European offensive against the Axis Powers. This offensive will absorb practically every drop of oil which can be and will be transported by existing facilities to the Atlantic seaboard, and then the supply will fall short for our offensive. This will leave absolutely no gasoline and oil on the east coast of our country for factory, home, automobile, and other consumption in the 17 Eastern Seaboard States.

Now, my friends, I am talking frankly with you and telling you what you may expect. I do this to try to encourage you to lay aside your prejudices and take up this matter as an American matter rather than one of protection of vested interests, and for one time, let the interests of all the citizens in these eastern seaboard 17 States prevail. I ask you to support an appropriation to complete this barge canal. It will require probably $30,000,000. The project can and will be completed in 10 months from the time the appropriation is made. If you doubt this statement, I refer you to the unimpeached evidence to this effect submitted to the House Committee on Appropriations.

Mark my word, a year from now when you cannot have even the limited amount of gasoline which you now use in your automobiles and for other home consumption, you will wish that you had heeded the needs of all the people in these 17 States rather than heeded the admonitions of competing carrier interests.

I hope you will read carefully the following editorial to which I referred.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include in the RECORD the editorial referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

LESS AND LESS GASOLINE

The eastern gasoline shortage grows more and more serious, especially for the farmers. This, in the country that produces 67 percent of the world's petroleum products. How should we whack around what gasoline we have?

In our opinion, the farmers should have first call on it, for planting, harvesting, and transporting crops. They should come ahead of the armed forces—but wait a moment, now, while we explain.

The explanation is that if we can't feed the armed forces our fighters can't go on fighting, and we shall lose the war.

Next to the farmers should come the armed forces, naturally. After them should come suburbanites, many of whom live far from railroads or bus lines, and most of whom are engaged in the numerous kinds of work necessary to keep the home front on its feet instead of on its ear. Last, though we don't enjoy saying it, should come city dwellers—because cities have subways, trolley cars, and fairly short-haul bus lines which can carry most city dwellers most of the way to and from work. Factory workers generally fall into one of the foregoing classes.

WHAT HAPPENED TO THE BARGE CANAL?

The question that continues to puzzle and irk us is why this gasoline shortage had to become as bad as it is.

Some months ago, Gen. Charles P. Summerall brought forward a plan which he said would guarantee the Eastern States all the gasoline and oil they needed, without rationing.

General Summerall commanded the First Division and the Fifth Corps in France in World War No. 1, and was Chief of Staff of the Army 1926–31. Since 1931 he has been president of the Citadel, noted South Carolina military college, and for several years he has served as chairman of the Florida Ship Canal Authority. In his Army years, General Summerall was particularly well known for his engineering and construction abilities.

To abolish eastern gasoline and oil shortages, Summerall proposed that the Florida ship canal, already well begun in early days of the New Deal, be completed as a barge canal. This would give oil barges drawn by Diesel-powered tugs a submarine-proof, stormproof, almost all-inland waterway from Gulf oil ports to lower New Jersey.

Summerall was convinced (and convinced many Senators and Congressmen) that the job could be done in 10 months, at a cost of about $44,000,000, and without trenching on any important war material or machine priorities.

In official Washington, however, the plan died the death.

Some railroads and some large oil companies were opposed to it. But spearheading the opposition was Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes, who hates oil barges for some reason and loves oil pipe lines. But the plan was not to substitute barges for pipe lines; it was to have them both. And today proves they were both needed. Ickes' pet pipe line, incidentally, was chopped in two the other day when the Arkansas flood waters got really into stride.

Why was the Summerall plan so bitterly and so effectually fought by the New Deal bureaucrats? We don't know, but our guess is that at bottom they were mad because they didn't think of it first.

Whatever the reason, the Eastern gasoline shortage is now menacing our entire war effort.

It shows no signs of easing off. The signs, indeed, point to worse gasoline shortages as the war goes on.

The situation should become especially acute when the cold weather sets in next fall and oil-burning home owners manifest a fairly understandable desire to keep flu and pneumonia away from themselves and their families.

When and if that comes to pass, we can all look back on the almost incomprehensible bureaucratic stupidity and stubbornness and jealousy that caused it.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the special orders heretofore granted today I may speak for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] is recognized for 10 minutes.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to give my opinion on the way this antilabor bill was passed this afternoon, the procedure that was used, and the effect it is going to have on the morale of the American men and women who are working in the factories of this country today.

This bill was brought before the House with no hearings in the committee of any kind, despite what the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs has stated. It was brought before this House, and the only Members who had any opportunity to speak on it during the general debate were the proponents of the bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAY] did not have the courtesy to extend to any of the opponents 1 minute of time. I asked on Wednesday and again on Thursday for time, and it was not granted. Finally, almost at the conclusion of yesterday's business, when I finally was recognized, I was given a grand total of 2 minutes to speak against this bill. I thank the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee for his generosity in extending to the opponents of this bill a limit of 2 minutes to all those who wanted to speak against it.

All over this land, people are proud of the fact that the accused is always guaranteed a voice in his own defense. Even the great State of Kentucky subscribes to that reasoning. My State pays the salary of a public defender in order to guarantee that an accused man shall be guaranteed every protection the law affords. This great Nation is engaged in a bloody war to preserve the freedom we love, to crush the dictators that subscribe to the policy that the accused shall not be allowed to speak in his own defense.

Perhaps the gentleman from Kentucky does not subscribe to our reasoning. Perhaps he believes the dictator's way is the best way. Apparently he believes the best way to get his ideas across is to stifle the voice of every man who does not agree with him.

Today American labor is in the position of being damned without a voice having been raised in its defense. The gentleman is to be complimented on his great legislative skill. His methods of procedure will edify those dictators who thought they knew how to silence opposition to their wishes.

I condemn that procedure. It is the rankest procedure ever witnessed in any group or any legislative body in my young years, and I sincerely hope that when this bill reaches the Senate the Senate will look upon it with cool and deliberate consideration and that it will be turned down. I am not one who gets up here every day in the week or every week in the year; this is only the third or fourth time I have taken the floor of the House in the 3 years I have been here, and I do not rise to speak on something I do not know anything about. Oh, I have heard some of those who come from farm States say they get up in the morning at 5:30 and work until dusk. I know what it is to work until dusk on the farm. I was born on a farm and know what it is to get up at 5:30 in the morning and milk six or seven cows, then go to school and come back again and do the same at night. I know what it is to do that every day for 10 years until I graduated from high school; but I also know the other side of the story. I know what it is to go out on the road and earn a living with my hands. I know what it is to join a union; I know what it is to be an official of a union. I know what it is to pay initiation fees to a union. I paid $107.15 to join the union I belong to. I paid $37 a year for yearly dues and still pay them in the bricklayers' union in the city of Providence. I was the president of that union; I am still an official of that union. I know the difficulties they work under. I know what it is to drive 40 miles to work at 5:30 in the morning, put in an 8-hour day and then take 2 hours to go back at night—putting in a 12-hour day to get 8 hours' pay.

Knowing the conditions laboring men work under today I know this bill is not going to have any good effect on the morale of our defense workers in this country. I thought we were supposed to deliberate here in a cool and sensible manner; I thought, when we were considering this bill today, that we were to consider it with a view of increasing our war production, of winning this war. I say to every Member of this House that this bill is not going to increase production. If this bill is enacted into law it is going to lower the morale of every workingman and woman in this country, and I know whereof I speak. I am intimately acquainted with every labor group in Rhode Island. I know personally most of the men and women in industry in the State of Rhode Island. I have lived with them—I have worked with them, and I have walked the streets during the depression with them—without a dime in my pocket. Look at the record they have produced for this Nation at war.

They have worked hard and long—they have not struck—they have not laid down on the job. They have produced and produced in order to arm their sons, their brothers, their husbands. They have gone without oil for heating their homes. They have not had adequate food or clothing. They have done without whatever was not available, but they kept right on working. Is that what the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Virginia have in mind when they refer to the disorganizing influences of labor leaders?

We have in my State the finest group of labor leaders you can find anywhere. They are all men who have worked at their trade. They know the difficulties which attend that trade and they appreciate an employee's problems. We have no union difficulties. We will not have any union difficulties. Yet these men are to be branded as culprits—yes, even as traitors. In spite of the years of devoted service they have given, they are to be told they are interfering with the Nation's war effort; so they are to be branded and, merely because they are labor leaders, they are to be told they are not worthy to be called fellow Americans.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] gets up on this floor and says he wants to be fair. The gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, says he wants to be fair. When he got up this morning he said: "Oh, I have no bad feelings left from yesterday; I am a different man; I am happy."

Mr. Speaker, I am not of that same temperament. I am not happy. I have the same feelings I had yesterday against him and the proponents of this measure, in the way they railroaded this particular measure through this House—without giving the opponents the right to discuss the merits and demerits of the bill.

The gentleman from Virginia on Wednesday, when he first took the floor on the rule making this bill in order, looked up into the gallery and said, "Well, I see the goon squads, for the labor leaders are here again." That, Mr. Speaker, is contemptible. That, Mr. Speaker, is typical of the frame of mind that has been displayed by the proponents of this legislation throughout the so-called debate.

Because men who are elected by members of labor unions to represent them come here to plead the cause of labor, they are called goon squads. Does the gentleman from Virginia feel that way about the young sailor who sat in the gallery a few days ago and decried the fact that the Civil War was being fought all over again here in this House?

Mr. Speaker, I want him to know that the labor leaders who are here have a right to be here, just as any other American has a right to be here. I want the gentleman from Virginia to know those men are just as patriotic as he ever was or ever will be.

So far as threats are concerned, I do not care about any threats from William Green or John L. Lewis or anybody; and I do not care about any threats from the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] when he starts out by saying that 50 of the men who voted against the Smith bill in 1941 were not reelected. I voted against that bill and I came back here with an increased plurality of 50 percent. I only wish to God today that I had been able to vote a sufficient number of times to defeat this bill. As far as the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] is concerned, if he would only come up in my district next election time and speak against me it would assure me of reelection in the State of Rhode Island. That is what the people of the State of Rhode Island think about these antilabor men we have in Congress today.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Montana. I compliment the gentleman on his remarks. I know they come from the heart as well as the mind. As I have listened to the debate in the House the last few days I have wondered a great deal if we have forgotten that the sons of labor are fighting this war just the same as the sons of farmers and businessmen. Can we not appreciate the fact that we should put into practice the tenets of democracy as well as preach them and give credit to these people for doing a remarkably efficient job of production, give them the credit which is justly due?

Mr. FOGARTY. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, we have not solved the trouble by any means by the passage of this legislation. It may even cause some strikes. The responsibility for strikes in this country today rests only on the shoulders of this Congress at the present time. The only reason they strike is to get a higher wage. The only reason they want a higher wage is to be able to pay for the stuff they need to eat and the clothes they put on their back. It is the duty of this Congress to stabilize prices, to put a ceiling on prices, and keep its word when it says it is going to.

The Congress told the people of this country a year ago it was going to stabilize prices, it was going to put a ceiling on prices. What do we find at the present time? Foodstuffs have risen on an average 100 percent, yet whenever a labor man or any labor union says they want 10 or 15 percent increase in wages, it is said throughout the country that labor is unjustified, while they are not getting enough money to feed their own children. That is the seat of all the trouble. That is the seat of the trouble we should get at, and it is up to this Congress to do it. Until we roll back the prices that exist today there are going to be strikes and more strikes in this country in order that they may be able to live on the wages they are getting.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. The vote taken today in the House will be hailed by the Rome, Tokyo, and Berlin radios within the next 24 hours.

Mr. FOGARTY. I may say to all these anti-Communists we have in Congress, those who have been doing everything they can to fight the Communist Party, that this is going to make more fertile ground to sow the seeds of communism in the case of these disgruntled workers.

Mr. PATMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman know that the activities of John L. Lewis are very pleasing to both Tojo and Hitler?

Mr. FOGARTY. I do not condone any actions of John L. Lewis. I condemn them. But I do maintain that this is no way to take care of that situation, and you will never take care of it by the passage of bills such as was passed today.

Mr. PATMAN. Does not the gentleman think we should first ask for the unconditional surrender of John L. Lewis before we win the war? In other words, that will be necessary to win the war?

Mr. FOGARTY. The first thing to do is call off the surrender of your job as a Congressman. Stop rising prices—control prices on essentials the way you promised you would do. Then I will guarantee you will have no trouble at all.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of other special orders today I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that following the address by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BRYSON] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BRYSON. Mr. Speaker, like others who spoke on the bill which passed the House today, as one of the proponents of legislation, I too express regret in not having appointed time in which to speak before the passage of the bill through the House. I take it, however, that my speaking now is not entirely inappropriate because after all we will have to pass upon the bill again when it comes back from the Senate or from the conferees.

Mr. Speaker, in history I have read where Napoleon's presence in battle was worth a hundred thousand soldiers. John L. Lewis apparently has even greater influence, for he has called a half million men from battle line.

Every worker, whether in farm, mine, or factory, is indeed a soldier. It is true that the battle goes well with us now. The tide has definitely turned our way. There is still, however, much fighting, suffering, and death ahead. Unless each individual does his or her part victory cannot be assured.

Free labor has astounded the world in its accomplishments. War implements of the finest sort in undreamed-of numbers have been manufactured and transported to the most remote parts of the world. Millions of loyal workers have gladly assumed new and additional burdens.

Fair women stand shoulder to shoulder with men in industries. The cry for increased production has been amply met.

Representing, as I do, the largest textile district in the world, I am particularly pleased that our mills have turned out many more products than they did during the last World War with even less spindles in operation. Cotton and its products rank second only to steel, and are as essential to our war effort. More than 5,000 articles containing cotton are used by our armed forces as they fight around the globe.

Peace and harmony between employer and employee have been the rule, but there are exceptions.

Those of us who have labored through the years are proud of our accomplishments. We would jealously safeguard the advances made. No person of reason would advocate or consent to the repeal of laws enacted for the protection of labor. We would not relinquish our social gains except insofar as is necessary to win the war. Let us not, however, sit supinely by and permit unwise leadership to cause the forfeiture of any gains.

A strike has been ordered against our Government in its war industries over which flies our country's flag. More than a year ago in a speech in this House I stated, in part, as follows:

> Consider the horrible spectacle of a man in a defense industry laying down his tools and going on a strike during these dire days of national agony and peril. The man who commits such an unpardonable atrocity against the Nation's war effort is not only depraved with the most violent form of selfishness, he is disgracefully afflicted with a kind of dumbness and stupidity which comes, in large measure, from his neglectfulness in the duty of knowing what we are fighting to save; because, most assuredly, if he knew just what the winning or losing of this war is going to mean to him, to his family and to his fellow workers in terms, possibly of life itself, liberty itself, and the pursuit of happiness itself, he would, instead of making himself almost a traitor to his country, do everything within his power to work for her salvation. Any owner of furnace, farm, or factory who thinks first of profits at this crucial time is devoid of patriotism.

On Sunday last while in my district I heard a great mass of people make the following pledge:

We, the people of Spartanburg County, S. C.—from the farms and factories, from the towns and cities— assembled here in a solemn ceremony, rededicating ourselves to the true ideals of democracy, do now pledge ourselves, hopefully and prayerfully, to do our utmost in whatever capacity we are able to serve, so that our men and women on the fighting fronts may speedily accomplish victory over our enemies.

Further, we hereby broadcast an invitation and a challenge to every other community in the Nation to join with us in this movement of rededication, so that human freedom, and honor, and decency, and a righteous peace may once again become the guiding principles of mankind.

And may God give us strength and courage, no matter how great shall be our personal sacrifices, to fulfill our responsibilities to those on the fighting fronts.

While there I met a mother with six sons in the service. A father with four sons in uniform writes me as follows:

It has been some time since I wrote you about any public matters, but listening to the news commentators and reading our local papers in reference to the strikes in our war industries and the coal mines, I am wondering what is keeping Congress from making some effort to curb this kind of conduct. The people with whom I come in contact are criticizing Congress for allowing a thing like this to go on when the implements which they are making are so vitally important to our boys who are in the service.

A little mother came in to see me with two babies whose father had been inducted into the Army.

Thus it is that sacrifices and deprivations are gladly being made without complaint.

Shall we as the representatives of the sovereign people allow the cancerous condition developed in this strike against our Government to go without the surgeon's knife?

Unless and until this serious matter is speedily and effectively dealt with by the enactment of proper legislation irreparable losses will result.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I have taken this time to call to the attention of the Members of the House, and particularly to the Members of the Midwest, where floods have recently ravaged farms and towns on the banks of rivers in that section, the way a similar danger has been handled in the Tennessee Valley. I do this for the reason that I know the people who are living in those sections and their Representatives in Congress are very greatly interested in trying to find the most feasible means of preventing a recurrence of these devastating floods.

It is with a peculiar sense of sympathy that I rise to comment on the desolating floods that have ravaged the farms and towns and cities on the banks of rivers in the West and Midwest. For the district I represent has had similar disasters fall upon it in the past. The city of Chattanooga, my home, is located in one of the most vulnerable areas in the valley of the Tennessee. Our history has a good many chapters recording the loss of property, the human suffering that the violence of floods has caused.

In 1867, when Chattanooga was a small city with a population of only about 5,000, the worst flood on record occurred. A newspaper of the day reported that "for miles and miles the land is hidden, only a few of the higher points of hills being above the water. In Chattanooga tonight there are 4 to 8 feet of water in all the streets." No estimate was made of the financial loss due to that flood. But estimates have been made of the loss which would occur if the same flood stage should be reached today, with the city at its present level of development. If the flood of 1867 were to recur today, the damage to property alone would exceed $37,500,000.

To protect our city against a flood of this magnitude by local flood works alone would be impossible. If we tried we would discover what cities located on other rivers have found out—levees would be breached, sea-walls would be overrun when a really high flood occurred. We do not face the prospect of that sad disillusion, for the situation in Chattanooga is different today. We know that complete protection of the city against any disaster from flood will be possible. It will be possible because of the storage reservoirs built by the T. V. A. on the Tennessee River and its tributaries above Chattanooga. In a report submitted in 1938, the T. V. A. outlined a plan by which a local flood protection system, well within the limits of engineering feasibility, could be constructed for approximately $15,500,000. These local works, together with the flood storage provided by T. V. A. reservoirs, will protect Chattanooga against what the engineers call a design flood—a flood of 730,000 cubic feet per second, which would top the 1867 flood by 10 feet. Unregulated, such a flood would cause damage estimated at $70,000,000 at Chattanooga. No sea-wall or levee could hold it. But the upstream storage already provided has reduced our danger to a point where the recommended local works will give us full protection. Since more reservoir dams have been built than was contemplated when the T. V. A. report of 1938 was made, the cost of full protection to the city will probably be less than was originally estimated.

Those local works, which must be built to protect the city fully, must wait until after the war. But the T. V. A. system already is providing substantial protection which minimizes flood damage. We are secure against the annual threat of floods of average crests, although we are not yet protected from the perfect flood, the worst that nature can do. We had a flood early this year. If the Tennessee had been uncontrolled, it would have caused at least a million dollars actual damage, and would have been infinitely costly in slowing war production and transportation. But the T. V. A. reservoirs were operated to reduce the maximum flood height from 39.7 feet to 35.8 feet, or nearly 4 feet, and Chattanooga was safe. In the 1937 flood, when T. V. A. had only a single reservoir above Chattanooga, it was able to reduce flood heights in January and February by amounts varying from 3 to 5 feet and saving an estimated $600,000. In floods in March and April 1936, the estimated saving in Chattanooga was $2,700,000.

In all, since March 1936, when the first T. V. A. reservoir became available for flood control, there have been eight occasions when the river would have exceeded flood stage at Chattanooga if the reservoirs had not held back the waters. Damage totaling some $4,500,000 has been prevented.

We are already experiencing the security that comes when a river is fully controlled. Complete protection is possible for the future. This is the unique experience of cities on the Tennessee, for this is the only example of a genuinely modern approach to the problem of flood control. Incidentally, the T. V A. reservoir dam system gives full protection to all communities on the Tennessee with the exception of Chattanooga.

Prior to the flood of 1927 on the Mississippi River, almost the entire reliance in flood control was placed on the construction of levees, seawalls, and similar engineering works designed to protect limited areas particularly subject to damage. The 1927 flood demonstrated in a devastating way that such works alone were bound to be ineffective. Obviously, they can have no effect on the amount or speed of the water's flow past a given point. They can only attempt to confine the natural flood flows within certain limits. Actually, by narrowing the natural channel which the flood would normally occupy in its sweep downstream, they raise the crest of the flood.

It was realized after the 1927 disaster that storage reservoirs, capable of holding back a part of the flood flows near their scurces at the headwaters, were the logical answer to effective flood control. There are definite limits to the height to which local flood protection works can be built, both because of cost and safety. On rivers which are uncontrolled they cannot give protection, but with reservoirs upstream to store flood flows and lower flood crests at danger points downstream these local flood-protection works can be made effective.

That is the modern theory. It has been carried into practice only on one watershed. The Tennessee is controlled, alone of all of the major rivers in the United States. Great storage dams on tributaries hold back the water near the source. A series of dams on the main river controls the flow, with Kentucky Dam near the mouth providing 4,500,000 acre-feet of flood storage to keep the waters of the Tennessee from rushing into the Ohio and the Mississippi when those rivers are too high for safety.

Each dam built by T. V. A. is a multipurpose structure. They are designed and operated as one system, not only to remove the menace of floods but in order that the maximum benefit may be obtained from a great natural resource. Those dams not only protect us from high water, they provide a channel for navigation, and make low-cost power available for the area's development.

In the Tennessee Valley, control of floods fits into the general pattern. We are particularly fortunate that the regulation of our river was entrusted to this great new regional agency whose total program is devoted to raising the income level of the area and removing barriers to production. The readjustments necessary to any such development have been accomplished with a minimum of strain and sacrifice upon the individual citizens. Necessarily, farm land has been flooded, but dislocated families have been helped in finding new locations, and the productivity of the acreage remaining has been stepped up by the changes in agricultural practices the new fertilizers produced by T. V. A. made possible. That is a part of flood control too. The cover that protects our once eroded soil holds the water in the land. The rain no longer rushes to join the rising river, black with fertility stolen from the soil. We are experiencing a total conservation program in the valley of the Tennessee. Those storage reservoirs are beautiful lakes, not only a source of delight and refreshment to those of us who have the good fortune to live there, but they will be a source of income to many individuals and small private businesses which serve the needs of recreation.

This is a system of river control which works. It is the only system which will work, which will give permanent protection, vast incremental benefits, and turn the rivers of this country into forces for production, not destruction. It is the only system which will give us freedom from fear of such disasters as have occurred this spring.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEFAUVER. I yield to my colleague from Missouri.

Mr. ZIMMERMAN. I have been greatly interested in the very elucidating and informative address which my colleague from Tennessee has just delivered.

As he knows, we have had some great floods in the Midwest. The State of Missouri has suffered greatly. Millions of dollars' worth of property has been destroyed and thousands of acres have been submerged, which will probably seriously interfere with the food program.

The St. Francis River has been one of the most turbulent streams in northeastern Arkansas and southeastern Missouri. It flows through my home county and through my district.

In 1935, when I came here, I went on the Flood Control Committee. That committee wrote legislation dealing with control of floods, and we adopted the first legislation authorizing the impounding of waters of tributary streams. We constructed the Wappella Dam on the St. Francis River. During this recent flood the reservoir held all of the water that came from the flood, otherwise it would have overflowed one of our richest and most fertile valleys, which was not affected at all by the flood, which goes to show what can be done if we are willing to impound the water on the tributaries and keep it out of the main streams which heretofore have caused serious damage through floods.

I want to congratulate the gentleman on his splendid discussion of the scientific method of controlling floodwaters.

Mr. KEFAUVER. I greatly appreciate the contribution the gentleman has made. My friend makes a persuasive argument for developments such as the T. V. A. on the principal rivers throughout the Nation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that it was necessary to pass any kind of a law, especially in time of war, to prevent strikes, but it was necessary that Congress should act on this question.

SECOND PEARL HARBOR COAL STRIKE

The second Pearl Harbor in this war was the coal miners' strike, which has been just about as damaging to our country's war effort from the standpoint of property loss as the first Pearl Harbor was, and if it is not ended very soon it will be more disastrous to us from that standpoint than the first Pearl Harbor was.

Every law that is passed that has penalty provisions applies necessarily to a minority of the people, because only a minority commit wrongs that laws should be passed to prohibit. If one says that because there are only a few strikes we should pass no law regarding strikes, one could use that same argument just as logically and consistently and say that we should not have any law against desertion from the armed forces because so few men desert the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and our armed forces. Suppose we did not have a law against desertion and a bill should be proposed in this body to make it an offense, with the death penalty, if you please, as it is now, for one to desert the armed forces, and the argument should be made, "We should not pass that kind of a bill, that will affect the morale of our good Army of from 7,000,000 to 9,000,000 men who are doing such an excellent job. We cannot afford to do that. It will injure or impair their morale." That argument would not be persuasive at all.

Would it not be just as persuasive to say that we should not pass any law affecting strikes because there are only a few people striking? It is absolutely the same argument. We should either stop strikes in essential war industries or we should be absolutely fair and consistent and repeal the law against desertions, which none of us would be willing to repeal.

FORCE UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER OF JOHN L. LEWIS

We have called for the unconditional surrender of the Axis Powers. That is the slogan of our allies. It is a good slogan, unconditional surrender. I believe right now we should so direct our efforts in that campaign of a successful war, in our efforts to obtain or secure the unconditional surrender of the Axis Powers, that we should now insist on and force the unconditional surrender of John L. Lewis. I believe that would be a long step in the direction of obtaining or securing the unconditional surrender of the Axis Powers.

Certainly we cannot carry on a war without the things that are made with coal. Steel is vital, other basic materials are vital, materials that can only be made or obtained through the use of coal. There is no bottleneck in our war effort that is more essential than the production of coal, and the stopping of the production of coal is just as helpful to our enemies and more helpful than any other one thing that our enemies could do if they were here in a large force. So it is not a reflection upon the good workers who have done such an excellent job to pass a law that will punish those who are not patriotic in this dark hour of our country's history.

IS CONGRESS PLAYING HORSE WITH THE PEOPLE ON ANTISTRIKE LEGISLATION?

We have passed a bill today. The people are beginning to feel that Congress is doing what is sometimes called in the West, playing horse, acting in just a playful, facetious way, not trying to do anything seriously or honestly. I do not know whether that is true or not. I do not think it is. I think this House means business, and the other body has acted.. Over a year ago the House of Representatives sent to the other body a very fine bill known as the Howard Smith bill, that would have stopped strikes, but the other body did not see fit to take up that bill and even consider it. The other body passed what was known as the Connally bill, dealing with strikes in plants taken over by the Government. They sent that to the House, but our body did not take up that Connally bill and consider it. Then this year we sent to the other body what is known as the Hobbs bill, and that bill was not considered by the other body. On the other hand, the other body took up another Connally bill—I think a very weak bill, but, of course, I am not impugning the motives or good intentions of the author when I say that, for possibly it was as strong a bill as they can pass in the other body, and they passed that bill and sent it over here to the House. Now, then, we are getting down to business. We have taken the Connally bill, and we have amended it, and made a good bill of it, and this afternoon by an overwhelming vote we have sent that bill back to the other body, and the people of this country will now find out whether the House is playing horse with them or whether the Senate is playing horse with them, or whether both the Senate and the House are playing horse. We will find out whether or not there is an honest, sincere effort upon the part of the Congress to pass an effective law that will prevent strikes in wartime, and I hope that such a bill is passed.

How can a man fight unless he has a gun and ammunition? Do you not think we are a bunch of cowards if we sit over here and permit our men all over the world to go along without ammunition and materials of war when we by our votes have sent them there? Would it not be cowardly not to send them guns and ammunition?

It is said it is easier to get cooperation on these measures voluntarily than by law.

If that is true, then, why not repeal the law against desertion and say that you can desert from the Army because we can get better cooperation without any law.

TREASON

It is only in recent years that anyone would have the audacity to strike against his government or to strike at all in an essential war industry in time of war. That is treason, absolutely, and you cannot make me believe that the good workers of this country are going to be offended because we are dealing with a few who are guilty of treason.

In civilian life we make the guns and the ammunition and send them to the men on the front. They are in military service by our votes; we put them there and now we are going to back them up by making it possible for them to get the materials of war unaffected by strikes, stoppages, and walk-outs.

We should subject strikers to this kind of law because they are not willing to go along and cooperate in the war. We cannot send those folks to Japan and Germany. They would be entertained over there.

BANQUET FOR LEWIS IN JAPAN

If you send John L. Lewis to Japan, they would not torture him like they did our flyers. They would give him a big banquet. He is doing an excellent job for our enemies. How much longer will we permit it? I hope the other body now cooperates with this House and passes a law and puts it on the statute books that will stop these strikes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have listened to these speeches that have been made since the final passage of this act. I am sorry the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] and the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] have left the floor since making their remarks, but I believe a great many of the remarks which have been made so strongly condemning this legislation come from a failure to know just what this bill really contains.

On yesterday the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] said that he proposed, in the event the Harness amendment was voted down, to offer a substitute. He stated at that time that the heart of this bill was contained in section 13 of the House bill and section 4 of the Connally bill as it came to us from the Senate. He did not say that in so many words, but that is what I understood him to mean. I submit to you, as I suggested to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS] a little while ago, that clause 2 of section 13 gives specific authority to deal with the present coal-strike situation, and does the very thing that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK] said was the thing that should be done, and that the majority leader of this House said to us was the thing that should be done. That section is in the bill as it passed the House. It was not in the original Harness substitute. The Harness substitute left out all reference to the War Labor Board and the definition of its powers and duties. I may say that Mr. Davis, Chairman of the War Labor Board, testified before our committee that every section relating to the War Labor Board, with the exception of section 12, was good and would be helpful.

In writing those sections we were not trying to do anything to chastise labor. We followed just as closely as we could the Executive order of the President setting up the War Labor Board and defining its duties and powers, and gave to it in addition the power of subpena. We made it a legal entity, whereas today it is a legal nonentity. The War Labor Board today has absolutely no power to enforce any order that it might make. I presume it is not answerable in court for anything it might do because it is a legal nonentity. It does not exist in the eyes of the law. We clothed it with legal authority.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Aside from the right to subpena witnesses, what power does this bill, as it passed the House today, give to the War Labor Board?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me suggest at this time that every Member of this House in order to try to understand what we did pass today, should get the Congressional RECORD of yesterday and turn first to pages 5328 and 5329. On those pages is set out the Harness substitute. The Harness substitute took section 1 of the House bill and section 2 and section 3 of the House bill. Then he put in a section 4 which would have penalized violations under sections 2 and 3. Then he put in section 5 of this bill, which provided for the registration of labor unions. I believe that is section 7 in the House bill. Then he put in a new section 6, which related to the political contributions by labor organizations, banks, and so on.

If I remember correctly, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK] offered an amendment today to strike that section from the amendment. If I remember correctly, that amendment was rejected. So section 6 remains in the bill, but it is more or less ineffectual because we have pretty much the same law already in the Hatch Act. I believe this does go a little further. Then section 7 in the Harness substitute is the last sentence of section 12 in the House bill.

Section 8 in the Harness substitute is section 14 of the House bill.

Now, on page 5335 will be found the Smith amendment, which restored to the Harness substitute sections 8, 9, 10, 11, and 13 of the House bill, those sections relating to the War Labor Board, with the exception of section 12, which the Committee on Military Affairs had agreed to strike from the bill. I believe also that the Smith amendment struck out the power to enforce the orders of the War Labor Board by injunction. He omitted that. As finally adopted, he also omitted the last sentence to be found in section 8, subsection (b), on page 17, of the House bill, which said that the Board should not under any conditions require as a condition of employment that any individual become or remain a member of a labor organization. That sentence was objected to by all of the agencies whose representatives testified before us. One sees, therefore, that the Smith amendment put back into the Harness substitute the sections that the War Labor Board wanted, leaving out the only two parts to which they objected, and that action gives the War Labor Board legal standing. That is the measure we have.

I agree with some of the things that have been said here. I stated on the floor of this House twice in the course of the consideration of this bill that I favored the deletion of sections 2 and 3 of the bill because the agencies of this Government charged with war production said they ought to come out and I believed they should come out. We offered an amendment, that amendment was voted down. It was noticeable however that the Members who cried out against the harshness of this bill voted against the amendments to take out those two sections. It was probably strategic, they probably wanted to make this bill just as bad as they could in order that it would be voted down on a roll call; but had they wanted to turn this into a piece of good legislation why did they not help us strike out the parts that the procuring agencies of the Government said ought to be taken out and the parts they say the unions objected to? They voted to leave them in, whereas we who were working hard on this bill trying to make a good bill out of it followed the recommendation of the Government agencies and tried our best to strike those sections from the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. What is the exact language of the Smith amendment that the gentleman says is the same as the amendment that was supposed to have been offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. RAMSPECK]?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Section 13 of the House bill, which is the identical language lifted word for word from the bill that was sent to us from the Senate as contained in section 4 of that bill. I will read the language, and may I state also that I understand this is what the gentleman from Georgia referred to yesterday and it is a thing I called to the attention of the gentleman from California a few moment ago, or some other gentleman who made the statement that there was nothing in this bill that affected the present coal strike; as a matter of fact, it is hard to legislate against a condition that has already arisen, because in this country we frown upon making penalty laws retroactive. We can, however, make a law that will apply from this time on. Section 13 of the House bill reads as follows:

SEC. 13. (a) Whenever any plant, mine, or other property is in the possession of the United States, it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to coerce, instigate, or induce any person to interfere, by lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption, with the operation of such plant, mine, or property.

The time probably is passed when that would be applicable to the present situation, but listen to the language which follows:

Or (2) to aid any such lock-out, strike, slow-down, or other interruption interfering with the operation of such plant, mine, or property by giving direction or guidance in the conduct of such interruption or by providing funds for the conduct or direction thereof or for the payment of strike, unemployment, or other benefits to those participating therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If I understand correctly, that is the provision to which both the majority whip and the majority leader referred on the floor of this House as taking care of the present situation. When they made their statements the Harness substitute was before us and that language was not in it, but then the Smith amendment was adopted restoring that language; so it seems to me we have complied with the wishes of the majority leader and the majority whip when this was restored to the bill that something be put in the bill to take care of the present situation.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Am I to understand from the gentleman, then, that he has very much the same opinion about this legislation that I have: That it should be limited insofar as possible to dealing with the current situation that confronts the Nation? Is that the gentleman's idea?

Mr. SPARKMAN. With this qualification: I believe that the time has come in this country when we are going to have to have some kind of regulatory labor legislation, for the good of labor itself. It has reached that state of bigness where regulation becomes necessary for its own good. I have talked with labor leaders within the last few days who have agreed with me in that statement. I have said repeatedly, and I think it is a fact, that labor leaders themselves should formulate that legislation. I believe they did it some years back when the Railway Labor Act was passed, and there have been other pieces of labor legislation that were formulated more or less by agreement of those who were vitally concerned with it. I believe that the sound, able, patriotic labor leaders of this country—and they are vastly in the majority when it comes to labor leadership—I believe they ought to get together, formulate some plan, and say to some Member of Congress in whom they have confidence: "We believe that the time has come to put on the statute books some kind of regulatory legislation, and we would like for you to sponsor this piece of legislation for us."

In connection with that type of legislation I think it might be well to have sections 2 and 3 in it and probably the registrations of unions, perhaps not as sweeping as provided in this particular section. There are a good many things that might go in there that I believe should have been left out of this bill because we are seeking now to deal with an emergency, not only the emergency that is upon us but a recurrence of strikes that may come while we are in this war. After all this piece of legislation is not permanent law. It is not sought to keep it on the books permanently, but only for the duration and 6 months thereafter, or even earlier if the Congress sees fit to take it off the statute books.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am always interested in any statement the distinguished gentleman from Alabama has to make. He has made a very informative and interesting address. I was especially interested in the statement of the gentleman that he thinks the labor leaders ought to get together on some kind of legislation. Does not the gentleman think that the bill passed by this House today will result in the labor leaders getting together and that it will be an incentive for them to get together?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I certainly hope it does result in that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I understand that since the passage of the bill one John L. Lewis has ordered his men back to the mines on next Monday.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am delighted to have that report. I hope it is true.

Mr. KEFAUVER. May I ask the gentleman if he does not have a good deal of misgivings about section 2? I personally think that is a very unfortunate section in that it requires a 30-day cooling-off period. In this present emergency, however, we have a no-strike agreement.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Wait just a minute. I have stated that a half dozen times.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Does not the gentleman think it would be a good idea if this section were left out in conference?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I have stated that I opposed this section I voted against it in the Committee of the Whole and I have spoken on the floor. This is the third time I have spoken, and every time I have said both sections 2 and 3 should be left out of the bill, and I earnestly hope that the conferees will leave it out because the agencies of the Government charged with procuring our war supplies say it will be hurtful to their program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. The gentleman would be rendering a great service if he will take the bill and analyze each section as it passed the House. The gentleman will recall that we not only had the original bill as presented by the gentleman's committee, but then the Harness amendment was offered more or less as a substitute, after which the Smith amendment was offered as a substitute for the Harness amendment. That was on yesterday. Today, when the House met, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] introduced another amendment very similar to the one he introduced yesterday but with certain vital changes.

Mr. SPARKMAN. May I interrupt to say that the amendment which finally passed was the Smith amendment of yesterday with the exception of one sentence. That is the sentence I pointed out.

Mr. PATMAN. Would the gentleman mind analyzing the bill for us? Would that be asking too much of him? Analyze it in the RECORD tonight so that we will see it tomorrow.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not see how I can very well go any further. I have tried here to go through and show the sections of the bill which has passed and their relation to the bill as reported.

Mr. PATMAN. What I was referring to is the fact the gentleman has expressed a different viewpoint from many that have been expressed during the consideration of this bill. The gentleman is a very able member of that committee and has studied this legislation and kept up with it, and I am anxious to see his viewpoint expressed section by section.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

There is just one other thing I want to say here, and that is this: I think it is deplorable that at any time, and in the heat of debate, these charges of insincerity should be made. I believe that most of the Members of this House are sincere, in fact, I could not pick out a single Member and say that he was insincere in the manner in which he voted for legislation.

I think it is unfortunate also that threats are made her in the Well of the House by any Member, or by a force of organized groups on the outside, and I do not believe that the vast majority of the Members of the House allow themselves to be influenced by those threats.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

Mr. VINSON of Georgia, for an indefinite period, on account of illness in the family.

Mr. DAWSON, for Monday and Tuesday, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SHAFER] may extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a newspaper article.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SENATE BILL REFERRED

A bill of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 217. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to requisition property required for the defense of the United States," approved October 16, 1941, to continue it in effect; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1670. An act to amend section 2 of the Civilian Pilot Training Act of 1939, as amended;

H. R. 2570. An act to provide for the current payment of the individual income tax, and for other purposes;

H. R. 2848. An act amending the joint resolution making an appropriation to assist in providing a supply and distribution of farm labor for the calendar year 1943, approved April 29, 1943; and

H. J. Res. 111. Joint resolution to extend the authority of the President under section 350 of the Tariff Act of 1930, as amended.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

SENATE

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father God, we turn to Thee sorely perplexed with our own thoughts, often confused and confounded by the vastness of human problems confronting us. Save us from the despair of a defeated cynicism which denies that there is any road to the fair city of our dreams. Forgive our foolish ways and our faltering faith. Our lives are so cluttered with the trivial and the trifling that mistaken magnitudes keep us from fixing our hearts on the great issues that at last prove to be the factors of our destiny. When common bushes along the way of our daily toil flame with divine fire, forgive us that so often we stand on holy ground with irreverent feet and unseeing eyes, conscious of the bush but not of the flame.

We do not ask to see distant scenes and final goals. We ask but for light enough for the next step ahead and for faith and fortitude to take it boldly. As we go our pilgrim way make us grateful for night skies that bring out the clear stars of faith, for hard tasks that develop the sinews of strength, for sorry failures that bloom into new achievements, and for futile quests which drive us back unfilled to Thee. Along our differing paths, bring us all to the homeland of Thy eternal love. We ask it in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENTS ACT — STATEMENT BY THE SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the Secretary of State commenting upon the final passage of the bill renewing the Trade Agreements Act be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The Secretary of State, in commenting upon the final passage of the renewal of the Trade Agreements Act, said:

"The further extension of the trade-agreements program by a large nonpartisan majority of both Houses of the Congress is a most welcome and far-reaching decision, coming as it does at a time when the whole future of our Nation depends upon our clarity of vision and resoluteness of action with respect to the momentous questions that are before us.

"The size and character of the affirmative vote in the House and in the Senate reflects the most important thing a democracy can possess—an informed and united public opinion. The clean-cut renewal of the trade-agreements program has had vigorous and almost unanimous support of the press, of responsible spokesmen of American agriculture, business and labor, and of other public-spirited groups which have been steadfast in their endorsement of the program. It is a splendid manifestation of national unity in favor of practical international collaboration now and for the future, an encouragement at home and to our allies and friends abroad, and a blow to our enemies."

MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency:

House Memorial 9

A memorial to the Congress of the United States of America, petitioning the immediate passage of the Boren bill now pending before Congress, known and designated as House Resolution 1502, amending the Securities and Exchange Act of 1934, and introduced by Congressman LYLE H. BOREN, of Oklahoma

Whereas by virtue of ambiguities in the Securities and Exchange Commission Act of 1934, questions have arisen as to the authority of the Securities and Exchange Commission to regulate securities issued by States, political subdivisions, and instrumentalities thereof; and

Whereas it is felt that public financing by the States, political subdivisions, and instrumentalities thereof, are matters of local concern and should not be regulated or restricted by bureaus of the Federal Government; and

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States, a bill (H. R. 1502) introduced by Congressman LYLE H. BOREN, of Oklahoma, amending the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and making it clear that the Securities Exchange Commission has no regulatory jurisdiction over the public financing and bonds of the States and their political subdivisions, municipalities, and instrumentalities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the State of Florida, and the Senate of the State of Florida, do respectfully memorialize and petition the Congress of the United States of America to immediately enact said Boren bill, known as House resolution 1502; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this memorial, under the great seal of the State of Florida, be immediately forwarded by the secretary of state to the President of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States Congress, and that copies be forwarded to the delegation representing the State of Florida in both the House and Senate of the United States Congress.

Approved by the Governor May 31, 1943.

STATE, JUSTICE, AND COMMERCE DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I submit for proper reference an amendment which I intend to propose to H. R. 2397, making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce, and so forth. I ask that the amendment be printed in the body of the RECORD, and that it be followed by a statement which I have prepared.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. MURRAY (for himself and the Special Committee to Study and Survey Problems of Small Business Enterprises) to the bill (H. R. 2397) making appropriations for the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill, insert the following: "Provided, That, after 30 days following the approval of this act and notwithstanding any other provision of law or executive or administrative act, no part of this appropriation shall be used to enforce directly or indirectly in any respect (whether by criminal or civil proceedings in any court or by administrative proceedings or executive acts in any agency or by any officer of the Government of the United States or in any manner whatever concerning) any maximum price, priority, rationing, allocation, distribution, limitation, or similar rules, regulations, directives, or orders relating to goods, supplies, or products for civilian consumption as against any processor, fabricator, wholesaler, or retailer thereof in the usual course or custom of trade, where the facts offered in defense in any such proceeding or before any such court, agency, or officer demonstrate that any such rules, regulations, or orders do not (1) afford, as compared with the prevailing cost of agricultural or other materials or products (including livestock) such persons must buy for processing or resale, the generally fair and necessary operating margins consistent with the third proviso of section 3 of the act of October 2, 1942 (Public, No. 729, 77th Cong., 2d sess.); or (2) make due, adequate, and affirmative provision for the allocation or distribution of such available supplies, goods, or products through the usual and established channels of trade (including processors, fabricators, wholesalers, or retailers) in the proportion so distributed during the calendar year 1941 as contemplated by section 2 (h) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 (Public, No. 421, 77th Cong., 2d sess.); or, (3) as to such rules, regulations, or orders issued or amended after 30 days following the approval of this act, have been issued or amended without full consultation orally or in writing with a standing advisory committee composed of representatives and alternates chosen by, and assigned to such committees upon petition of, the several trade associations of the industry dealing in the commodity directly affected (including processors, fabricators, wholesalers, and retailers) and representative of each branch of such industry as required by section 2 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942: Provided further, That, in order to prevent evasions of the foregoing, no part of any other appropriation nor any other public funds, personnel, services, or property whatever shall be so used and any court, agency, or officer acting contrary to the foregoing in any case shall be without jurisdiction or authority in such case and any judgments, decrees, orders, rules, regulations, or rulings or other judicial or administrative acts or process issued by any such court, agency, or officer in any such case shall be null and void."

The statement presented by Mr. MURRAY to accompany the amendment is as follows:

Any price control system should be administered in such a manner as to prevent a widespread injury to small, independent business concerns or expansion of monopoly control of our economy. I think this can be accomplished if the intent of Congress is followed.

The Senate Small Business Committee has been called upon time and again to protect small business enterprise from the destructive effect of certain orders and regulations issued by the Office of Price Administration. In a series of conferences and hearings, many of these problems have been ironed out and modifications secured to prevent widespread disaster to small business. I think that the Office of Price Administration is desirous of carrying into effect the intention of Congress. It is a huge task and it is only reasonable to expect that many mistakes will be made. When the effect of the erroneous orders and regulations has been brought to the attention of the Office of Price Administration, we have usually been able to have them corrected.

It cannot be denied that small business has suffered severely under the impact of the war, while big business has expanded and made huge profits. Of course, small business should not be permitted to make unfair profits out of the war, but certainly it should not be unnecessarily hampered or destroyed.

My proposed amendment is intended to protect small business in this regard. It merely permits firms subjected to prosecution for alleged violations of the Price Control Act to set up as their defense that price ceilings established by the Administrator do not afford them generally fair and necessary operating margins as provided in the act.

If the court finds that the facts are as stated, then this proposed amendment becomes operative.

The Senate Small Business Committee (and the same committee in the House of Representatives) has for many months been holding hearings and studying the problems of the smaller businessman under war emergency regulation. It is obvious that there is a great deal of meritorious complaint, not with the laws which Congress has passed, but with the execution of those laws.

Nor do I mean to say that the administrative arm of the Government has acted with complete abandon or in reckless disregard of the laws of Congress or the rights of citizens. Because either the laws are fragmentary or incomplete, or because of the limitations on the right of private parties to defend themselves and have the benefit of those laws, some administrators may have felt that they had reason to assume that some provisions contained in acts of the Congress are merely advisory. I do not think that Congress so intended.

It is obviously unjust, for example, to prosecute a man by injunction proceedings or for contempt or crime, and at the same time forbid him to defend himself and have the benefit of the statutes which Congress has enacted for his benefit. It is not only unjust, but it is not in accord with our way of life or method of government. Anyone accused of violations of regulations should be allowed to show in any court or agency that the regulations do not provide what Congress has said they should provide, before any such court or agency can punish alleged violations or enforce compliance.

Moreover, we, the Congress, cannot examine into individual cases or regulations beyond what is necessary to determine whether parties should have legal protection. Our function, once we are satisfied that the conditions so require, is to pass laws not only so that administrators may have power under them, but also in order that the people may have the protection of those laws.

In three respects I think the work of the various committees of Congress, including particularly the Small Business Committees, have demonstrated a need for some legal recognition of the right of small businessmen to protect themselves in matters which Congress has heretofore recognized by statute. These three matters are:

1. Fair margins;
2. Equitable allocation of goods; and
3. A right to participate, as members of advisory committees, in the drafting of regulations.

These are already the law, expressly or by necessary implication. I should like to discuss each of them briefly:

1. On October 2, 1942, the Anti-Inflation Act became law, providing in section 3 that "In the fixing of maximum prices on products resulting from the processing of agricultural commodities, including livestock, a generally fair and equitable margin shall be allowed for such processing."

Nevertheless, this express and necessary limitation on regulations is said (and I think with some merit) to be often ignored by the administrative agencies concerned, as emphasized in numerous hearings before various committees of the Congress. The Committees on Small Business of the Senate and House of Representatives, in joint session on March 10, 1943, adopted a resolution calling upon the Office of Price Administration to establish fair and equitable margins in the meat industry. Moreover, it has become increasingly apparent that the same lack of fair price margins is driving various industries either into bankruptcy or into the so-called black market. Unless corrective measures are promptly taken, therefore, hundreds of thousands of small businessmen may be either ruined or law enforcement may break down. If the law and the regulations are not fair and enforceable, there will result a vicious, secret, and illegal rise in the cost of living, harmful to all. The problem of margins is primarily a small business matter. For big business is largely engaged in production for the Government, upon which production it demands a profit. Any price squeeze upon the production of big business for civilian consumption may be balanced by profits upon Government contracts. That large business is devoting itself primarily to Government contracts is obvious. That its margins and profits therefrom are at least adequate is evidenced by the laws Congress has passed for the renegotiation of such contracts and recapture of excess profits. Moreover, large business enterprises are directly represented by top personnel in every war agency of the Government. Not only big business, but agriculture and labor have been granted special protections.

2. Similarly, section 2 (h) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 provides that emergency powers "shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in the * * * means or aids to distribution, established in any industry."

But, either through price differentials or through quota and allocation orders, commodities and products customarily handled or sold through small businessmen have been channeled into the hands of big business controlling sources of supply or enabled by the operation of regulations and artificial economic conditions to monopolize the processing and distribution of goods and commodities. The Senate Small Business Committee has, by resolution and at hearings, stressed the necessity of corrective measures. These conditions do not result from a shortage of goods diverted to war purposes, but from maldistribution of products available for civilian consumption.

3. While large businesses, as stated above, are represented in top positions in the several emergency agencies, those agencies have not always been guided by the positive direction of the Congress in section 2 (a) of the Emergency Price Control Act of 1942 that "before issuing any regulation or order," they "shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with representative members of the industry which will be affected by such regulation or order."

Here again the Senate Small Business Committee, by resolution, in hearings, and correspondence has urged such agencies to afford small businessmen and all segments of a given industry an opportunity to be heard.

These statutory provisions are obviously reasonable and their purposes necessary. Their enforcement need not impede the war effort, but should in fact strengthen it by placing our civilian economy upon a sound basis heretofore recognized by Congress itself. It would seem too clear to admit of dispute that we should make sure that the present law in the three essentials I have discussed should be made operative. If the complaints of small business are meritorious they should be recognized by both administrative agencies and the courts. If they are not well taken, no harm can come, because the agencies and the courts will reject the complaints.

Congress, as I have said, cannot pass upon individual cases. In our system of government that is the function of the courts. We must make these statutes enforceable, or we should repeal them and frankly admit that we are not attempting to protect small businessmen.

I am fully persuaded that no harm can come to any officer or agency by making these laws effective. At the same time I cannot sit by while the rights of hundreds of thousands of businessmen—rights which Congress itself has expressly recognized—fail for lack of any method of enforcement. I wish to strengthen administration by making the laws operative both as to administrators and those who are regulated. Laws without enforceable rights are a mirage. Administration without or beyond the law is doomed to failure. The greatest service we can do for the country and the war effort is to make the system of emergency regulation workable. The way to make it workable is to grant the necessary powers to the administrators and the necessary rights to those who are regulated, including the means of protecting those rights in any type of administrative or judicial proceedings.

AMENDMENT TO INTERIOR DEPARTMENT APPROPRIATION BILL

Mr. ANDREWS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 2719) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed, as follows:

At the proper place in the bill insert the following:

"No part of any appropriation contained in this act shall be used for the lease, purchase, or other acquisition of any additional land in Citrus County, Fla., for game preserve, fish and wildlife refuge, or park purposes."

NOTICE OF MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULE—AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. OVERTON submitted the following notice in writing:

In accordance with rule XL of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby give notice in writing that it is my intention to move to suspend paragraph 4 of rule XVI for the purpose of proposing to the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, the following amendment, namely: On page 21, line 10, after the word "stations" insert "And provided further, That funds appropriated under the heads 'Pay, subsistence, and transportation,' 'General expenses, Marine Corps,' 'Pay and allowances, Coast Guard' in this act shall be available for the payment of money allowances, in lieu of transportation by the shortest usually traveled route now authorized by law to be furnished in kind, at 3 cents per mile to enlisted men regardless of the mode of travel who, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, travel at their own expense."

Mr. OVERTON also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 2713, the naval appropriation bill, fiscal year 1944, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

(For text of amendment referred to, see the foregoing notice.)

ORGANIZATION OF PEACE—ADDRESS BY SENATOR AUSTIN

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, on Saturday night, June 5, over N. B. C. and affiliated stations, a joint discussion occurred between the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], Mr. Alan J. Gould, executive assistant to Kent Cooper, general manager of the Associated Press; Mr. Earl J. Johnson, vice president in charge of the News Service of the United Press, and the Senator from Vermont, on a program to study the organization of peace entitled "For This We Fight," and in particular under the title "Underwriting Victory."

In that discussion I undertook to present a certain theory with respect to our present planning for post-war collaboration in which I made the statement, among other things, that—

Victory connotes the establishment of powerful institutions to guard nations from aggression, and to insure their integrity. Therefore, we fight for a more perfect union, though not uniformity, of the United Nations. To make this union real, there must be international organization for strategic security, comprising council, court, and military power.

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks the statement made by me on the occasion referred to.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To say that we fight for freedom is oversimplification. We did not start shooting just because we loved freedom. We will not begin international peace service just for the sake of our ideals.

We had not achieved the virtue and wisdom which would have moved us to action. It took invasion of our boundaries to break the hard shell of our conceit. The crushing of freedom in neighboring countries did not arouse us. Not until bitter suffering and death came to our own people was our war fervor excited. The folly of our attitude of aloofness and self-sufficiency was revealed by the shock of realization that injury could so easily and quickly be inflicted upon us by sea and air.

American security and peace were suddenly recognized to be dependent upon combined action with other nations which also believe in an orderly world.

Our abandonment of isolationism and assumption of a leading role of responsibility came about the hard way.

But, thank God, we are now uniting upon foundations for a foreign policy.

We fight for victory but the ingredients of victory are not limited to unconditional surrender and the disarming of the evil forces which enslave entire nations. We are suffering the tragic failure of our experiment in "peace without victory," and "international order without military sanctions."

Victory connotes the establishment of powerful institutions to guard nations from aggression, and to insure their integrity. Therefore, we fight for a more perfect union, though not uniformity, of the United Nations.

To make this union real there must be international organization for strategic security comprising council, court, and military power.

Let us start with a council, or similar body (the name does not matter) to perform the political functions of a republican government. Representation in such council should be the right of every nation that is willing and competent to collaborate in the development of a code of world conduct. Such elaboration of the world government as involves regional federations within the over-all organization eventually would be feasible, though I favor starting with a simple implementation of our purpose to work together.

China, Russia, Great Britain, and the United States ought to lead off. They ought to have the will to be and to remain constituents of such council. They flank all of the oceans, and they would furnish the abutments of the great bridges that must cross them. Their combined power and prestige would predominate any other probable combination. The exclusion or omission of any one of these great states would of itself create the possibility of a new world war.

The association of these oriental and occidental states by mere declaration and not because of vital interests would not promise longevity. Now, they are bound together by the common danger of war. Later, for at least two generations, the cement will not be the treaty, or the form of combination. It will be the will of each member to protect and serve its own interest through all-for-one-and-one-for-all action.

And here let me say I believe we have reason for the hope that is in us that beyond this horizon there may extend a broader vision illumined by more ennobling causes for harmonious joint progress with endless possibilities.

However strong may be the aspiration of enthusiasts for self-discipline—and I am one of those enthusiasts—we believe that there must be enacted rules of conduct and that they will have to be enforced. Realism holds us to the cold fact that existing morality of men and governments is impotent to guarantee good behavior of either. Laws with sanctions must be well known and steadfastly adhered to. An administrative body, with power must be ever present and visible.

Such would be the council, or whatever the political body is named. The structure of this rudimentary world government would be defective without a court of justice.

The development of a more perfect edifice could include regional courts adapted to special characteristics and demands of local interest. However, I favor starting with a single court having power to hear and decide cases between nations. Its jurisdiction, as now envisaged, would be open to any nation, and its subpena would run to any nation. Its decree would depend upon the moral powers of the court. But judgments involving peace should be referred to the council, in whom the power is vested to order out the military, to which I refer later.

The peace that prevails within our great country is nourished by the law solely because the law is made a living spirit through courts of justice backed by force.

This is our guide, as Americans, in planning our footsteps for peace on earth. To the same purpose would be the application of law by a court or courts to controversies between nations. Without use of arbitration or civil trial there is no other recourse than force alone.

On the principle demonstrated by this war—that peace is indivisible and that the security of one particular state depends upon the security of the United Nations—it logically follows that provision for military power adequate to overwhelm any violator of the code ought to be made available to the community of nations.

The strength of military forces maintained in the separate states pledged to service in the joint peace effort should be relative to the weakness of offender nations. We intend that the German, Italian, and Japanese military establishments shall be liquidated by disbandment and be prevented from reviving by annihilation of the facilities for the production of weapons for war.

Victory automatically includes disablement of the enemy, but being aware of the professional militarists' tenacity of life, we shall not "conclude peace," we shall "achieve peace," and make it prevail.

Victory must remain guaranty of a nature which the totalitarian can understand—viz, supreme military power in the United Nations—a might that is right. This would not be a collective military police force. It would be such employment of separate forces as the United Nations now use jointly. This would not be an innovation. United action of our armies is a fact accomplished. It has already been characterized in the mutual confidence, respect, and regard among the various nationals in north Africa, and in the Pacific theater of combat. This demonstration of unity inspires our continued collaboration.

Occupation of enemy territory will be necessary. Promises to send troops there will not be adequate. The council would take into consideration geographical, ethnical, and other natural conditions in determining the composition of garrisons, and questions arising between member nations during the occupancy. This is another potent reason for a council, or some similar organization.

The objective of a peace that prevails would depend on the probity of service of such a body.

An urgent public duty confronts Americans. We must have a settled foreign policy when we commence negotiations with our partners; otherwise, they will lead and we will follow. Or, as in World War No. 1, we will fail to do anything except sow the dragon's teeth.

No American foreign policy is valid or has vitality unless it is supported by well-informed public opinion.

Such an opinion cannot be well-informed without concrete proposals for consideration. Deliberation requires time. We should not gamble on when to commence.

Therefore, I say to you, if these few fundamental proposals here discussed appear to you to be necessary to underwrite peace, test them in reason and debate, estimate the near and remote consequences of such a course of action on the welfare and freedom of the United States. If they endure such tests, you may be confident that they are sound. Then let us fight for them.

CONFIRMATION BY THE SENATE OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENTAL EMPLOYEES

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 575) to provide that officers in the executive branch of the Government who receive compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the manner provided by the Constitution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the committee amendment on page 2, beginning in line 4.

Mr. McNARY. May the amendment be stated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 4, after the word "Departments" and the quotation mark, it is proposed to strike out:

It is hereby declared that any person holding an office or position in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations) and receiving compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year for his services in such office or position shall be deemed to be an officer of the United States, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall not be deemed to be an inferior officer who may be appointed by the President alone or by the head of a department.

SEC. 2. (a) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b)—

(1) the term of office of any person heretofore appointed or promoted to any office or position in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations), if the compensation attached to such position is at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year, shall expire on June 30, 1943, unless such term is terminated at an earlier date; and

(2) any person hereafter appointed or promoted to any such office or position to which compensation at a rate in excess of $4,500 a year is attached shall be appointed to such office or position by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term which shall expire 4 years from the time of his appointment.

(b) The provisions of this section shall not be applicable with respect to any person heretofore or hereafter appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to any office for which a definite term is specifically prescribed by any act of the Congress; and nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the President from filling temporarily, in the manner prescribed by law, any vacancy that may happen during the recess of the Senate.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

(1) any person hereafter appointed or promoted to any office or position to which this section applies shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and (2) no person shall hold any such office or position after June 30, 1943, unless he shall have been so appointed: Provided, That any person now holding any such office or position, who was not so appointed, may continue to hold such office or position until his successor is appointed and qualified or until September 30, 1943, whichever is earlier, if a nomination for an appointment to such office or position has been submitted to the Senate prior to June 30, 1943.

SEC. 2. Except as provided in section 3, the provisions of the first section of this act shall apply to each of the following civilian offices or positions in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations):

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies of the Government (including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations).

(b) The heads of the bureaus, divisions, sections, and other subdivisions of such departments and agencies.

(c) The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

(f) Any person, except artisans and craftsmen, holding an office or position in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations) who receives compensation amounting to $4,500 or more per year for his services in such office or position.

SEC. 3. The provisions of the first section of this act shall not be applicable, except in cases where confirmation by the Senate is otherwise required by law—

(a) In the case of any person appointed or promoted in accordance with provisions of the civil-service laws and rules providing, at the time of his appointment or promotion for his acquiring a classified (competitive) civil-service status by reason of such appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period; or

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. McNARY and Mr. McKELLAR asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HILL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Several days ago I submitted on behalf of certain minority members of the Committee on the Judiciary an amendment in the nature of a substitute which is now on the desk. Am I correct in understanding that it will be in order to offer that amendment after the committee amendment has been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct. It will be in order after the committee amendment has been acted upon.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. And after the committee amendment has been disposed of it will be in order, no matter which way the vote goes, for the minority members of the committee to offer the amendment in the nature of a substitute?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is correct in his understanding.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to make it clear again to the Senate that the difference between the amendment placed in the bill by the majority of the Committee on the Judiciary and the amendment offered by the minority is primarily that the committee proposal requires the Senate to pass upon all persons who receive salaries above $4,500 a year, whereas the minority were of the opinion that the $4,500 yardstick is not a proper measure, that it should not be used, that the proper distinction is between officers and employees, and that the manner in which to bring about that distinction is to define what the Congress regards to be policy-making officers of the United States. That the minority amendment undertakes to do, and when the proper parliamentary opportunity is presented it will be my purpose on behalf of the minority to offer the substitute, so that the Senate will have an opportunity to go on record with respect to the distinction between a mere salary standard and a standard based only upon the policy-forming functions of the officer concerned.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It seems to me it would be a much more orderly process if we could vote on the so-called O'Mahoney amendment first. Is that impossible, as a parliamentary proposition?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is my understanding that the regular procedure is for the Senate on all bills to go through the committee amendments first and dispose of them.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I was merely answering the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HATCH. I was going to ask in that connection if it is not true that if the Senator's amendment, which is proposed as a substitute, were adopted, it would not then be open to amendment.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is true. The substitute after it has been offered, however, will be open to perfecting amendments.

If the Senate disposes of the committee amendment, either by adopting it or rejecting it, it matters not which, there is no binding obligation upon the Senate with respect to the bill itself, and then a subsequent amendment may be presented. It was felt that this was the easier and better way to proceed, inasmuch as a great multitude of amendments would be necessary to bring the committee amendment in accordance with the amendment offered by the minority.

Mr. HILL. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HILL. As I understand the rule, Mr. President, the Senate must dispose of committee amendments before a vote on the substitute for the bill as proposed to be amended would be in order. Is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct, under rule XVIII.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I realize that the Senate is very anxious to proceed with important legislation in the nature of appropriation bills which will soon be before it. I am very anxious to cooperate in order that all necessary appropriation bills and other emergency bills may be disposed of at the earliest possible moment.

I am not taking the floor now in opposition to the committee amendment with any thought of delaying at this time action on the pending bill. I think, however, that before Senators vote on even the committee amendment, some explanation of it and perhaps of the substitute which is later to be offered should be made. For that reason, I am taking the floor now, first of all to say, Mr. President, that the original bill introduced by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] provided, briefly, that all employees of the Federal Government receiving $4,500 or more a year should be confirmed by the Senate. I believe that was the sole standard or yardstick provided in the original bill. Let me ask the Senator from Tennessee whether I am correct in that statement. I am sure I am, because the Senator does not reply.

When the bill was referred to a subcommittee, the subcommittee reported some amendments to it, and submitted the bill to the full committee. Several of us were not satisfied with either the original bill or the bill recommended by the subcommittee. I urged the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to endeavor to prepare an adequate definition of a policy-making official. I think there was no disagreement among any of us, I think there was no disagreement in the Senate, that officials of the Federal Government who are really engaged in policy-making functions certainly should be confirmed by the Senate. We felt, however, and I think rightly so, that the yardstick provided—a salary of $4,500 or more a year—was not adequate for any purpose. It does not define a policy-making official, but does include, as I could show it in detail if I had the time, thousands of employees who have no policy-making functions whatever, but who in reality are employees discharging purely administrative or, in some cases, scientific and technical duties. Under the yardstick of a salary of $4,500 or more a year, all of them would be brought within the requirement of Senate confirmation. Some of us do not believe that would be a wise procedure. On that general subject, I shall have more to say later.

Suffice it now to say that at the insistence of several of us, the Senator from Wyoming did work out and prepare as carefully and as ably as was possible under the circumstances a substitute which made a real attempt to describe policy-making officials, those who should be confirmed by the Senate.

If I may, I shall read the substance of the provisions of the substitute proposal. I read now the one which was offered in the committee. Under its terms those who would be required to be confirmed by the Senate would be—

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies—

This is a rather clear-cut expression—"The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies."

I read further:

(b) The heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any such department or agency.

(c) The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

(d) All persons whose duties include responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or any Executive order.

(e) All persons whose duties include responsibility for determining the policies to be followed in administering the functions of any department, agency, or subdivision thereof as defined in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section.

Mr. President, as I have said, we were all agreed that some definition or standard should be set up. On the first vote the proposal offered in the committee by the Senator from Wyoming was adopted. I am not quite certain in my recollection, but I believe that on that question at first there was a tie vote, and then one Senator requested permission to change his vote for the purpose of adding an amendment. Permission was granted. Then the amendment was offered to the proposal made by the Senator from Wyoming. The amendment reinserted another clause requiring the confirmation of all persons receiving $4,500 or more a year. Both that amendment and the O'Mahoney amendment were adopted by the Committee on the Judiciary. I am not critical of the committee, but I thought the two amendments were absolutely inconsistent, that one destroyed the other.

In fact, merely in a humorous vein, let me read from an editorial published in one of the local newspapers referring to the action of the committee that morning:

The performance of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the McKellar bill reminds us of the man who agreed to so many reforms in a single day that he finally went out and got drunk to relieve the tension.

That very aptly describes, I think, the situation in our committee that day. We agreed to so many reforms that finally we simply swept all of them in together, until the bill as now reported with the committee amendment is, in my opinion, worse than the original McKellar bill, and much worse than the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming. Under those circumstances I cannot conceive that the committee amendment should be adopted; and I rose to point that out and to make it clear that the Congress, and especially the Senate, should adopt either one policy or the other, but not both. If we want to follow the lead of the Senator from Tennessee, let us revert to the original bill, and provide that all persons receiving salaries of $4,500 or more shall be confirmed by the Senate. However, if we really want to endeavor to adopt a plan which will limit Senate confirmation to genuine policy-making officials, then, certainly, as against the McKellar bill, the O'Mahoney amendment should be adopted. I understand that the Senator from Wyoming is to offer his amendment later in the debate.

Mr. President, on that amendment my position is that while I shall vote against the bill finally, regardless of what amendments may be adopted, I shall certainly support the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming, as against either the committee amendment or the original bill.

There are many things in connection with the bill which I should like to discuss. I see no particular point at this time in going into a general discussion of the basic, fundamental objections which I have to the entire proposed legislation.

Under those circumstances, so far as I am concerned, if the Senate is ready to vote on the committee amendment, I am ready to vote. I wish to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Last week I interrogated the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] with respect to sections 2 and 3 of the bill. Since that time much has been said and much has been written in press reports to the effect that the bill would exempt from its provisions certain classes of persons mentioned under section 3 but that all persons receiving $4,500 or above would have to be confirmed. Suppose the bill were enacted in its present form, would a person who qualifies after taking a regular competitive examination under civil service, and whose salary is above $4,500, be exempted from the provisions of the bill?

Mr. HATCH. Will the Senator please restate the question?

Mr. ELLENDER. Before I do, permit me to read section 3 of the bill:

SEC. 3. The provisions of the first section of this act shall not be applicable, except in cases where confirmation by the Senate is otherwise required by law—

(a) In the case of any person appointed or promoted in accordance with provisions of the civil-service laws and rules providing, at the time of his appointment or promotion for his acquiring a classified (competitive) civil-service status by reason of such appointment or promotion and satisfactory service during a probationary period; or

The question is this: Suppose a person takes a regular competitive civil-service examination under the civil-service law and rules and regulations and the salary of the position for which he qualifies is in excess of $4,500, would such a person have to be confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. HATCH. I will answer the Senator from Louisiana in this way: I do not wish to answer his question myself, because one of the chief objections I shall presently raise, when we reach the discussion, is that the amendment is so obscure that one cannot tell; but I do know that the Senator from Wyoming has very definite ideas on the subject, and I will ask him to answer the question of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. I should like to have that point clarified. That was what I was attempting to clarify last week when I interrogated the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I did my best at that time to make it clear, but I acknowledge that probably my language was a little too vague. The answer to the Senator's question is "No." If a person were appointed as the result of a competitive examination, and the law did not otherwise require his confirmation by the Senate, he would not be subject to confirmation under the committee bill, no matter what his salary might be.

Mr. ELLENDER. So when it is stated on the floor of the Senate and in press reports that all persons whose salaries are $4,500 or above would be subject to confirmation, such statements are not correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. It is correct with the exception of those who are covered by section 3, of course. I believe that Senators who discussed the question had in mind the fact that certain exceptions are contained in section 3.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is exactly correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The members of the committee naturally discussed the measure in the light of the information which developed in the various committee discussions. That, of course, sometimes results in making it a little obscure to those who have not participated in those discussions.

As I was saying to the Senator 2 or 3 days ago, the result of the committee amendment depends upon the language "at the time of his appointment or promotion for his acquiring a classified (competitive) civil-service status."

Persons who acquired a civil-service status by being covered into the civil service by an Executive order would not be excluded.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand that perfectly. The bill is leveled at those persons receiving over $4,500, who have not taken a regular competitive examination under the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Therefore the amendment offered by the minority is so drafted that persons who have been under civil service during a long period of years, or who were brought into the civil service under the Ramspeck act, would be excluded from the bill.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the Senator feel that the language could be improved upon so as to make it certain that those complying with the civil-service laws would not have to be confirmed, although their compensation is $4,500 or over? It strikes me that if the law is intended to include a person who takes the regular competitive civil-service examination, we might as well abolish civil service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I believe that it is as clear as language can make it now.

Mr. ELLENDER. All I desire is to be certain about it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I will say to the Senator that so far as the amendment offered by the minority is concerned, it represents the combined judgment not only of the members of the minority, but of the legislative counsel for the Senate and representatives of the Civil Service Commission with whom I have personally discussed the question. I think the question which the Senator asks is clearly answered, and the language is as clear as we could possibly make it.

Mr. ELLENDER. I thank the Senator. Since the bill exempts civil-service employees already appointed, who receive $4,500 or over, and also those of the future who successfully pass a regular civil-service examination, I can see no objection to the bill. As I view the situation let us either comply with civil-service laws or nullify them. I am for complying with them and for eliminating politics from all appointments.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I tried to make it clear in my remarks that, so far as I am concerned, the basic objections I have to the measure go far deeper than whether or not the committee amendment should be adopted. In the committee I supported the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming; and when the $4,500 clause was added, I voted against it all. I think the Senator from Wyoming followed the same course. Therefore I am merely trying to point out the differences, and what happened in the committee. I shall vote against the committee amendment. I wish clearly to understand the parliamentary situation, and therefore I propound this inquiry: In the event the committee amendment should be adopted, would it then be open to further amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). The committee amendment would not then be open to further amendment.

Mr. HATCH. But the substitute could then be offered?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The substitute would then be in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The substitute would be in order, and amendments to the substitute or to the bill would be in order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I have nothing further to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Gillette	Nye
Andrews	Green	O'Daniel

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I merely desire to state the parliamentary situation as I understand it to be. The vote about to be taken is upon the committee amendment. Whether the committee amendment is adopted or rejected, it will then be in order for me to offer the substitute amendment which has been presented to the Senate by the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming is correct.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Let me add that I do not regard the vote upon the committee amendment as in any way conclusive. The test will be upon the issue which will be presented when I offer the substitute amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I merely wish to state that those who favor the bill as reported by the committee will vote "yea" and those who are not in favor of the bill as reported will vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I do not care to have my vote considered in the light of the interpretation just announced by the Senator from Tennessee. I shall vote for the committee amendment because I think the bill is better as thus amended, if it is to be passed, but I shall still vote for the O'Mahoney substitute later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment reported by the committee. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HAWKES] has a pair on this question with the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON]. If present the Senator from New Jersey would vote "nay" and the Senator from California would vote "yea."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] and the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] are members of the congressional committee attending the funeral of the late Representative Guyer, and are therefore necessarily absent from the city.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS] would vote "nay" if present.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent from the Senate because of illness.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent.

Mr. CHANDLER. I have a general pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. DAVIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. GUFFEY], and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. McCLELLAN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. CLARK]. I am not advised how the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Idaho would vote if present. I vote "yea."

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, in the nature of a substitute for the bill as now amended. The substitute is offered on behalf of the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert the following:

That (1) any person hereafter appointed or promoted to any civilian office to which this section applies shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and (2) no person shall hold any such office after June 30, 1943, unless he shall have been so appointed: Provided, That any person now holding any such office, who was not so appointed, may continue to hold such office until his successor is appointed and qualified or until September 30, 1943, whichever is earlier, if a nomination for an appointment to such office has been submitted to the Senate prior to June 30, 1943.

SEC. 2. Except as provided in section 3, the following persons in or under the executive branch of the Government of the United States (including Government-owned corporations) shall be deemed to be officers of the United States and the provisions of the first section of this act shall apply to the office held by each of them:

(a) The heads, assistant heads, and head attorneys of the several departments and agencies of the Government (including members of the boards of directors and officers of Government-owned corporations).

(b) The heads of bureaus, divisions, or other units representing the first subdivision of any such department or agency.

(c) The heads and assistant heads of regional, area, or State offices of such departments or agencies.

(d) All persons whose duties include responsibility for final action in connection with the preparation and promulgation of rules, regulations, or orders made or issued under authority of any act of Congress or any Executive order.

(e) All persons whose duties include responsibility for determining the policies to be followed in administering the functions of any department, agency, or subdivision thereof as defined in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section.

(e) In the case of any person whose compensation is paid from the appropriation for the White House Office in the Executive Office of the President.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I am sure it will be sufficient at this time to state that the difference between the substitute now offered and the committee bill is primarily that the committee bill uses a salary received by Government officers or employees as the standard, or measuring stick. The substitute uses definitions of what constitute policy-making officers of the Government.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CLARK of Missouri in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Policy-making officials under the Senator's substitute are described in exactly the same wording found in the committee bill, are they not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not exactly.

Mr. McKELLAR. But substantially?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. There is some modification.

Mr. McKELLAR. There are some slight modifications, but all the standards provided in the Senator's substitute, except the one involving the $4,500, are substantially the same as those which are incorporated in the committee bill. Is not that correct?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They are very similar; the Senator is quite correct. So, Mr. President, without attempting to take more of the time of the Senate, I merely wish to express the hope that the Senate will see fit to adopt the substitute offered by the minority, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. AIKEN and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

Mr. AIKEN. I was about to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. AIKEN. Certainly.

Mr. HILL. I note that the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has just come into the Chamber. It is my intention to present at this time an amendment providing that employees of the T. V. A. shall be treated exactly as are civil-service employees, employees of the F. B. I., and employees in the executive offices of the President. I say frankly to the Senator from Georgia that I think the amendment will require a little debate. I myself will require a little time to state the reasons why I think the amendment should be agreed to. I do not want to be in the position of holding up the appropriation bill in charge of the Senator from Georgia, and therefore I want him to know that if we take up the amendment, a little time will be required to dispose of it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, the Senator from Alabama is aware of the fact that to take up the appropriation bill would, under the rules, involve a motion and some discussion about the displacement of the pending bill, or it would require unanimous consent.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me suggest that apparently we are not very far from a vote on the pending bill, and I believe it would probably save time both on the appropriation bill and the pending bill if the Senator would allow us to proceed a little further. I wish to say that I shall not at all stand in the way of appropriation bills, but it does seem that we are so near to a vote now that it might save the time of the Senate to continue with the pending bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I desire to proceed in an orderly manner, and have both the measures disposed of as expeditiously as possible. I have no information as to how much time the pending bill may take.

Mr. McKELLAR. Perhaps we could ascertain.

Mr. HILL. Of course, I cannot say for certain, because I do not know how many interruptions there will be, but I imagine it would take me 40 or 45 minutes to state the reasons why I think the Senate should adopt the amendment I intend to offer. Then, since the session started today, the Senator from Washington [Mr. BONE] has informed me that he proposes to offer an amendment on the same subject matter, to wit, an amendment to exempt the employees of the Bonneville Power Administration. How much time the Senator from Washington will require I do not know.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I feel very positively that the pending measure should be displaced either permanently or temporarily by the agricultural appropriations bill and by the naval appropriations bill and by other appropriation bills which are now pressing for consideration. The agricultural appropriations bill contains at least 100 amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. It contains 116 amendments, I will say.

Mr. McNARY. The bill must go to conference. Many of the amendments contained in it are highly controversial. Today is the 7th of June. The bill must be passed finally in both Houses by the 30th of June. I think it is imperative that we should consider it at this time. I wanted the Senate to take it up at 12 o'clock noon today, but out of an abundance of good nature I postponed my declaration in that respect until 20 minutes after 1. We have gotten along for a good many years without the legislation proposed by my excellent and very able friend, the Senator from Tennessee. We probably can continue to get along without it for a few days more. I shall not make the motion at this time, but, as minority leader, I shall be as insistent as I can be that the Senate proceed with consideration of the appropriation bills. There are many reasons for proceeding in that manner. I appeal to the able Senator from Tennessee, the acting chairman of the Appropriations Committee, to permit the pending bill to be laid aside in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the agricultural appropriations bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I shall not object to that procedure.

Mr. McNARY. I am very happy that my appeal has been so convincing.

Mr. McKELLAR. It has been very convincing, so convincing that I shall not object to the procedure the Senator suggests.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate bill 575, the unfinished business, be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider the bill (H. R. 2481) making agricultural appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriations bill.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to have an understanding with the Senator from Georgia that any controversial amendments shall be passed by for today. I understand that was the understanding had with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY].

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, that is a very reasonable request, and such understanding was entered into with the able Senator in charge of the bill on Thursday last.

Mr. McKELLAR. That is entirely correct, Mr. President.

Mr. BYRD. I wanted to make it clear that the controversial amendments would be passed over for today.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to the procedure suggested by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the request of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] that the unfinished business be laid aside temporarily, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the agricultural appropriations bill is agreed to.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Department of Agriculture—Office of the Secretary—Salaries and Expenses", on page 2, line 17, after the word "designate", to strike out "$1,473,184" and insert "$1,528,184."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, at the end of line 7, to increase the total appropriation for the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, from $1,873,184 to $1,928,184.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of the Solicitor", on page 6, line 13, after the word "service", to strike out "$1,679,105" and insert "$1,704,105", and in line 21, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$845,000" and insert "$850,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Office of Information—Salaries and Expenses", on page 7, line 16, before the word "together", to strike out "$488,000" and insert "$439,257"; in line 25, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$378,556" and insert "$402,860", and on page 9, line 7, after the word "amended", to strike out the colon and the following proviso: "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the establishment or maintenance of regional or State field offices or for the compensation of employees in such offices."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. May we have an explanation of the committee amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well. Will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. May we have an explanation of the amendments?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to undertake to explain the amendments. There are 116 amendments to the bill. The great majority of them, and all the amendments which have been considered up to the present time, involve the restoration of a part of the Budget estimates. All the amendments which have been considered up to the present time are either below the Budget estimates or not in excess of the Budget estimates.

Mr. President, I should not like to undertake now to explain all these 116 amendments at one time. I shall be glad, however, to make a brief explanation of the bill itself. The bill, as reported by the committee, carries a total of $820,680,709. This amount is under the Budget estimates for this year in the sum of $128,558,490. The total appropriations in the bill are somewhat in excess of the appropriation contained in last year's bill for the reason that last year no appropriations were made for parity payments. Instead of making a direct appropriation, the Congress inserted in the bill a contractual obligation enabling the Secretary of Agriculture to contract with the producers of the basic commodities for the making of parity payments. This year the bill carries an appropriation amounting to $170,281,000 to enable the Secretary to fulfill those contracts.

When we take into consideration the shift in the manner of handling the parity appropriations, the bill this year is $67,730,000 below the appropriations for the current year. The largest single item of increase in the bill made by the committee is in the item for soil conservation payments to farmers. Members of the Senate are familiar with the fact that for a number of years the soil conservation appropriation has amounted to $500,000,000. Last year it was reduced to $450,000,000. This year the Budget estimates were $400,000,000, and this was reduced by the House to $300,000,000. The Secretary of Agriculture and Mr. Chester Davis, who occupies the position of Director of Food Administration and Distribution, both testified before the committee that under the authority of law the Secretary of Agriculture had in December last announced a program to the farmers which would require payments approximating $400,000,000, and that unless the Senate committee restored the Budget estimates, the Government would in fact not be keeping faith with farmers who had prepared their plans this year on the basis of the assurances made last December. The Bureau of the Budget also estimated the sum of $100,000,000 for what was designated as incentive payments. The House disallowed that item. The Senate committee, after going into the matter thoroughly, did not restore that item in the bill. It is not in the bill before the Senate.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Returning for a moment to the item of $400,000,000 provided under the head "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources," on page 69, the sum of $32,500,000 is appropriated for administrative expenses. I should like to have a brief explanation of that item, as it seems to me to be a rather exaggerated sum for administration.

Mr. RUSSELL. Let me say to the Senator that the limitation was offered in the interest of economy. The administrative expenses of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration for the current year are approximately $54,000,000, and this language was offered in the bill in an effort to reduce the administrative expenses. The House had inserted in the bill a provision which the Senator will find at the bottom of page 68, which would have reduced the administrative expenses from the $54,000,000 expended this year to half that amount for the coming year. The committee was anxious to make every economy possible; but some of the farm organizations and other groups which were interested testified they did not believe that so drastic a cut could be imposed in 1 year. Therefore, we reduced the amount from $54,000,000 to $32,500,000. I may say to the Senator that under the language of the bill defining the limits of the soil-conservation program for next year, we hope next year to accomplish a reduction of 50 percent to cut this administrative item in half. It has been entirely too large in years past. Efforts have previously been made to limit the amount of this administrative item; and I am glad that now we have the limit in both the House version and the Senate version of the bill, so that some economy may be effected this year. Some economy is bound to result, because those figures are considerably below the amount expended last year.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a moment ago I rose to propound a parliamentary inquiry. I desire now to ask whether there will be an opportunity to object to controversial matters today or tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the unanimous-consent agreement previously entered, no controversial items are to be considered today. All any Senator would have to do would be to suggest that the item in which he was interested was controversial, and then it would go over, under the agreement.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the next item larger than the Budget estimates is that for forest-fire protection. Last year the matter was dealt with in three bills. Supplemental estimates were made, and the appropriations contained in the agricultural supply bill were also increased.

This year proposals were made to increase this appropriation in varying amounts, some of them greatly in excess of the appropriations contained in the current agricultural appropriation bill. Many witnesses appeared before the committee on this particular item. Senators from the Northwestern States expressed grave apprehension that saboteurs or other persons might cause great losses in our forests, which would impede the war effort. Therefore, the committee felt justified in allowing the amount of appropriation contained in the item for prevention of forest fires appearing in the agricultural appropriation bill for the present year. The committee did not feel justified in accepting the very large amounts which some Members of the Senate suggested, because it would be absolutely impossible to appropriate enough money to guarantee that forest fires would not occur. There is a great shortage of manpower; and if we increase the appropriations we shall have one agency of Government bidding against another agency of Government or against private industry in the effort to secure labor.

Mr. President, the Members of the Senate are familiar with the condition of the bill as it came to the Senate. Due to a controversy between the committees in the other body, for the first time in many years the Committee on Rules did not give the Appropriations Committee a rule. The bill went to the floor of the House without any rule which would have protected legislative provisions inserted by the committee. Some 20 or 30 of those legislative provisions therefore went out on points of order duly made on the floor of the other body.

Your committee in reporting the bill has endeavored to keep those legislative provisions at a minimum. We are not offering to restore all of them, but merely those that seem to us to be vital and essential to enable the Department of Agriculture to carry on its work in the manner in which it has heretofore been done.

In the bill there were a large number of research items which had been drastically reduced in the other body. In addition to that, the Bureau of the Budget had made an over-all cut of 5 percent in all the research items. Your committee did not feel that this was the proper time for the Government to relax in the unending fight between man and insects and plant disease. With the requirements for food and fiber in this country this year far exceeding those we have ever previously known, the committee felt justified in maintaining all the research items at the present levels. Some 32 of the amendments, involving in the main very small amounts, are for research items carrying on work in combating diseases of plants and animals and the insects which prey upon man, beast, and plant life.

The committee went very fully into the appropriation for the Farm Security Administration. In completely rewriting that item we undertook to place limitations upon the activities of that organization which would bring it back to the original objective of Congress, if I understood it correctly—that of dealing with the individual farmer and the rehabilitation of the individual farmer. The committee undertook to divorce that organization from all of the many rural rehabilitation projects which either have been instituted by the Farm Security Administration or were inherited by it from the Rural Resettlement Administration or from the various resettlement corporations which were established under the W. P. A. in the several States. I shall not now discuss that item any further, because it is one of the items which will go over for a more detailed discussion at a later date.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. On page 89, in an item relative to the Farm Security Administration, the amount is $29,607,573. Does the Senator care to make an observation comparing that amount with the amount of the item for the current year?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to do so. The appropriation for the current year is thirty-eight million and some-odd hundred thousand dollars. The Bureau of the Budget estimate for the item was $36,607,573. The Senator will observe that this is a reduction of several million dollars in the appropriation, which is a rather drastic cut of almost 20 percent; but if the Farm Security Administration carries out the instructions of the committee as to the liquidation of these projects, the amount recommended should be adequate to enable it to carry on its program of dealing with the individual farmer. Does that answer the Senator's question?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I assume that the crop-insurance item will go over until tomorrow, so I shall not undertake to discuss it now.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, from the statement made to me by the very distinguished Senator from South Dakota, I believe he would want it to go over until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well; I shall reserve my discussion of it.

Mr. President, as I have stated, there are a number of legislative amendments to be offered from the floor. One of them has to do with the so-called school lunch and school-milk program. Senators are familiar with the history of that program. It began in a very small way in some of the States in the disposition of surplus farm commodities which had been acquired by the Surplus Commodities Corporation of the Department of Agriculture. Some of the food commodities which were purchased to absorb surpluses and to maintain price levels were purchased with section 32 funds and were turned over to State welfare agencies, and by them were transferred to schools, where they were prepared by W. P. A. employees and were made available to the students in schools. The program has been exceedingly popular. There has been an increasing demand for this assistance on the part of schools, both public and parochial, throughout the entire country. Under section 32 there was a limitation on the purposes for which the funds could be expended; they could be used only for the purpose of disposing of agricultural surpluses or encouraging the consumption of agricultural products. Today there are no agricultural surpluses. Instead of encouraging the consumption of agricultural products, we are limiting consumption through a process of rationing so as to enable us to have adequate supplies and a fair distribution of the available supplies. The committee did not feel justified in sawing off the school-lunch and school-milk program without any more notice to the trustees and school officials of the various institutions where the program is now in operation. The floor amendment, therefore, clarifies the legal status of this program for next year; and an amount has been estimated, out of the permanent appropriations made by virtue of section 32, which will be considerably larger than the amount which has been available for the school-lunch and school-milk program for the current year.

In the committee report, however, the committee points out that this expenditure should not be deducted, as a permanent policy, from funds which are set aside for the use and benefit of farmers. We hope that before another appropriation bill is considered by the Senate permanent legislation will have been enacted clearly defining the policy of the Government toward the school-lunch and school-milk program. The present program has no general rule to apply throughout the Nation. In one school 30 percent of the cost of the food is contributed; in another 40 percent; and in another 50 percent. The contribution runs from 30 to 100 percent of the cost of the food. The program has assumed such proportions that if it is to be continued at all, the Congress should clearly define and point out the limitations of the program, stipulating the amount which should be contributed by the sponsors or by the school authorities, because we should no longer spend a sum as large as $50,000,000 in any such haphazard fashion.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Inasmuch as the Senator has been discussing the most important subject of school lunches, it seems to me that the opportunity should not pass without attention being called to the fact that the reason the request has been made to our committee for the utilization of funds under section 32 for this purpose is fundamentally the breakdown of the local economic structure throughout the States and in the cities. Nothing is of more local character than the education of children in the schools, whatever the type of school may be; but the agencies which are concerned about the lack of nutrition throughout the United States have been compelled to turn to the Federal Government for aid.

This is wholly a matter which ought to be handled by local governing units—by school districts, cities, counties, or States. There can be no more eloquent commentary upon the fundamental failure of our present economic organization than the fact that school agencies, welfare bodies, and groups which are concerned about the proper nutrition of children find themselves compelled to turn to the Federal Government to handle this problem. It emphasizes the need for national thought upon the problem of restoration of local economic activity, because without it we shall continue to go down the road to an increasing degree of national handling of local matters. If we continue to do so we shall eventually destroy local political independence. We shall make it impossible for people in their local communities to avoid control by Federal agencies and Federal law.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I entirely agree with what the Senator from Wyoming says. However, the most effective way to break down the local economic structure is by granting Federal aid, and not standing on the principle of making localities take care of local affairs. The State of Ohio does take care of local affairs. If the fact that one or two States do not is accepted as a reason for extending Federal aid for any deficiency which exists; if because the Commodity Credit Corporation likes to find a way to rid itself of surplus commodities—or did in the past—we undertake a Federal activity, we certainly immediately discourage every effort of the people in the localities to have their own governments do what ought to be done.

The question of free school lunches is a debatable question. Many States may feel that they ought not to enter upon such a program, and that the parents ought to supply lunches for the pupils just as lunches are supplied for the head of the family who goes to work in a factory. That is a debatable question. However, if we resolve all those questions by simply granting Federal aid, we have just as much to do with breaking down the local economic structure as has the failure of the localities themselves.

I do not wish to be understood as opposing this particular appropriation; but so long as the Senator from Wyoming introduced some political philosophy, I thought I should comment upon it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am glad to have the observations of both able Senators. They express better than I can the thought in my mind when I stated that there should be some specific legislation on this subject if we are to continue to operate in this field. If we are to continue in this field there should at least be some uniformity throughout the United States, and some requirement of local participation on the part of all the schools throughout the United States. However, I did not think, and the committee did not think, that we should saw off this activity at this stage of the proceedings, when the schools have had dumped upon them a greatly increased cost on account of the liquidation of the W. P. A., which has heretofore afforded them the employees to carry out such projects.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I have had two or three complaints from Ohio to the effect that after butter was rationed the Commodity Credit Corporation insisted on forcing on school districts in the State of Ohio more butter than they could possibly use for the school lunches, for which it was supposed to have been provided. Those are no doubt exceptional cases; but I believe the whole program could be administered with more economy than it has been conducted.

Mr. RUSSELL. The program "just growed," like Topsy. It started in one school somewhere, where the State welfare agency wished to dispose of some of the surplus. Perhaps the local distribution was not uniform throughout the State, and perhaps the stamp program had not been inaugurated. The State welfare agency turned over some agricultural commodities to a school.

The program is now carried on in every State of the Union, and affects approximately 6,000,000 school children. Certainly the Congress should not longer delay promulgating a specific plan. It is not the function of the Appropriations Committee to legislate on that subject. However, we will offer from the floor the amendment to which I have referred, with the admonition in the report from the committee to those who are interested in this program that this should not be considered as a permanent source of funds, and that if their interest in this program extends beyond the present year, they should see that legislation is enacted by the Congress for the continued operation of the program.

In the first place, it is not fair to charge up to the farmers the expenditure of $40,000,000 and $50,000,000 year after year through the agricultural appropriation bill, for the purpose of school lunches, because school lunches are consumed in the cities as well as in the rural schools—perhaps to a greater extent in the cities than in the rural sections. Yet those who are critical of agricultural appropriations do not take into consideration the fact that a substantial part of the appropriations has been and is being expended today in this program.

I did not understand the Senator from Ohio to say that this program was not in effect in his State. Am I correct?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I did not intend so to state. I simply stated that I think Ohio would handle its own job if no Federal money were handed out. The need for the program did not arise because of any failure in Ohio to provide free nutrition to our school children.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, there is an agreement that controversial amendments shall go over until tomorrow. I shall be glad to answer any further questions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNELL in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator please point out the section which reinstated the appropriations for the regional agricultural corporations?

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator will refer to page 95 of the bill, section 2, commencing with line 12, he will find a limitation which was imposed by the House and stricken out by the amendment of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to consider that as being controversial, and I make objection to it, and ask that it go over until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the Senator is not on the floor when that amendment is taken up I shall be glad to see that it is put over until tomorrow.

I wish to say in that connection, Mr. President, that the entire question of Federal credit agencies is one which also demands the attention of the Congress. There should be enacted specific legislation which would coordinate the various Federal lending agencies. It is difficult even for the members of this committee to keep up with the activities of all the many corporations and associations which are in the field of lending funds to farmers. It is very difficult to define the responsibilities of each of these agencies because there is so much confusion and such a shadowland between where one agency is supposed to cease functioning and another is supposed to take up. The committee felt that something should be done about that. It is something about which I had not given much thought until hearings were held by the committee. I now see a very grave necessity for Congress thoroughly to revise and coordinate all the farm lending agencies. The committee, however, did not feel that the Appropriations Committee was the proper place to start. That is one of the reasons why this section was stricken out. The members of the committee felt that it was a matter to which a legislative committee should direct its attention. As a matter of fact, I understand that some such legislation has already been introduced, perhaps by the Senator from Nebraska, as well as by others. Such legislation should be considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I can afford to criticize that committee, which is a standing committee, because I am a member of it. Such legislation should be considered, however, at an early date.

The Appropriations Committee did not feel justified, however, in reaching the situation bite by bite, limiting power here and granting power there to these various lending agencies.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the committee amendment to the bill provide for ample funds to continue the Warehousing Act?

Mr. RUSSELL. The committee recommended the full amount of the Budget estimates because it did not feel it was justified in reducing the appropriations for Federal warehousing for this period at a time when we were trying to build up reserves and encourage the storing of farm commodities, and at a time when we have in effect such a far-flung lending program through the Commodity Credit Corporation.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that. I do not object to that. I wanted to be sure it was in the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. We restored it to the amount of the provision for the present year. We restored the amount stricken out by the House.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to have it understood by the Senator from Georgia that the amendment on page 89 will go over until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have already stated that it is understood that the Farm Security Administration items will go over until tomorow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment will be stated.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Printing and binding," on page 10, after line 23, to strike out:

Reproduction of 1942 Yearbook of Agriculture: For printing and binding 231,250 copies of the remainder of the quotas for the Senate and House of Representatives of part 2 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture (known as the Yearbook of Agriculture, 1942, entitled "Keeping Livestock Healthy"), as authorized by section 73 of the act of January 12, 1895 (44 U. S. C. 241), $178,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

Reprinting of Agriculture Yearbook, 1942: For reprinting with illustrations and binding in cloth of 231,250 copies of part 2 of the Annual Report of the Secretary of Agriculture entitled "Keeping Livestock Healthy," as authorized by section 73 of the act of January 12, 1895 (44 U. S. C. 241), of which 54,450 copies shall be for the use of the Senate and 176,800 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, $178,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 19, line 16, to increase the grand total appropriation under the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, from $24,282,186 to $24,798,443.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I should like to ask the able chairman of the committee how it is possible for these international conferences to cost approximately $25,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the able Senator from Michigan will observe that the total appropriation for international conferences, so far as the agricultural relief is concerned, is only $12,500. The figure to which the Senator refers is the grand total for the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, including the Extension Service and a number of other items carried within this total.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 34, line 1, after the word "control", to strike out "$292,000" and insert "$357,370."

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, if I may revert to page 26 for a moment and refer to the amendment in line 9, let me ask what is the project at Beltsville, Md.? That is not Tugwelltown, is it?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; it has no connection whatever with any subsistence homestead. It is the great central laboratory of the Department of Agriculture for dealing with the treatment of diseases of animals and plants.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Then I have no further interrogation with reference to that item.

Mr. RUSSELL. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that this language has been in the bill for a number of years. It does not involve any increase in expenditures. When a new disease develops, it is sometimes necessary to build a small temporary building in order that the animal which is being treated may be quarantined and kept away from the animals which are free from disease. Similar language has been contained in agricultural appropriation bills in previous years, and has been stricken out in the House on a point of order.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was the geography that attracted my attention. It sounded a bit like one of those old crystal-gazing, boondoggling projects.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator referred to Greenbelt. There is no connection between Greenbelt and Beltsville.

Mr. TAFT. On page 23 of the bill, in line 3, there is reference to Puerto Rico. Is there to be built a new agricultural experiment station in Puerto Rico?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no. That station has been in existence there for a long period of time.

Mr. TAFT. We visited it. The language on page 23, in line 23, is as follows:

To enable the Secretary to establish and maintain an agriculture experiment station in Puerto Rico, including the erection of buildings—

And so forth.

Mr. RUSSELL. That language has been in similar bills year after year. As is oftentimes true, in preparing agricultural appropriation bills the pertinent part of the legislative provision is inserted year after year. There is no new language in the bill, and no new powers are granted.

Mr. TAFT. It is simply an appropriation for the existing agricultural experiment station, is it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. The $16,000 increase grew out of the fact that an increase of 25 percent was allowed all Federal employees stationed in Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, and Hawaii, except those at this experiment station, when they are assigned to stations in those outlying possessions. I was not aware of the fact that that was the case. I think it is a very erroneous policy to follow. I know of no reason why a Federal employee stationed in Puerto Rico, the Panama Canal Zone, or Hawaii should be allowed a 25-percent increase in his salary by virtue of the fact that he is stationed in one of those places; and then when the Congress votes an increase in his compensation, the increase is predicated upon the 25-percent increase received because of serving outside continental United States.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, of course not only is that true as to Americans from continental United States who go to Puerto Rico and who conceivably have some extra expense, but it is true as to all native Puerto Rican employees of the Federal Government who receive more, although the general standard of living is lower than for similar employees doing the same class of work in the United States.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is exactly correct. I have given my views to the Senate as to what I think should be done in the way of legislation. I think the Civil Service Committee or other proper committee should bring before the Senate a bill repealing that increase. I did not know it was in effect until we were studying this bill but I can see no justification for allowing Federal employees in one of our possessions where oftentimes the standard of living and the cost of living are lower than in continental United States, increased compensation in addition to the increase we allowed them the other day.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia explain that amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, Mr. President, I shall be glad to undertake to do so. This is in part a restoration of the Budget estimate for looking after tree plantings in the Great Lakes area. Four hundred and fifteen thousand dollars was stricken from the Budget estimate by the other House. As I stated in my opening remarks the remainder of the increase is a restoration to the present appropriation of the funds which are available for the protection of the national forests against undue and unusual hazards growing out of the war. Two million one hundred and fifty-one thousand seven hundred and eleven dollars of this appropriation was added by the committee to bring the appropriation up to the current amount. A large number of witnesses appeared before the committee and testified to the fact that greatly increased protection was needed in the national forests as well as on private lands. It involves not only fire protection but protection against other things. There was a fire along the coast of North Carolina last year which silhouetted all coastal shipping at night and a submarine came in there and sank three or four ships which otherwise possibly would not have been located. It is very important that we protect our forests during this period, for in protecting the forests we are protecting the lives of people who are engaged in many lines of activity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee on page 56, line 6.

The amendment was agreed to.

FARM AND OTHER PRIVATE FORESTRY COOPERATION

To enable the Secretary (1) to carry into effect, through such agencies of the Department as he may designate, the provisions of the Cooperative Farm Forestry Act, approved May 18, 1937 (16 U. S. C. 568b), (not to exceed $547,368) and the provisions of sections 4 (not to exceed $83,700) and 5 (not to exceed $65,100), of the act entitled "An act to provide for the protection of forest lands, for the reforestation of denuded areas, for the extension of national forests, and for other purposes, in order to promote the continuous production of timber on lands chiefly suitable therefor", approved June 7, 1924 (16 U. Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia explain the difference between this amendment and the one that was stricken out of the House bill on page 57?

Mr. RUSSELL. The House undertook to consolidate farm and other private forestry activities, and they reduced the appropriation—limited the activities. The Senate committee restored $161,000, a restoration that was recommended by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Senate committee enable the cooperative work that has been going on to be continued?

Mr. RUSSELL. We are endeavoring to make such provision so that the cooperative work that is going on under this head shall not be hampered or crippled. That is the purpose of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 61, line 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The next amendment was, on page 63, at the end of line 19, to increase the total appropriation for the Forest Service, from $18,238,284 to $25,524,155.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Commodity Credit Corporation", on page 66, line 11, after the word "amended", to strike out the colon and "Provided further, That none of the fund made available by this paragraph shall be used for administrative expenses connected with the sale of Government-owned or Government-controlled stocks of farm commodities at less than parity price as defined by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938" and in lieu thereof to insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the fund made available by this paragraph shall be used for administrative expenses connected with the sale of Government-owned or Government-controlled stocks of farm commodities at less than parity price as defined by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 or the comparable price as provided by section 4 (a) of the act of July 1, 1941 (Public Law, No. 147, 77th Cong.): Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to the sale or other disposition of any agricultural commodity for distribution exclusively for relief purposes, nor to commodities which have substantially deteriorated in quality or are sold for the purpose of feeding or the manufacture of ethyl alcohol, butyl alcohol, acetone, or rubber, or the extraction of oil, or commodities sold to farmers for seed or commodities sold for export or new or byproduct uses: Provided further, That no wheat or corn shall be sold for feed at a price less than the parity price of corn at the time such sale is made: Provided further, That in making regional adjustments in the sale price of corn or wheat the minimum price need not be higher in any area than the United States average parity price of corn."

Mr. McNARY. I think this amendment should go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection whatever to it going over. However, I have heard of no opposition to the provision.

Mr. McNARY. I am not speaking personally at all, and my reason for mentioning it is that a Senator spoke to me about this item a few days ago, and he is not present today.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to the amendment going over.

Mr. McNARY. Inasmuch as the bill is to go over until tomorrow, I should like to have this amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources", on page 68, line 2, after the word "newspapers", to strike out "$300,000,000" and insert "$400,000,000."

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the "Conservation and use" amendments go over until we can have further study of them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator mean the entire paragraph, or merely the amount?

Mr. BYRD. I expect it is interlocked, is it not?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, it is not. If the Senator will look at the bottom of page 69 he will see that we inserted a limitation on next year's program of $300,000,000, instead of $400,000,000.

Mr. BYRD. There will be no objection to it going over, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Parity payments," on page 70, line 18, after the numerals "1943" to strike out "$193,623,000" and insert "$170,281,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McNARY. Have we reached the item at the foot of page 71?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the next amendment.

Mr. McNARY. Very well. When we reach that I shall ask that it go over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, on page 71, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Secretary to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco, pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, he is authorized and directed to make such commitments or incur such obligations as may be necessary in order to provide for full parity payments for each of the crop years 1943 and 1944: Provided, That such payments with respect to any such commodity for the crop year 1943 shall be made upon the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for such commodity under the 1943 agricultural conservation program and for the crop year 1944 on the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the 1944 agricultural conservation program: Provided further, That for each of the crop years 1943 and 1944 the Secretary may provide by regulations for reduction in payments for failure to comply with the acreage allotments, limits or goals under the agricultural conservation program for 1943 or 1944, as the case may be.

For payments on the 1943 crop, if the sum of the prevailing basic loan rate (if marketing quotas for the commodity have been disapproved, such basic loan rate shall be the basic loan rate which would have prevailed except for such disapproval) or the average farm price, whichever is the higher, for the crop year 1943 and the applicable rate of the payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, for the purposes of the 1943 agricultural conservation program, and the parity payments herein provided, exceed an amount sufficient to increase the farmers' returns to parity prices, parity payments shall be so adjusted as to provide a return to producers which is equal to but not greater than parity price; and for payments on the 1944 crop, if the sum of the prevailing basic loan rate (if marketing quotas for the commodity have been disapproved, such basic loan rate shall be the basic loan rate which would have prevailed except for such disapproval) or the average farm price, whichever is the higher, for the crop year 1944 and the applicable rate of the payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, for the purposes of the 1944 agricultural conservation program, and the parity payments herein provided exceed an amount sufficient to increase the farmers' returns to parity prices, parity payments shall be so adjusted as to provide a return to producers which is equal to but not greater than parity price.

Mr. McNARY. I ask that the portion beginning in line 24, page 71, and ending on page 73, line 17, on the subject of parity payments, go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. That all refers to parity payments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Federal Crop Insurance Act," on page 74, line 9, after "55 Stat. 255–256)", to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$7,818,748."

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to have this provision for Federal crop insurance go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood it was to go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment, together with that on page 74, line 13, will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Soil Conservation Service," on page 76, line 2, after the name "District of Columbia", to strike out "$401,315" and insert "$451,315."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 15, after the word "installations", to strike out "$1,071,573" and insert "$1,196,573."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 76, line 25, after the word "information", to strike out "$17,130,000" and insert "$20,130,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 17, after the word "Service", to strike out "$18,675,136" and insert "$21,850,136"; and in line 18, after the words "exceed", to strike out "$1,004.691" and insert "$1,231,741."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, after line 19, to insert:

WATER FACILITIES, ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes", approved August 28, 1937, as amended (16 U. S. C. 590r–590x, 590z–5), including the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, $1,278,649, of which not to exceed $11,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, those funds were transferred from the item for the Farm Security Administration to a separate item. The action of the Senate on this item might in some wise be influenced by what occurs to the suggested appropriation for the Farm Security Administration, and I presume this amendment also should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over, and the clerk will state the next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Marketing Service", on page 79, line 5, after the word "products", to strike out "$1,084,570" and insert "$1,141,655."

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Will not the Senator explain the "Land utilization and retirement of submarginal land" provision, on page 78?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, that item relates to the liquidation of the so-called rural rehabilitation projects. At one time the Government had about 15 or 16 agencies which were acquiring land. The submarginal lands were acquired in large areas in various sections of the country. Congress has stopped buying the land, and this appropriation is to provide for looking after those lands which have been acquired. I have forgotten how many million acres the Government owns, but this appropriation is to enable the Government to make use of the seven and a quarter million acres which are administered under this program.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. It is just for the administration of the lands we have now?

Mr. RUSSELL. No money can be spent for the purchase of additional lands; it is merely to look after the property in which we have already a very substantial investment.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to have this provision go over, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. There is no amendment to the provision; it is in the bill as it came from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 79, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 10, after the word "contained", to strike out "$450,430" and insert "$474,137."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 20, after "473d)", to strike out "$363,250" and insert "$388,250."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 81, line 12, after the word "Agency", to insert "and Standard Container"; in line 19, after "491–497)", to insert a comma and "the Standard Baskets Act, approved August 31, 1916, as amended (15 U. S. C. 251–256), and the act to fix standards for hampers, round stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, approved May 21, 1928 (15 U. S. C. 257–257i)"; and at the end of line 23, to strike out "$167,520" and insert "$187,520."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will not the Senator from Georgia explain whether this increases the authority of the Government?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not; it combines two items. It provides for the work which has been done heretofore in attempting to police these containers. It is done by having a few field men go around to the plants where the containers are manufactured.

Mr. BYRD. It does not provide for any new authority?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not. However, it does provide for a slight increase in the appropriation. For a number of years $30,000 was provided for this activity. The House has from time to time whittled the appropriation down, and this year they cut it to $10,000. It developed before the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate that we might as well abolish the work as reduce the appropriation to $10,000, so we restored it to $30,000.

The purpose of the work is twofold; first, to protect the consumer, and, second, to insure fair competition between producers of various agricultural commodities. The evidence was to the effect that one man could lift the bottom of a basket containing strawberries or blackberries by a very slight degree, and even if it amounted to only 10 or 12 berries to each basket, not only would the consumer lose that much but in competition with his neighbor who is giving the extra 10 or 12 berries he has an undue advantage. This appropriation provides for work which is extremely important to consumers, as well as to all those engaged in producing vegetables, fruits, and the like, which are placed in containers. It would seem to be an overwhelming task to do the work, but it developed that there are only two or three hundred manufacturers of these containers, so instead of going out into the shops and markets and inspecting the containers, the plants are inspected to see that the baskets and other containers are uniform. I think it is a very important work.

Mr. BYRD. I agree with the Senator that it is very important.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment on page 81, line 12 and line 23.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 18, after the word "agreements", to strike out "$992,428" and insert "$1,042,428."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, line 24, after the word "act", to strike out "$400,000" and insert "$464,115."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 83, line 17, after "181–229)" to strike out "$350,000" and insert "$378,140."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 7, after "(U. S. C. 2)" to strike out "$225,000" and insert "$325,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 84, line 8, after the word "Service", to strike out "$5,866,708" and insert "$6,234,755"; and in line 9, after the word "exceed", to strike out "$1,298,413" and insert "$1,369,763."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the heading "Rural Electrification Administration", on page 84, after line 24, to strike out:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and for the purchase of property and costs and expenses incurred in connection therewith in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $20,000,000.

Total, Rural Electrification Administration, $22,258,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I think it is only fair to say that this amendment does not provide for a reduction in or an abolition of the funds available to the Rural Electrification Administration. A floor amendment will be offered later providing that these loans be furnished through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, as they have been in years past. The language providing for loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation was stricken out on a point of order on the floor of the other body, and an amendment was offered making a direct appropriation instead of the authorization. The Committee on Appropriations felt it was highly desirable to continue the present method of financing, which has been rather successful through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and a floor amendment will be offered later for the full amount.

Mr. WILSON. I ask that that amendment be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understood the Senator, in making his explanation of the appropriation for the Rural Electrification Administration, said that was being handled now as a loan under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; it has been so handled for years. The Rural Electrification Administration has borrowed funds from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and has pledged as collateral the notes of the cooperatives. There is no intention on the part of the committee to discontinue the Rural Electrification Administration. We hope to strengthen this amendment if we can when we reach consideration of it, but at the request made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] the amendment goes over until tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. It is taken care of under the loan features rather than by a direct appropriation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; and that is legislation, and amendments dealing with it must be offered from the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is it the intention to increase the amount in that item over the appropriation approved by the House?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. We intend to press an amendment which would authorize the Rural Electrification Administration to borrow $30,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for carrying on its work. Of course, that is less than the Rural Electrification Administration has received in years past, but in view of the very tight situation in connection with critical materials, that is as much money as the administration would be able to use advantageously.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Administration believe that would be sufficient money with which to carry on their work?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is all they can use, in view of the tight situation with respect to critical material such as copper and other materials.

Mr. MAYBANK. The R. E. A. is one of the most important departments of the Government.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the establishment of the Rural Electrification has brought about a greater permanent contribution in the way of improving agricultural conditions in this country than any other single thing the Congress has done in the last 10 years.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Rural Electrification Administration is helping a great deal in the way of increased production and preservation of food.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, it is a very important factor in increasing food production and in improving working conditions on the farm. In view of the scarcity of farm labor it is especially important. Electricity on the farm takes the place of two or three hands, and in the case of dairy production electricity takes the place of more hands than in the case of other farm products.

Mr. MAYBANK. I believe that if the materials had been available the committee would have increased the amount of loan to be authorized.

Mr. RUSSELL. The committee, and the Senate itself for that matter, have always espoused the progress of the Rural Electrification Administration. For years past we have made available as high as $140,000,000 in one year for the Rural Electrification Administration, and this organization has made an amazing showing in their collections. They have collected a great deal more than the maturities from the cooperatives. In addition many of the cooperatives have purchased bonds and placed them in reserve to hold until the maturity of their obligations to the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. WHERRY. The reason I ask the question is that in my State we are very much concerned with respect to the continuation of the Rural Electrification Administration. It appears the item has been taken out of the appropriation in the bill. That is the reason I wanted the explanation made.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the reason I wanted to explain the amendment which has gone over at the request of the Senator from Iowa. The amendment which will be pressed would authorize the Rural Electrification Administration to borrow $30,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for its purposes.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to have an explanation from the Senator from Georgia with respect to the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, the item concerning which appears on pages 87 and 88. It is my understanding that the provision for continuing farm mortgage loans or Commissioner's loans ends July 1. Is that what the paragraph refers to?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, there is nothing in the paragraph which would continue the loans. This is merely making provision for administrative expenses of that organization.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Does the Senator from Georgia know whether or not the provision with respect to Commissioner's loans by the Federal Land Bank Commissioner ends on July 1?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sorry but I cannot tell the Senator. If it does, I do not know why an appropriation was estimated by the Bureau of the Budget unless it was done on the assumption that the Congress would extend the time.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. I think I can explain that point. The other House has already passed a bill extending for a few years the life of Federal farm loans to which my colleague from South Dakota refers. The Senate Committee on Banking and Currency has the bill now under consideration and I understand will report it to the Senate floor quite soon.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the next amendment, appearing on page 89 down to and including line 3 on page 95, go over.

Mr. RUSSELL. That amendment has been passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Liquidation and management of resettlement projects," on page 95, after line 11, to strike out:

SEC. 2. No part of any appropriation contained in this act or authorized hereby to be expended shall be used to pay the compensation or expenses of any officer or employee of the Department of Agriculture, or any bureau, office, agency, or service of the Department or any corporation, institution, or association supervised thereby, who engages in, or directs or authorizes any other officer or employee of the Department or any such bureau, office, agency, service, corporation, institution, or association to engage in, the making of loans under the provisions of section 201 (e) of the Emergency Relief and Construction Act of 1932 (12 U. S. C. 1148), as amended, or the making of loans or advances in accordance with the terms and conditions set forth in Food Production Financing Bulletins F-1 or F-2 of the Farm Credit Administration operating under the Food Production Administration, Production Loan Branch.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that that amendment go over until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. That amendment has already been passed over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the last committee amendment deals with renumbering of sections.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask that the sections be not renumbered at this time because there are some amendments to be offered from the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Very well.

Mr. RUSSELL. Under instructions of the committee I offer an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 18, line 10, after the word "Columbia", it is proposed to insert "including the salary of the chief of bureau at $10,000 per annum."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, is it the purpose by the pending amendment to raise the salary of certain officials from $9,500 to $10,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President, it is not. It is proposed by the amendment to insert in the bill language which has been in similar bills for a number of years. The House committee reported the language but it was subject to a point of order and objection was made to it on the floor of the House. But the Senator will recall that three or four of these items were before the committee. Two of them dealt with the restoration of salaries to the amount the officials affected are already drawing. Two others were to increase salaries. The pending amendment refers to the Director of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. He has been in the Department for a number of years and has always drawn $10,000 a year, but there was no statutory authority for it. The amendment merely proposes that he shall continue to draw the amount he is receiving now and has received for a number of years.

Mr. LODGE. Then the amendment will not result in building up the Bureau and creating a number of more highly paid positions within the Bureau?

Mr. RUSSELL. It does not have that effect at all. It merely maintains the salary of this individual at what it is at the present time, and does not affect any other persons whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered on behalf of the committee on page 18, line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. On behalf of the committee I offer another legislative amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 19, line 21, after the word "Administrator", it is proposed to insert "including the salary of the Administrator at $9,200 per annum."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have an explanation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, Mr. President, I shall be glad to explain the amendment. It relates to the salary of the Administrator of Agricultural Research. There has been a reorganization in the Department of Agriculture, and all the research agencies have been consolidated and coordinated. The head of the agency is Dr. E. C. Auchter, who has been with the Department for a number of years. For a long time he was Director of the Bureau of Plant Industry. Unless the amendment is agreed to, he will suffer a reduction in salary.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to say that there is no abler or more expert man connected with the Government, in my judgment, than Dr. Auchter.

Mr. RUSSELL. I agree entirely with the Senator from Virginia. Dr. Auchter is a very able man. He has been appointed the head of all the research agencies. If the amendment were not agreed to, he would have a number of subordinates who would receive more money than he would receive.

Mr. LODGE. How would his salary be reduced if the amendment were not agreed to?

Mr. RUSSELL. Because he would then receive the same salary he was receiving under his old classification, which would be below that received by a number of subordinates serving under him.

Mr. LODGE. He has been receiving the salary provided for in the amendment; has he?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; at the present time he receives $8,500. However, he has just been appointed the head of this agency.

Mr. LODGE. He has been promoted; has he?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; this is a promotion, under the reorganization which has just been put into effect; because he has been placed at the head of all the research work in the Department. He has great responsibilities, and at the present time has working under him a number of persons who are receiving $9,000 a year or more. The amendment proposes to pay him $9,200 a year. The proposed action would not result in the increase of any other person's compensation; but it is merely to avoid the very unfortunate situation, I think, of having the man who is the head of a bureau receive less money than is received by three or four of his subordinates.

Mr. LODGE. I am entirely disposed to accept the item, under the statement of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Virginia that this gentleman is an extremely able public servant; but I should like to know whether the item is to be used as a springboard and leader for conducting a program of the magnification of salaries for other persons in the Division in which he is serving.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I can assure the Senator that the item is only for the salary of Dr. Auchter. In fact, his salary should be $10,000, because a number of persons in the Department, doing work less important than his, are receiving $10,000 a year. However, the committee merely offered an amendment so as to have him paid slightly more than some of his subordinates are paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, on page 19, line 21.

The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, by direction of the committee, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 54, line 3, after the words "Chief Forester", it is proposed to insert "at $9,500 per annum."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, the amendment proposes to increase the salary of the Chief Forester so as to make it somewhat commensurate with the salaries of the heads of a number of other bureaus of the Department of Agriculture. The Bureau of Forestry is one of the principal agencies of the Department of Agriculture.

In answer to the inquiry previously made with respect to whether the proposed increase, if granted, would affect other salaries within the Department, let me say that possibly it would, depending upon what ratings the Civil Service Commission might make as to other subordinates; because I believe there is a relationship between the salary received by the head of a bureau and the salaries received by subordinates. However, whatever is done must be done under a recommendation by the Civil Service Commission. I should be glad to have printed in the RECORD a letter—I do not happen to have it with me—to indicate the attitude the Civil Service Commission would take with respect to the matter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator what salary the Chief Forester now receives.

Mr. HAYDEN. He is paid $9,000.

Mr. LODGE. The amendment would increase his salary by $500; would it?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. So, if we do that, there is reason to believe that our action would be taken as a compelling reason for an increase of salary for others in the Bureau——

Mr. HAYDEN. It would be a justification for a request to the Civil Service Commission for some increases inside the Bureau. Whether the Civil Service Commission would allow such increases, I am not prepared to say, because that would depend upon the justification shown.

However, I did not want the Senate to adopt an amendment of this kind—one which might possibly have that effect, although not certain to do so—without making this statement.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, Mr. President, the thought also occurs to me—I realize it is not a fair question to ask if no Member of the Senate now present can answer it—that if we start piecemeal raising the salary of this official and of that official, our action will be taken as a precedent on the basis of which to raise the salaries of a number of other officials. Of course, everyone has had a cut; everyone in Congress has, in a manner of speaking, had a reduction of salary; and the present time is as good as any to face the question of whether we want to establish such a precedent.

Of course, with the inflationary tendencies which are abroad in the country, probably we are embarked on a program of altering the compensation of persons who are paid by the Government, and probably we shall not be able to alter it as fast as the cost of living increases. But I still have grave doubt about the advisability of taking a step of this kind. While I am sure the official referred to is a splendid man and a good public servant, and is entitled to the proposed increase, considering it on the basis of his individual case, nevertheless there are other factors of which we cannot be oblivious. Consequently, I should like the RECORD to show that, so far as I am concerned, I do not enthuse about this particular item. I do object to it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Does the Senator desire to have the amendment go over until tomorrow.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to have the RECORD show that the amendment was agreed to by unanimous consent, because I do not think it is proper.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I suggest that the amendment go over, with the other controversial amendments, until tomorrow.

Mr. HAYDEN. Very well.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection being heard, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk another noncontroversial amendment, which I offer and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 59, line 22, after the figure, it is proposed to insert "of which not to exceed $30,000 may be expended for the purchase of land adjacent to the present site of the Forest Products Laboratory, Madison, Wis."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the evidence disclosed that the land could be purchased for almost as much as is being paid by the Government in annual rental for land and buildings which are necessary for carrying on the Forest Products Laboratory at Madison, Wis. The amendment would not increase the amount of the appropriation, but merely would enable the laboratory to spend $30,000 for the necessary land.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 61, line 16, under the caption "Forest Fire Cooperation", and following the words "District of Columbia", it is proposed to insert "Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may authorize expenditures not to exceed $2,300,000 from this appropriation for preventing and suppressing forest fires on critical areas of national importance without requiring an equal expenditure by the State and private owners."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 65, after line 8, it is proposed to insert:

WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION

Salaries and expenses: For expenses necessary to enable the War Food Administration to perform its functions, including those prescribed by Executive Orders 9280, 9322, 9328, and 9334, independently or in cooperation (by transfer of funds or otherwise) with public and private agencies and individuals, including not to exceed $10,000 per annum for an Administrator; other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; printing and binding; the purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; the purchase, operation, and maintenance (including two in the District of Columbia) of passenger-carrying vehicles; $25,000,000: Provided, That transfers of funds to other offices or administrative units in the Department with respect to which transfers of funds are otherwise authorized in this act shall be in addition to, and subject to the same restrictions as, the amounts provided therefor in the Budget schedules.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this item provides for the administrative expenses of the Division of Food Administration and Distribution. A Budget estimate came to the committee after the bill had passed the House. Mr. Chester Davis appeared before the committee and outlined the necessity for this administrative expense, and the purpose for which the money would be expended.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, on what page is the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment occurs on page 65, after line 8. A supplemental Budget estimate has been submitted for all the administrative expenses of the new Division of Food Administration and Distribution, to which Mr. Chester Davis was recently appointed.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to have it go over. I should like to see an itemized statement of the expense.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have it before me. Probably it would be easier to let the amendment go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, would the Senator care to make a statement now of the character of the expense? Does it include suboffices throughout the United States? What is the $25,000,000 for primarily?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, it includes, not offices throughout the United States, but a committee in every agricultural county in the United States, to see that questions of priority for farmers for gasoline, tires, and farm equipment are promptly handled. I can conceive of no more important expenditure of public funds that could be made today than to do something to clear up the unspeakable confusion which now exists as the farmers of the country are trying to get machinery, gasoline for their tractors, and tires for their trucks and cars, in order to produce the food necessary for the war effort. It has been handled in a very haphazard fashion up to the present time. Mr. Davis is reorganizing that activity, and has already obtained an increase of more than 40 percent in the farm machinery available for the production of crops this year.

Mr. TAFT. I received a call from an officer of one of the leading farm organizations in Ohio, in which he protested against setting up a completely new bureau, and said that obviously, apparently—in Ohio, at least—a new Federal bureau under the Food Administration in every county seat in Ohio was contemplated.

Mr. RUSSELL. I had heard nothing about it.

Mr. TAFT. We already have three or four agricultural agencies. He felt very strongly that they could be combined, and that it would not be necessary to set up a completely new organization for this purpose.

Mr. RUSSELL. I had not heard anything about setting up a completely new organization. This is an effort to consolidate the ones which are now in existence. We now have in each county a U. S. D. A. to deal with war efforts. There must be someone there to represent the Office of Defense Transportation. We also have the local A. A. A. committee. All of them have had some functions in connection with the program of increased food production and distribution.

Mr. TAFT. Can the Senator assure us that any of them will be abolished; or will they continue, and will we have in addition a new bureau?

Mr. RUSSELL. I cannot give the Senator any assurance, other than that which Mr. Davis gave the committee. He assured us that he would endeavor to simplify and coordinate the various committees throughout the country in order that confusion might be eliminated.

Mr. TAFT. My information is that in Ohio a new Agricultural Department bureau is being created in each of the Ohio county seats, leaving all the others in existence.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think the Senator has been misinformed. I shall be glad to obtain definite information and have it here tomorrow. The amendment has already gone over.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that he insert in the RECORD today a full explanation of the amendment, so that we may consider it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have before me a table which was submitted to the committee by Mr. Davis. I ask unanimous consent that the table, together with the statement submitted by the Bureau of the Budget requesting this appropriation, appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table and statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE—COMMUNICATION FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES TRANSMITTING SUPPLEMENTAL ESTIMATE OF APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE, FISCAL YEAR 1944, AMOUNTING TO $25,000,000

(May 24, 1943.—Read; referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed)

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 20, 1943.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for the consideration of Congress a supplemental estimate of appropriation, in the amount of $25,000,000, for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1944, in the form of an amendment to the Budget for said fiscal year.

The details of the estimate, the necessity therefor, and the reason for its transmission at this time are set forth in the letter of the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, transmitted herewith, in whose comments and observations thereon I concur.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF
THE PRESIDENT,
BUREAU OF THE BUDGET,
Washington, D. C., May 19, 1943.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your consideration a proposed supplemental estimate of appropriation, in the amount of $25,000,000 for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1944, in the form of an amendment to the Budget for said fiscal year, as follows:

On page 299 of the Budget, in column 2, immediately preceding the head "Commodity Credit Corporation," insert the following new item of appropriation:

"WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION

"SALARIES AND EXPENSES, WAR FOOD ADMINISTRATION, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

"Salaries and expenses: For expenses necessary to enable the War Food Administration to perform its functions, including those prescribed by Executive Orders 9280, 9322, 9328, and 9334, independently or in cooperation (by transfer of funds or otherwise) with public and private agencies and individuals, including not to exceed $10,000 per annum each for an Administrator and a total of 8 deputy, assistant, and associate administrators; other personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere; not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of persons or organizations by contract or otherwise without regard to the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; printing and binding; the purchase of lawbooks, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers; the purchase, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles; $25,000,000: Provided, That transfers of funds to other offices or administrative units in the Department with respect to which transfers of funds are otherwise authorized in this act shall be in addition to, and subject to the same restrictions as, the amounts provided therefor in the Budget schedule—$25,000,000."

The War Food Administration was created by Executive Order 9334, dated April 19, 1943, for the purpose of administering the Nation's war food program. Included among the responsibilities placed under this agency are: (1) The determination of the total food requirements and assignment of allocations based on available food supplies; (2) planning, preparation, administration, securing compliance and legal enforcement of food distribution orders; (3) providing for adequate food industry facilities and their effective utilization; (4) civilian food requirements, nutrition, and conservation; (5) determination of requirements and development of programs for obtaining, distributing, and conserving farm supplies, facilities and services; (6) supervision, operation, and legal enforcement of farm-machinery rationing, farm construction and repair permits, farm transportation permits, and related war activities; (7) the elimination of black markets, involving issuance of slaughter permits; and (8) meat grading arising out of requirements that all beef, veal, and mutton be federally graded. To meet the expenses of the War Food Administration for the fiscal year 1944, the funds herein recommended will be required.

The foregoing supplemental estimate of appropriation is made necessary by reason of contingencies which have arisen since the transmission of the Budget for the fiscal year 1944. I recommend that it be transmitted to Congress.

Very respectfully,

HAROLD D. SMITH,
Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 11, after the words "this item", it is proposed to insert "Provided further, That such amount shall be available for the purchase of seeds, fertilizers, lime, trees, or any other farming materials, or any soil-terracing services, and making grants thereof to agricultural producers to aid them in carrying out farming practices approved by the Secretary in the 1943, 1944, and 1945 programs under said act of February 29, 1936, as amended; for the reimbursement of any Federal, State, or local Government agency for fertilizers, seeds, lime, trees, or other farming materials, or any soil-terracing services, furnished by such agency; and for the payment of all expenses necessary in making such grants, including all or part of the costs incident to the delivery thereof."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, on what page is this amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. Page 70, line 11.

Mr. BYRD. That amendment has already been passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President. This amendment has not been passed over. This language has been in the appropriation act for years, and was stricken out on a point of order in the other House.

Mr. BYRD. But that section was passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood that we passed over the amendments which had been proposed to that section, not that we were prohibited from offering amendments to it. If the Senator wishes to have this amendment go over, I have no objection, but I cannot see why there should be any objection to it. The language has been in the appropriation act for years. As I have said, it went out on a point of order in the House of Representatives. This identical language is in the act under which we are operating at the present time. It was in the act the previous year. It merely provides that the Department may, where the farmers desire it, let the farmer buy seeds, lime, and things of that kind to carry on soil-conservation practices, and deduct the cost thereof from his payments at the end of the year.

Mr. BYRD. That explanation is satisfactory. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 70, line 11, after the words "the item", it is proposed to insert "Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, persons who in 1943 carry out farming operations as tenants or sharecroppers on cropland owned by the United States Government and who comply with the terms and conditions of the 1943 agricultural conservation program, formulated pursuant to sections 7 to 17, inclusive, of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, shall be entitled to apply for and receive payments, or to retain payments heretofore made, for their participation in said program to the same extent as other producers."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this language has been in the act for a number of years. It was reported by the House committee this year, and went out on a point of order on the floor of the House. Briefly, this is what it means:

There are a few cases throughout the country of small farms in forest areas and on other federally owned lands. Those isolated farms in the national forests are rented to farmers. Under a peculiar construction of the conservation laws, without this language, a person who is farming on forest land or other land owned by the Government cannot receive any of the soil conservation benefits, even though he complies in full with the program. This language simply puts a man who happens to be on Federal land in the same position as those on private land, and enables him to participate in the program. It has been in the act for years, and I think it has relieved some injustice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 75, line 23, after the word "Service", it is proposed to insert "and for sale and distribution to other Government activities, the cost of such supplies and materials or the value of such equipment (including the cost of transportation and handling) to be reimbursed to appropriations current at the time additional supplies, materials, or equipment are procured from the appropriations chargeable with the cost or value of such supplies, materials, or equipment."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is another legislative provision which has been in the act for a number of years. It was stricken out on a point of order. It is under the subhead of the Soil Conservation Service. This is the reason for the language:

At the present time the Soil Conservation Service has some warehouses and storage facilities which are in isolated areas. It permits the Forest Service and other field organizations to use its facilities, and is reimbursed by the Forest Service. If this language is not in the act, it will be necessary for the Forest Service to establish its own storage facilities. This amendment is in the interest of economy and efficiency in Government operation, and I can conceive of no objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 78, after line 12, it is proposed to insert:

EXPORTATION AND DOMESTIC CONSUMPTION OF AGRICULTURAL COMMODITIES

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to further carry out the provisions of section 32, as amended, of the act entitled "An act to amend the Agricultural Adjustment Act, and for other purposes," approved August 24, 1935, and subject to all provisions of law relating to the expenditure of funds appropriated by such section, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, funds appropriated by or for the purposes of section 32 of said act shall be available to the Secretary of Agriculture for the maintenance, expansion, and operation of a school milk and lunch program under clause (2) of said section 32: Provided, That such funds shall be available for such purposes during the fiscal year 1944 without regard to the requirement therein relating to the encouragement of domestic consumption.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, this is a modification of an amendment which was proposed by the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] relating to the school-lunch program. I have already undertaken to explain it. The amendment is offered to obviate any question of the legality of carrying on the school-lunch and school-milk program for the year 1944. I wish to point out, however, that it is confined to the year 1944 and does not give the school-lunch program any permanent status under section 32. I ask all Senators who are interested in the continuation of the school-lunch program to take note of that fact in order that they may be encouraged to submit this question as a legislative proposition.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. What would be the cost of carrying out the provisions of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. The approximate cost would be $59,000,000 for the coming year.

Mr. BYRD. Does the amendment provide equal distribution of the fund?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; there is no rule for distribution. That is what I have been inveighing against—the fact that this whole system has just grown up and there is no uniformity about it.

Mr. BYRD. Does the amendment make any provision for contributions from localities?

Mr. RUSSELL. No such provision is made. However, the committee has made a provision in the report that is binding upon the Administrator, and has stated that in no case should the contribution from the Federal Government exceed the cost of food used in preparing the luncheons. In other words, the several schools would have to defray all the expense of the equipment and all the expenses of those who conduct the activity.

Mr. BYRD. Would there be any objection to writing that into the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would be very difficult to do that. It sounds like a simple proposition, and if the Senator from Virginia can prepare language which will not make it too cumbersome, I shall be glad to accept it. We have never had any trouble with this particular Bureau not carrying out the injunctions of the Congress.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator from Georgia tell us who actually administers the school-lunch program, and decides how much every school is to receive?

Mr. RUSSELL. The gentleman's name is Roy F. Hendrickson. He is Director, Food Distribution Administration, which has taken the place of the old Surplus Commodities Corporation.

Mr. TAFT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. RUSSELL. Insofar as the committee has been able to determine from going into the matter, Mr. Hendrickson has done a very fine job, considering that he has had to proceed without the slightest definition of policy from the Congress. I think he has done a magnificent job, when it is considered that he is dealing with thousands of schools scattered throughout the country, and with all kinds of pressure made upon him. He has insisted at all times on the policy of local participation and local contribution. I think he has done a good job, but I do not think it is fair to give any Federal employee this much money and tell him to carry out a program without giving any legislative direction as to how the program should be carried out.

Mr. BYRD. Has the amount been increased?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; there is a substantial increase in the funds available for next year over those available for the present year. As I stated a few moments ago, there is one very sound reason for that. These projects grew up by the use of funds which were turned over by the Surplus Commodities Corporation, and the labor of the W. P. A. The W. P. A. has been liquidated and that expense has been placed in the local subdivisions of government to furnish all the employees who prepare the lunches and handle the lunches, and who collect from the children. It is using a misnomer to call them free lunches, for they are not free.

In practically all the schools a charge is made to all children who are able to pay some nominal amount for the luncheons. There is a great deal of administration, and all expense incident thereto has been placed upon the local school authorities, and I do not think improperly so. I think they should bear it. We took that situation into consideration in increasing the amount of the Federal contribution for food. The price of food has gone up, too, and even with the increase which has been recommended, I doubt that there will be much increase in the amount of food and milk to be made available for the use of the schools in carrying out the program.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to thank the able Senator from Georgia for his excellent explanation of this particular phase of the appropriation bill. I am very much interested in it because the city of Chicago would be vitally affected by the adoption of this amendment. I wish it understood, however, that my amendment does not in any way provide for any increase in the amount. The only purpose of my amendment is definitely to advise the department officials that they will have the right to go ahead and continue to do what they have been doing heretofore.

Mr. RUSSELL. There was involved a very serious legal question as to whether they had the right to do it, because heretofore they had been dealing with surpluses of agricultural commodities. Now there is no surplus. Unless an amendment following the line of that suggested by the Senator from Illinois were adopted, this whole program might be stricken down by a ruling of the Comptroller General of the United States, or by action of a court somewhere. The effect of the Senator's amendment would not be to increase the amount available, because it does not deal with that, but it would clarify the legal status of the program and make sure that there would be ample legal authority to continue the program in 1944. In my opinion, there is a very grave doubt as to the legal authority for continuation of the program under the present circumstances unless the amendment shall be adopted.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the Senator very much. My reason for offering the amendment was that the Senator from Illinois had received information from the Department that unless Congress clarified the situation up by an amendment there would possibly be a ruling which would prohibit it from spending any of the money for school luncheons under the present arrangement.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does the Senator from Georgia know whether it was the intention of the Surplus Commodities Corporation to take over a great number of the W. P. A. staff, which is being legislated out of existence?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; none of these funds can go to the W. P. A. staff that has been preparing food and serving it, because the funds are limited to the purchase and handling of food for the schools.

Mr. TAFT. I understood the Senator to say the purpose of the increase is to pay for the things for which the W. P. A. has paid up to this time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; I did not intend to say that. I said there were two reasons why increased funds were recommended by the Budget.

The first reason is that the abolition of the W. P. A. had increased the expenses to the local sponsors so that the sponsors could not buy as much food as in the past. Only about 40 percent of this program is represented in the cost of the food. The remainder is in necessary personal services and equipment. Under the report which we have made, the funds would be limited to the purchase of food. So, under the national average of 40 percent, even with a billion dollars available, if they heeded that national average, they could not spend more than 40 percent in connection with any one project.

The other reason why there has been an increase is because the cost of food has tremendously increased, as the Senator knows. As a matter of fact, we intended to prohibit the taking over of the functions which had heretofore been performed by the W. P. A. employees as they related to the preparation and handling of food in the schools. There has been an entirely new program adopted. Instead of sending out food to the several schools, as used to be done in the past, when surpluses were available now they check on what the school buys and pay for a part of the food thus purchased.

Mr. TAFT. There are, of course, no surplus foods any more.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are no surplus foods that I know anything about.

Mr. TAFT. The former method of disposing of surplus food has now become a Federal program to feed school children.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, for the year 1944. That is what I was pointing out and complaining of when I first discussed the matter.

Mr. TAFT. Was the question dealt with in more detail in the hearings?

Mr. RUSSELL. There were rather extensive hearings in the committee. We did not print all the testimony in our hearings, but in the Senate committee hearings and in the House hearings I think the Senator will find a very thorough statement of the matter.

Mr. TAFT. Would the Senator be willing to allow this item to go over until tomorrow?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have no objection to that being done.

Mr. TAFT. I do not know that I shall discuss it, but I should like to find out more about it.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall take but a few moments to give my view about the school-lunch program, which, as the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Ohio have said, originated because we had a surplus of foods and also because we had a surplus of labor. The surplus of foods and the people who were on W. P. A. were combined to create the school-lunch program. It has been a marvelous program in a great many ways, and certainly it would be a harsh thing to cut it right off when so many school children have become dependent upon it; but this amendment, as the Senator from Georgia has very frankly said, is a stopgap, and that is all it should be. It is not sound, in my opinion, for the Congress to appropriate $59,000,000 and turn it over to an official in the department to allocate in any way he desires. I believe there is sufficient ingenuity and ability in the Congress to devise a formula or precept and embody it in a legislative bill which will establish the school-lunch program on a proper footing. The minute there are made available foods that can be allocated according to the whim of one official in Washington the tendency is immediately to provide foods for places where he happens to like certain individuals and not to provide them for places where he does not like those in charge, and he becomes more or less a kingmaker.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does the Senator find any evidence in the House hearings or in the testimony taken by the Senate committee to indicate that this program has been administered on that basis?

Mr. LODGE. No; none at all, so far as the school-lunch program is concerned. If I gave that impression, I misspoke myself; but I think in the early days of Federal relief there was a great deal of that. I cannot give specific instances now, but it was a matter of common knowledge that a certain mayor who stood in very well with those in control would get a good deal more per capita for the people of his city than the people in another city would get.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the Senator will yield further, I was apprehensive that the inference might be drawn from his statement that there had been some such unjustified practices and policies in connection with the school-lunch program. The Senator from Wisconsin is so anxious to make sure that that program shall not be cut off and that Congress shall have time to pass enabling legislation that I think Senators reading the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts or those who heard them might come to the conclusion that he had found something to criticize in the manner in which Mr. Hendrickson had been endeavoring to carry out the program.

Mr. LODGE. I am delighted to assure the Senator that there is nothing of that kind at all. Everything we found out about Mr. Hendrickson's administration of the school lunch program was entirely favorable; but I think this program is too important, and it is going to mean too much as time goes on for it to rest on a discretionary basis of this kind. I think it is a subject of sufficient importance to be the topic of a legislative bill which will definitely enunciate congressional policy. I favor the amendment, but it is merely a stopgap; that is all it is.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I may say, if the Sentor will yield further, that I think the Senator from Georgia made it very clear that he was serving notice upon those interested in the school lunch program, both in and out of Congress, that this provision is only for 1 year, and that if they desire to see the program continued in the future they should get busy and present and press in the Congress legislation to authorize this type of program.

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly endeavored to express that view.

I may state further, Mr. President, that I do not think this program ought to be in the Department of Agriculture. It should be administered by the Federal Security Agency. Going further, I think we ought not to take section 32 funds to finance this program. The man who has the type of duties assigned to Mr. Hendrickson—and he is a very efficient public servant—should not be cluttered up with this program. Talk about a man having all this power, Mr. Hendrickson has never sought this power and authority, but it has been thrust on him. If anybody is to blame, it is the Congress. Congress ought to enact legislation on the subject.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator that if there is any one at fault in handling the program over a long period of years it has been the Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. I have so indicated.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me ask how long this program has been going on?

Mr. RUSSELL. It has been going on for some time. As I recall, since 1933.

Mr. LUCAS. So for 8 years this type of program has been under way. Without the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, it would not have been possible for this type of program to continue without the Congress apparently knowing anything about it, or at least having this discussion; that is to say if the department wanted to pursue this same course in spending funds under section 32 as they did in the past, they could not have spent it for this kind of milk program.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that I agree absolutely with the Senator, because, up to now, it has been disposing of agricultural surpluses, and there was ample authority under the law to spend section 32 funds, to dispose of all agricultural surpluses any way they saw fit, but today there are no agricultural surpluses in the United States. Without the amendment of the Senator from Illinois any citizen of the United States might have been able to stop this program if he had desired to do so.

Mr. LUCAS. It is my understanding that there was a question of doubt as to whether or not they had authority to continue spending the money.

Mr. RUSSELL. They have changed the whole method of handling from that of furnishing agricultural products, and are now turning over the funds to the local trustees to defray part of the cost of the food. Without the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, I doubt very seriously whether they could have carried on the program.

Mr. LUCAS. I agree with the Senator that it is very important that it be put on a solid foundation, but I am not condemning anybody in any department for not being able to do that or for not having had it done. That is the responsibility of the Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. I will say again that, if anybody is to blame for the present confusion, it is the Congress. We certainly cannot pass it off to anyone else.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as a member of the Appropriations Committee, I wish to state, after having given some thought to the matter, that I feel, as does the Senator from Georgia, that $59,000,000 is not a sufficient fund to run the program, and that the sooner the Congress of the United States sets up a permanent agency to care for the school-lunch program the better it will be for the children and the better it will be for the health, welfare, and happiness of future generations.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer a legislative amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 78, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

CONSUMERS' COUNSEL DIVISION

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Not to exceed $150,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation made by section 12 (a), title I, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, as amended (7 U. S. C. 612), shall be available during the fiscal year 1944 to enable the Secretary to further perform the duty imposed upon him under applicable laws to protect the interests of consumers with due regard to the maintenance of a continuous and stable supply of agricultural commodities adequate to meet consumer demand at prices fair to both producers and consumers, which sum shall be available for administrative expenses (including not to exceed $31,800 for printing and binding) in accordance with the provisions of subsection (a) of the aforesaid section 392, but without regard to the limitations prescribed in subsection (b) thereof.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, may I interject an inquiry?

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the amendment proposes legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; it proposes legislation.

Mr. McNARY. Did the committee authorize the Senator to offer the amendment?

Mr. RUSSELL. The committee authorized and instructed me to offer this language from the floor. It had been in the bill in the House, the House committee having put it in the bill, but it was stricken out on a point of order.

There is rather a peculiar situation, when we get funds for a consumers activity out of section 32 funds, but it has been financed in that method in the past. The amount of the appropriation we are suggesting is $25,000 below the Budget estimate. The Budget estimate was $175,000, and we made the appropriation $150,000. The appropriation was recommended by the Budget, the House committee approved it, but it was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order, and I was instructed by the Senate committee to offer it as an amendment from the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I have often stated my objection to legislation so complex as this on an appropriation bill. Why should it not take the ordinary course, and go to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and there receive the sanction of the committee, and an authorization, and then come in as a regular bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be delighted to have it take that course. As a matter of fact, I am not particularly interested in this appropriation. I did feel, however, that in this day, when the consumer is complaining somewhat about the prices of agricultural commodities, perhaps this little appropriation of $150,000 out of agricultural funds could properly be made to carry on an activity which had been followed in the past. I do not know whether it has ever been worth 2 cents to the consumer, I may say to the Senator from Oregon. I do not know of anything particularly spectacular that has ever been done by the organization effected to protect the consumer, but inasmuch as the organization was in the department, and was functioning, under a provision which had been placed in the law in the House of Representatives in times past, I offered the amendment as a floor amendment, under the instructions of the committee, in order that the work might not cease on the 1st of July.

Mr. McNARY. I do not think this item has ever had any separate legislative authority from the Congress.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course it has not; otherwise it would not be necessary to offer it as a legislative provision from the floor.

Mr. McNARY. I do not like to short circuit provision for anything important. Uniformly the practice is growing of offering legislative amendments to appropriation bills. It is not a good way to legislate, as I have said many times. I do not know anything about this particular item. I recall that one year it was carried in the appropriation bill, but I thought that in the meantime a legislative provision had been brought to the attention of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, either in the Senate or the House; but here we are asked to legislate on an appropriation bill for something which should be considered as a matter of policy by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That is my objection, not that I particularly object to this particular item. But every year this comes up in this fashion, and the Committee on Appropriations has not any authority to include such a provision. That committee does not make the proper inquiry, it has not the facilities for doing so. The matter should come before the appropriate legislative committee. I want this amendment to go over for today. I wish to read it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well, that ends the discussion of it. I wish to offer another legislative amendment. Does the Senator wish to insist on his objection to all of these legislative amendments?

Mr. McNARY. Sometimes, when I am in a better humor, I do not insist; but I do not like the practice, and I know the Senator does not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I dislike it very cordially, but I can see no other action to be taken, in view of what has transpired with regard to the bill. For example, here is a little item which legislatively permits the Secretary to require a bond of those under the jurisdiction of the Stockyards and Packers Act. Similar provision has been in the agricultural appropriation bill for some 10 or 12 years. The Department says it is absolutely essential, if we are to protect the producers of the United States. The provision was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order, because this year, for the first time in legislative history, the Committee on Rules of the House did not give the Committee on Appropriations a rule on the bill. Just because I object to the general policy of legislating on appropriation bills, I do not think I should stand aside and see as important a matter as this stricken down, so that when the Secretary cannot require bonds of the stockyards and packers to protect the producers of livestock, all these bonds will be invalidated on the 1st day of July, when the pending bill will become law if this amendment be defeated.

Mr. McNARY. The distinguished Senator recalls that in 1921 we passed what was known as the Stockyards and Packers Act. Why has the Secretary waited all these years to get appropriate legislation?

Mr. RUSSELL. I regret that I cannot answer the Senator's question.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, the Senator cannot. I want this amendment to go over, and to accompany the other one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. All the other amendments I have to offer are legislative, I may say, if the Senator from Oregon objects to legislative amendments.

Mr. McNARY. I stated a moment ago that the Senator is always fair, and I try to be. If he has something in which negligence does not appear so impressive, probably we can work it out. What has he to offer?

Mr. RUSSELL. The language of all these amendments has been in the bill a number of years, and went out this year on a point of order on the floor of the House, and must be restored on the floor of the Senate if the provisions are to get back into the bill. I was not willing to assume responsibility for the Congress enacting legislation on all these questions between now and the 1st of July. These are very important matters. The custom of putting these items in appropriation bills may be a vicious one, but it is a custom which is hallowed by years of practice. They have been reported by the Budget year after year, and they have been approved by the House committee year after year, and year after year the House Committee on Rules has given the Committee on Appropriations a rule which protected it in the matter of these legislative items in the bill. Year after year these provisions come to us, and members of the Senate committee scarcely had realized the importance of some of these items in the bill, until this year, when they were stricken out on points of order on the floor of the House and we held extensive hearings in regard to them.

The amendment I hold in my hand is one with which the Senator is very familiar. It is one which permits the R. E. A. to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation funds which are loaned to rural cooperatives throughout the country, rather than have a direct appropriation made by the Congress. Similar provision has been in the bill for a number of years, and this year it was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order.

Mr. McNARY. I appreciate that some of the amendments have the sanctity of age, but only this year the point has been raised that proper authorization has not been given for the appropriations.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is true. However, the point has not been up in the Senate before.

Mr. McNARY. I am speaking of the other House.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct. This year in the other House the standing Committee on Agriculture protested against the Committee on Rules giving the Committee on Appropriations a rule. The Senator may have read some of the rather acrimonious debate between the two committees in the other body, and the House proceeded to strip the bill of all these items which did not have the sanction of basic legislation.

Some of the provisions are rather important. I have one in my hand, for example, which is legislation, which permits the Federal land bank to assess the various production-credit associations and the banks and cooperatives an amount sufficient to defray the expense of the audit of those enterprises. Such a provision has been in the bill for a number of years. If we do not add it to the bill this year, and the Congress should fail to legislate on the subject by the 1st of July, it would mean that we would have to make a deficiency appropriation of $2,140,000 to carry out the law requiring the audit of the land banks. This has been in the bill for years, providing that the Governor or the land bank should assess these various production-credit associations in an amount sufficient to defray the expense of their annual audits. This year the provision was stricken out. Either we must provide the means by legislation, or there will be a deficiency appropriation of $2,140,000.

I do not like legislation offered from the floor, but it seems to me to be thoroughly justified in a case of this kind. The bill has never been in this shape before. We have never had to offer all these legislative provisions. It is very seldom that I have offered such provisions in the past, because I do not like the practice, but I think most of these amendments are justified, and the greater number of them will save money to the Federal Treasury.

Mr. McNARY. Let me say to the Senator, that so far as I am personally concerned, these amendments may be taken up and the items included in the bill, if the Senator will notify these agencies that they must secure legislation before the provisions are acted on again.

Mr. RUSSELL. The House Committee on Agriculture is now conducting hearings on this matter, and considering the enactment of legislation which would cover the questions which are involved in these various points of order. However, I think it would be rather dangerous for us to act today on the assumption that such provision will be enacted into law by the 1st of July.

It seems to be a safer policy to replace them in the bill than to assume a number of bills carrying this authority in statutes can be enacted.

Mr. McNARY. No, Mr. President, for my part I am willing that these items be written into the bill, which is a procedure conformable to past practices, but I should like to have the Senator to tell me that in the future he will advise these Government agencies that they must obtain the proper authority from Congress before the items can again appear in the bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to do so, and I will state that I think that they should do so, because I believe they will be in a precarious condition next year if they do not sponsor proper legislation before the standing committees.

Mr. McNARY. I shall feel inclined, in whatever capacity I may serve next year, to make the objection as final if the items appear without authority of statute.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am sure that they will heed that suggestion from the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interject an observation at this point?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to yield to my colleague.

Mr. GEORGE. A great many things have appeared in the appropriation bills of which the Committee on Agriculture had not the slightest jurisdiction. Extraneous matter has been placed in appropriation bills from year to year, and there are some very notable instances of embarrassment that flows from that practice. The only sound program is not to write legislation into an appropriation bill. If everything that is placed in an appropriation bill is matter over which the Committee on Agriculture has jurisdiction the situation might be different. But I can show the Senator where matters which are within the definite jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, and which affect our whole tax program, have been interjected into appropriation measures by amendment. Of course there was a good purpose to be served, and the Senate went along, or perhaps the House was to blame, but whoever was to blame for it, the only sound program is simply to adhere to the rules of the Senate and not place new legislation in appropriation bills.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, as I have repeatedly stated, I think it is a very bad practice to legislate on appropriation bills as a general policy. I have seen times however when various minor matters could be cleared up by legislation, and I could see no objection to doing so. For example, a few minutes ago we approved an amendment which carried the provision "including the construction of temporary buildings at Beltsville." I do not know that the standing committees should be required to go into any very great detail concerning matters of that kind. I doubt if the standing committees would consider them if they were presented to them. Some of these amendments are very important, and I think they ought to have a legislative basis, but I do not believe that because in theory the Appropriations Committee should not legislate—and I might say that I do not bring such amendments into the Senate in the bill when I bring a bill to the floor. I offer such amendments from the floor as legislative provisions, and I stated on the floor today when offering each one of them, that each one was a legislative provision. I do not intend to cover up a legislative provision in the bill as I bring the bill to the floor. I offer such amendments from the floor. Legislation on appropriation bills may be a bad practice. But I do not believe that we can justify abandoning programs which are now in operation, some of them vitally affecting all the people of this country, dealing with the purity of the meats, dealing with the purity of the food we buy; I do not believe we can justify omitting provisions which have been contained in agricultural appropriation bills for years because such provisions are legislative.

Of course, the better practice is always to enact such provisions as separate legislation. But we are now in the last days of this fiscal year. The pending bill will be operative on the 1st of July. The Senate has the right if it sees fit to reject the amendments. Any Senator can offer a point of order against them if he wishes to do so, and if we cannot obtain a two-thirds vote in their behalf we cannot get the amendments placed in the bill. But for my part I am not going to assume the responsibility of wasting two or three million dollars out of the National Treasury for the purpose of auditing the cooperatives for example, when we can avoid it by a simple amendment here, merely because it happens to be legislative in character.

I am not going to say that the Secretary of Agriculture shall not be obliged to require a bond under the Packers and Stockyards Act when such bonds have been required under similar bills for a great many years, merely because provision to that end is legislation on an appropriation bill. We know that we are not going to pass legislation dealing with such matters between now and the 1st of July. Such provisions have been in agricultural appropriation bills before. Other Senators have seen them in appropriation bills long before I came to this body. Certainly the present time is as awkward a time as possible to strike such provisions out of a measure or reject them as any we could find, because we are several weeks later than we were last year in our consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. I tried to make it plain that I am not going to object to the amendments. In view of the excellent statement made by the Senator from Georgia, I shall in all fairness withdraw the objection.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad the Senator has done so.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course, the fact of the matter is that under the precedents, whenever the House enters into the field of legislation it has always been appropriate for the Senate to go through that open door and itself to legislate. Therefore it is only fair to say that as a matter of actual practice these particular items have to all intents and purposes had legislative sanction as a result of the long practice of incorporating them in the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Any Senator, under all the circumstances, would have been in a position to offer a point of order against these amendments had they been incorporated in the bill in the House. Therefore it seems to me that we are confronted, as a result of what occurred in the House, with what might be termed "a very exceptional situation," and one of acute emergency. Therefore, while I agree with every word that has been said about the unwisdom of legislating on appropriation bills, in this particular instance it seems to me that the Senator from Georgia, the Appropriations Committee, and the Senate are justified in restoring these items, which really as a matter of fact went out not on their merits, but on the technical point of order raised in the House.

Mr. RUSSELL. And these items have been contained in similar bills for years. No one in the Senate has offered to strike them out of the bill when they came here in years gone by.

Mr. President, in view of the statement made by the Senator from Oregon, I will reoffer the two amendments which I offered on behalf of the committee, and which were just passed over.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator whether the amendments deal with any question of policy, or simply with matters of detail.

Mr. RUSSELL. They deal with matters of detail, but they do touch questions of policy. For example, the amendment to which I referred requires the Production Credit Associations to continue to defray the cost of their audits. If we were to stop that practice now, we would have to make a deficiency appropriation of $2,049,000 to pay for such audits. The credit agencies are amply able to pay for these audits. Most of them have done so for years. All of them have set up reserves to pay for the audits this year. But it is a policy which is contrary to the act creating the credit agencies.

Mr. GEORGE. It seems to me that we ought to go very slowly in adopting in an appropriation bill legislation which really deals with policy, sometimes a policy which is extremely important. Sometimes such items are placed in an appropriation bill, I may say to my colleague, solely because those who are interested in them can work them into the bill, but cannot get the items through the other committees, because when the naked policy is presented, it does not sound so good, but when it is tied in with a great many appropriations, and a great many persons and agencies are interested in them from various angles, those who present them are able to slip them through. I always entertained the view—and, because of my colleague's experience, I want to ask him if I am not correct in my understanding—that the Senate Appropriations Committee has the power and authority to reject anything coming to it from the House which is purely legislation on an appropriation bill. Is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course it has; the Senate Appropriations Committee can reject anything which comes from the House.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. No; it is not subject to a point of order on that ground. Each House can take action based on a point of order only with respect to legislation originating in that body. Under the circumstances, legislation attached by the House to an appropriation bill is not subject to a point of order in the Senate or in the Senate committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I was asking if it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. No. If the House has attached legislation to an appropriation bill, and if no point of order was made against it in the House, the item is not subject to a point of order in the Senate. If the Senate attaches legislation to an appropriation bill and if the item goes to the House, it is not there subject to a point of order. I think there is a House rule against attaching legislation to an appropriation bill in a conference report.

However, if the House committee proposes legislation to an appropriation bill, and if no point of order is made against the item in the House, the matter is not subject to a point of order when it reaches the Senate.

Let me say that I do not think any of these amendments are tremendously important as representing a change of policy. If they do involve a change of policy, the departure is not made this year, because all the amendments have been contained in previous appropriation bills. Not one of them is new matter. All of them have been in the appropriation bills in years past.

So, instead of changing the policy which has been in effect during the year 1943, they would simply enable the Department to continue on the basis of the policy which has been in effect during the current year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 83, line 17, after the figure "$378,140", it is proposed to insert "Provided, That the Secretary may require reasonable bonds from every market agency and dealer, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to secure the performance of their obligations, and whenever, after due notice and hearing, the Secretary finds any registrant is insolvent or has violated any provisions of said act he may issue an order suspending such registrant for a reasonable specified period. Such order of suspension shall take effect within not less than 5 days, unless suspended or modified or set aside by the Secretary or a court of competent jurisdiction."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL].

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, let me ask my colleague to what marketing agencies and dealers the amendment relates?

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment is proposed to the section of the bill which deals with the appropriations for the enforcement of the Packers and Stockyards Act.

The witness before the committee testified as follows:

> That language has been carried in the appropriation act since the fiscal year 1925; and our experience has been, over the 19 years, that the elimination of this bonding provision would remove a great protection now afforded to livestock producers and shippers. Thousands of dollars have been paid out on these bonds, and there are now outstanding bonds totaling about $18,000,000. We increased the bonds a few months ago to take care of the present situation, and to provide some additional protection to livestock shippers.

Let me say to my colleague that the bonds are conditioned on the payment by the packer for the producer's stock when he ships it in on consignment. There have been many cases in which the farmer would ship his livestock to the stockyard, and the man who handled it would fail or would refuse to pay him. The bonds are conditioned on payment being made to the producers of the livestock and other protection to the shipping producer.

I read further from the testimony before the committee:

> The removal of the authority to suspend registrations also will impair the act considerably, because that means that no matter how flagrant the practice may be, or how fraudulent a practice may be, all we can do is to issue a cease-and-desist order. With this language we can do both and we did do both.
> We feel that the language which was eliminated on a point of order in the House is very important to the effective administration of this act. It has been in there for years; and time after time, as amendments to the act have been suggested, we have always included it along with other proposed amendments.

Mr. President, it seems that they have suggested this legislation to the standing committees, and some of the standing committees have failed to take cognizance of it.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I am not presently attempting to discuss the merits of the particular amendment, but on the subject of a general appropriation bill—a bill which, until the last very few years, always has been protected from legislation—I have a question to propound relative to the Appropriations Committee, the only committee charged with responsibility for controlling appropriations: Is it entitled to take upon itself the proposing of legislation to an appropriation bill, simply because it says the standing committee having jurisdiction of the subject has not seen fit to deal with it?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I was instructed by the committee to take up the matter on the floor of the Senate, because of the fact that if the amendment were not agreed to, great losses can be caused among the producers of livestock, who for 19 years have handled the matter in the way in which it would be handled if the amendment were agreed to. No Member of the Senate is subject to taking orders from the Appropriations Committee, of course. Any Senator can make a point of order against the amendment. If the Senator from Missouri desires to make the point of order, he is at liberty to do so, of course.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, I am endeavoring to arrive at some explanation of the remarkable development which, in the last few years, has occurred in both the House and the Senate, with the Appropriations Committees of the two bodies suddenly commencing to take jurisdiction of every possible legislative subject. For many years no rule was more strictly and religiously enforced than the rule against legislation on a general appropriation bill. In the House, in the last 4 or 5 years, there suddenly has developed a practice of having the Appropriations Committee report legislation, if necessary getting a special rule from the Committee on Rules. That procedure keeps the item from being subject to a point of order in the Senate, and makes it subject to any germane amendment which any Member of the Senate may choose to offer to it. I think that practice is a very bad one.

As to this particular amendment, I am inclined to think, as I say, that the legislation should be passed. I do not think it is properly a part of a general appropriation bill.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I just stated that all the amendments being offered have been carried in the appropriation bills for years, and are offered here only in the effort to prevent a change at this late date in the fiscal year. Personally, I do not like legislation on an appropriation bill; and, as a general proposition, when legislative matters are proposed in the Appropriations Committee, I have voted against them. But as I have stated previously, in this case the committee culled through the provisions which were stricken on a point of order on the floor of the House, and we offered those which we felt were absolutely essential for the carrying on of the program of the Department. The Senator from Missouri states that the policy of offering legislation on an appropriation bill has grown up in the last 4 or 5 years. The provision we are now discussing has been in similar bills for 19 years; and certainly now, when it has been stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order, I believe the Senate committee was entitled to submit it, and that it was due the producers and consumers of the country to have the item offered on the floor of the Senate, and to let the Members of the Senate vote either for or against it, or let some Senator make a point of order against it.

I am not attempting to take advantage of anyone in respect to these legislative provisions; and, so far as I am concerned, any Senator who wishes to do so is at liberty to make a point of order against it, and to have it stricken from the bill.

These items are now a part of the integral policy relative to dealing with the Stock Yards Act and other acts affected thereby. As I have said, one of them is to permit the R. E. A. to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The item is legislation which has been in similar bills for years. However, any Member of the Senate can make a point of order when the amendment is offered. I have carried out my responsibilities to the committee by offering the amendment on the floor. I think it would be a very short-sighted policy as to this bill, when we find that this year, for the first time in many years, the Committee on Rules would not give a rule to the House Appropriations Committee, to say that now, on this important amendment, not in the sense of representing any upheaval in the administration in the Department of Agriculture, but in affording the protection the people must have, we should not offer the amendments. I think we are justified in offering the amendments, and I am not willing to assume the responsibility of not doing all within my power to see that the various acts are carried out as effectively as possible. I do not like legislation on an appropriation bill, but I certainly think we had some responsibility when the bill came to us with items which had been in the act for 19 years stricken at the whim of one Member of the House. Those provisions ought to be voted on somewhere, or some Senator ought to make the point of order against them on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I do not think it is altogether the fault of the Appropriations Committee. The discussion so far has placed the blame on the Appropriations Committee. Most of these provisions have been contained in appropriation bills for years. The appropriate committees dealing with the various subjects must have some knowledge of that fact, and yet they have taken no action whatever, either against such legislation or in favor of it; nor have they taken up the subject matter in order to provide proper legislation. So the Appropriations Committee is in the situation that unless it does something, nothing will be done. Therefore it has had to continue these legislative provisions, because the appropriate committees of the Senate have not taken any action.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OVERTON. I have not the floor.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Will the Senator from Georgia yield to me for the purpose of replying to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield if the Senator from Louisiana wishes.

Mr. OVERTON. I shall be glad to have the Senator yield.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The Senator's own statement certainly indicates that in this particular case the Appropriations Committee has usurped the jurisdiction of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. The Senator says that the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry probably ought to have known about this matter, but that it did not legislate on the subject, and therefore the Appropriations Committee had to legislate. Why does the Appropriations Committee have to legislate if the appropriate committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter has not proposed any legislation? Is the Appropriations Committee a catch-all to supervise other standing committees of the Senate, and fill in the gaps?

Mr. OVERTON. No. My objection to the argument of Senators who aline themselves on the opposite side is that they go to the other extreme. The Senator from Missouri now asks, "Is the Appropriations Committee a catch-all to legislate on every subject matter?" It is not. It puts in the appropriation bill only such legislative provisions as are necessary administratively to carry into effect the appropriations contained in the bill. That is the general practice when nothing has been done about it. Of course, in this particular instance, if the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry were to take cognizance of the matter and enact some legislation as a guide to the Appropriations Committee, the Appropriations Committee would follow it; but when it does absolutely nothing, and administratively it is necessary that something be done in order that the appropriation bill may be carried into execution administratively, then it is done. That is the way I view the question.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. I think all this confusion has arisen because of the change from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to the Appropriations Committee of jurisdiction over agricultural appropriation bills. That change was made a comparatively few years ago. Formerly agricultural appropriation bills came before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We were supposed to know something about agriculture. They now go before a body of men who know very little about agriculture. There we are. When questions arise, the Appropriations Committee invites, not the farmers, but those interested in the appropriation, to appear before the committee. I believe that the system is working a detriment to the agricultural appropriation bill. It is in the hands of men who know nothing about the real merits of the subjects discussed. So far as I am concerned, with the exception of the few items which I try to save, I have lost interest in the agricultural appropriation bill.

I thought it appropriate to invite the attention of the Senate to the change which has been made in handling the agricultural appropriation bills.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I recall, when I first came to the Senate in 1917, the various legislative committees considered the appropriation bills. Later the Senate, by rule, changed the system. Now certain members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the ranking members of the committee, are asked to sit with the Appropriations Subcommittee and the full committee to pass on items in agricultural appropriation bills.

The Senator from South Carolina may be correct. I do not know who should consider the appropriation bills, but I do not think he is justified in his criticism of the Appropriations Committee as not knowing anything about agriculture.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I placed the members of the Appropriations Committee in the same category as members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate. We are supposed to look after the agricultural interests. That is the reason why our committee is called the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. But when it comes to an appropriation, that is sent to another committee. We are supposed to know the agricultural situation.

Mr. McKELLAR. Let me say, on behalf of the chairman of the subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which handles the agricultural appropriation bill, that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] has been chairman of that subcommittee for a number of years. I have never known a man who studied agriculture more faithfully to serve the best interests of the farmers as he sees it, than has the Senator from Georgia. I do not always agree with him; but whether I do or not, he is a remarkable head of a subcommittee, and I wish to bear testimony to that effect.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator; but he is not a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry; but I do not see that that has anything to do with this question.

Mr. SMITH. I hardly ever see the Senator present at sessions of the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am fairly regular in my attendance. I have been a member of the committee for only a short while, but I venture to say that I have attended more meetings of the full committee this year than has the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator must have attended at night; I have been there most of the time. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. I have attended meetings of the full committee with considerable regularity. The committee has some subcommittees functioning. I do not attend the subcommittees of which I am not a member. Neither does any other Senator. I do attend the meetings of the full committee.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I have no criticism to make of the Senator from Georgia. He has done splendid work. However, I think it was a mistake to take the agricultural appropriation bill away from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I do not know that we could have done as well with it as has the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me ask the Senator from South Carolina what agency in the Senate took that power away from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. SMITH. I suppose the Senator from Illinois was a party to it. I do not know.

Mr. LUCAS. I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee. I am a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know who took it away.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senate of the United States took it away.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senate of the United States took the power away from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry?

Mr. McKELLAR. As I remember, that is true.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am not a member of either of these committees, but I wish to say that the policy of centering the appropriation bills in the Appropriations Committee was adopted in 1921 or 1922.

Mr. McKELLAR. It was adopted in 1919.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I accept the correction. It was adopted in 1919, and has been the policy and the rule of the Senate ever since.

I merely wish to say that I think the Senator from Georgia and the other members of the subcommittee handling the agricultural appropriation bill are not only entirely familiar with the subject matter of that bill but they constitute one of the most diligent and efficient subcommittees before which it has ever been my privilege to appear. I think no one will challenge the statement that the Senator from Georgia shows extraordinary familiarity with all the details, as well as the fundamental policies, which are involved in the agricultural appropriation bill.

I wish to have it appear in the RECORD that it is the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin that the Senator from Georgia handles the agricultural appropriation bill, which is one of the most important measures with which we have to deal, with as great skill as is displayed by any other Member of the Senate.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I will not be put in the position of criticizing the Senator from Georgia. I suppose there are many persons who could administer medicine as well as a doctor can; but when we have a doctor we send for him.

I do not care to be put in the position of criticizing the Senator from Georgia. I am criticizing the principle involved.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from South Carolina that I did not take his statement as criticism of me. Of course, I was not a Member of this body when the change in policy was made. Since I became a member of the Appropriations Committee I have discharged the responsibilities placed upon me to the best of my ability.

Mr. SMITH. I understood the change was made in about 1919. That was about 40 years after I became a Member of the Senate. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer an amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 78, after line 12, it is proposed to insert the following:

CONSUMERS' COUNCIL DIVISION

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

Not to exceed $150,000 of the unobligated balance of the appropriation made by section 12 (a), title I, of the Agricultural Adjustment Act, approved May 12, 1933, as amended (7 U. S. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I offer another amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read. It is the last amendment which I wish to have acted upon, with the exception of those which have been passed over until tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 86, line 16, after the words "Farm Credit Administration" and before the semicolon, it is proposed to insert "Provided, That the requirement (12 U. S. C. 952) that Federal land banks and joint stock land banks shall be examined at least twice each year is hereby modified so that such examinations need be made only once each year: Provided further, That the expenses and salaries of employees engaged in such examinations shall be assessed against the said corporations, banks, or institutions in accordance with the provisions of existing laws except that the amounts collected from the Federal land banks, joint stock land banks, and Federal intermediate credit banks pursuant to the Act of July 17, 1916, as amended (12 U. S. C. 657), shall be covered into the Treasury and credited to a special fund, and the Administration shall estimate the cost to the Farm Credit Administration of the administrative supervision of the Federal land banks, the banks for cooperatives, the Federal intermediate credit banks, and the production credit corporations for the fiscal year 1944 and shall apportion the amount so determined among such banks and corporations on such equitable basis as said Administration shall determine, and shall assess and collect such amounts in advance from such banks and corporations and the amount so collected shall be covered into the Treasury and credited to said special fund, which fund is hereby made available to said Administration for expenditure for the purposes set forth in this appropriation: Provided further, That as soon as practicable after June 30, 1944, said Administration shall determine, on a fair and reasonable basis, (1) the cost of the examination services rendered during the fiscal year 1944 to each Federal land bank, joint stock land bank, and Federal intermediate credit bank and (2) the amount which fairly and equitably should be allocated to each Federal land bank, bank for cooperatives, Federal intermediate credit bank, and production credit corporation as the cost during the fiscal year 1944 of their administrative supervision, and if the sum of these two items in any case is greater than the total amount collected from the bank or the corporation concerned, the difference shall be collected from such bank or corporation or, if less, shall be refunded from said special fund to the bank or the corporation entitled thereto."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia will permit, I believe that this amendment should go over until tomorrow, because it is too complicated to be understood by anyone not familiar with it. I should like to have it go over until tomorrow so that in the meantime I may have an opportunity to examine it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have nothing further in the way of amendments to propose to the pending bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Megill, one of its clerks, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. Ulysses S. Guyer, late a Representative from the State of Kansas, and transmitted the resolutions of the House thereon.

The message informed the Senate that, pursuant to the provisions of the foregoing resolutions, the Speaker had appointed Mr. HOPE, Mr. REES of Kansas, Mr. CHENOWETH, and Mr. RIZLEY members of a committee, to join with such members of the Senate as may be appointed, to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

The message announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 796) relating to the use and operation by the United States of certain plants in the interests of the national defense, disagreed to by the Senate; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MAY, Mr. THOMASON, Mr. MERRITT, Mr. SHORT, and Mr. HARNESS of Indiana were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) to permit additional sales of wheat for feed, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT AND THE NAVAL SERVICE

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 2713, making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think that the Senate may rapidly complete the consideration of the naval appropriation bill, and, so far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I have no objection. I am anxious to dispose of all the appropriation bills. Will the Senator from Louisiana make a brief statement concerning the bill?

Mr. OVERTON. I expect to occupy about 15 or 20 minutes in doing so.

Mr. McNARY. Very well, I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 2713) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. OVERTON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the amendments of the committee be first considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, this bill as reported to the Senate carries the sum $24,850,427,198, making it the largest naval appropriation bill which has ever been considered by the Senate. It exceeds the appropriation for 1943, which, up to that time, had been the largest naval appropriation bill considered by the Senate, by $1,215,819,417. Notwithstanding this fact, the bill as reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is $4,808,906,802 under the estimates, and as reported by the committee there is in the bill a reduction of $2,613,260,000 as compared to the amount provided in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

This reduction, however, is more apparent than real. The reduction is what may be considered a paper reduction, because the Appropriations Committee of the Senate has transferred from cash appropriations certain items which will net be expended during 1944 and has converted them into the category of contract authority. The contract authority so transferred amounts to the sum of $2,786,800,000.

In addition to that, certain items which appeared in the House bill could be regarded as deficiency items, and, since the Senate committee has placed all deficiency items under a separate title, title II, of the bill, there has been a further reduction in the cash appropriations under title I of the bill.

Mr. President, before presenting the details of the bill, I should like to discuss the current status of the Navy with respect to prior authorizations granted to the Navy Department by Congress. Since June 30, 1940, to date, the total has been $68,800,000,000. If the amount proposed to be appropriated by this bill is approved, eliminating funds in it, approximating $10,000,000,000, to liquidate prior contract authority, we will have $22,800,000,000 more, or a total of $91,700,000,000.

The Senate has heretofore, especially when the last regular naval appropriation bill was before it, been interested in the obligation status of naval appropriations and in the cash balances. By June 30, excluding this bill, there will remain unobligated $1,374,639,450. This total consists of two items of contract authority and two items of cash. The first item is under the appropriation "Armor, Armament, and Ammunition," the shipbuilding appropriation, which material will be contracted for by the Bureau of Ordnance in time to have it delivered to the ships when required.

The other is an item of $65,000,000, which is a part of contract authority for the construction of floating drydocks, which was granted in the amount of $210,000,000. There has not been time to place these orders, as the authority was not received until the last day of March.

The two cash items consist of $10,000,000 under "Pay, Marine Corps," an overestimate for family allowances, which will revert to the Treasury on the last day of this fiscal year, and an item for "Care of lepers, Guam," in the amount of $39,450, which amount will also be returned to the Treasury since Guam is in the possession of the enemy. So much for unobligated balances of authority on June 30, exclusive, of course, of this bill.

As to cash on hand at the present time, which has been obligated to pay the bills, on June 30, the cash credit in the Treasury for the Navy Department, all obligated against old bills, will be $15,245,000,000. All this will be obligated by the end of the fiscal year. Of this sum of $4,300,000,000 is owed on 1942 contracts; $3,900,000,000 is owed on contracts made this year so far, and $2,000,000,000 will be obligated on contracts being effected between May 1 and the 30th of June.

This cash credit is not in the hands of the Navy Department; it is simply to the credit of the Navy Department on the books of the Treasury, and as the Navy requires the money to meet contractual obligations it makes requisitions on the Treasury, usually about twice a month, to obtain the necessary funds. So there is not that much cash, $15,245,000,000, in the hands of the Treasury, but that amount is in the hands of the Treasury with which to meet obligations heretofore contracted or that will be contracted in the future for which appropriations have been made, and, as I have said, at the end of the fiscal year all that $15,245,000,000 will have been obligated.

The cash expenditures of the Navy are running over $2,000,000,000 a month. As a matter of fact, the March figure was $2,292,000,000, and the April figure will be in excess of that. Moreover, the obligations likewise are running over $2,000,000,000 a month. In February they amounted to $2,705,000,000, in March $2,283,000,000. The April figure will be approximately $3,000,000,000.

This means that the expenditure and obligation curves are running somewhat parallel, which I think is a healthy condition, showing that the expenditures are keeping pace with the obligations as they are incurred. Of course, unless they are financed for cash beyond the appropriation year, the Department should in theory each year conclude the year with no cash on hand. However, that is, of course, impracticable, and as a rule they must have some cash on hand carried over.

The House made a departure in this bill in that it included in the aviation program contract authority in the amount of $2,000,000,000 against an aviation program. It was developed at the hearing that it would be practicable to place further contract authority in the bill, which would mean that this authority, which would pay off obligations incurred in the fiscal year 1944, would be liquidated in the fiscal year 1945. I explained that in the opening of my remarks.

Under the caption "Maintenance, Bureau of Ships," we have taken $560,000,000 out of the cash appropriation appearing in the bill as it passed the House and placed that amount under contract authority, because it is not contemplated that that amount will be expended until after the end of the coming fiscal year.

The other item is in "Ordnance and ordnance stores," in which item we have taken out of cash and put under contract authority $2,226,800,000.

The Senate committee thought that was the more logical way of making appropriations. It is going back to the form in which appropriations were made up to a comparatively few years ago, when the House began to make the appropriations in cash, although the expenditures were not to be made during the next fiscal year. The whole matter will come up in conference, I presume, and the better mode of making appropriations will be discussed in conference.

As to title I, the 1944 naval appropriation bill proper, the appropriations as they came from the House carried cash of approximately $27,500,000,000 plus $2,000,000,000 of contract authority. The bill which the Senate is now considering contains in title I cash in the amount of $24,600,000,000, and in direct contract authority $4,800,000,000.

In title II there are supplemental and deficiency items in the amount of $173,539,000, forwarded by the President under date of May 22, and one deficiency item removed from title I in the amount of $28,900,000. These deficiency items of $173,000,000 were sent by the Bureau of the Budget to the Senate committee immediately after we had closed the hearings on the last deficiency bill. They would logically have gone into that deficiency bill, but, since the committee had closed its hearings on the deficiency bill, we took them up, and we have placed them under a separate title—title II—which deals solely with deficiencies in the present fiscal year.

Excluding the deficiencies included in Senate Document No. 55, the net change in authority, as between the House and Senate bills, is only $1,000.

I wish to say that I think the House of Representatives and the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations of the House did splendid work with the bill. They examined very carefully into every item of appropriation, and we did not find it necessary to make any changes in the amounts, with the exception of one trivial sum of $1,000.

The major items in the 1944 Navy bill are, a program of additional aircraft construction for the Navy, which in this bill amounts to $4,943,725,000 and which provides for 27,642 new aircraft. It projects the aircraft procurement program to June 30, 1945.

When this money has been provided, the Congress will have appropriated to the Navy for the fiscal years 1940 to 1944, inclusive, for 82,714 planes. The actual aircraft procured by the Navy, due to adjustments which have occurred since 1941, including lend-lease, will number over 92,000.

Other major items in the bill are increases in vessels and aircraft operating and in the number of craft under construction. As the new Director of War Mobilization has said, the size of the Navy afloat will be doubled during the current calendar year. Aircraft deliveries are stepping up month by month. The deliveries to the Navy in the fiscal year 1944 will be double those for 1943.

A major item of increase in the bill, which of itself is an indication of the increased operations in aviation and ships, is the fact that the enlisted strength of the Navy proper is being increased by provision for 2,250,000 enlisted men, whereas the current year's figure is 1,450,000. The Marine Corps will have 352,500 for 1944, and the Coast Guard 164,560.

On the whole, the fiscal year 1944 sees the Navy passing more from the preparatory and production phase to the maintenance and operation phase. This is indicated by the fact that the naval estimates as they came to Congress prior to the inclusion of the aviation program provided for increases in recurring items of maintenance and operation of $3,500,000,000, and a decrease in the nonrecurring items, which is the procurement of material, of $2,500,000,000, despite the fact that the nonrecurring total included a rise of the shipbuilding expenditure in the amount of $2,200,000,000.

There are various objects which I have classified for which these appropriations are made, and without repeating them, I ask unanimous consent that the breakdown I have, be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Construction of ships	$9,118,120,000
Construction of aircraft	4,983,725,000
Aviation, Navy (all other)	1,600,000,000
Public works (of which $916,074,400 is for new authority)	1,855,317,405
Pay, subsistence, transportation, training, education, and welfare of the Navy	4,271,114,384
Maintenance, Bureau of Ships	1,735,880,000
Ordnance and Ordnance Stores	3,476,800,000
Construction of floating drydocks	160,000,000
Defense installations on merchant vessels	57,000,000
Freight	200,000,000
Other naval appropriations	535,283,165
Marine Corps	973,791,434
Coast Guard	467,756,760
Total	29,434,783,198

Mr. OVERTON. Two shipbuilding authorizations are picked up in the language under the shipbuilding appropriation, the estimated cost of which will total, when completed, $3,389,000,000, and which cover a million additional tons of auxiliary vessels, and a million additional tons of landing, district, and patrol craft.

Some minor language changes were made in the committee, all covered in the report. The Senate hearings cover the reasons for which they were made.

It is our hope that the bill will comprise all naval requirements for 1944, and it should do so, unless some change of personnel strength is made at the request of the President, or a new shipbuilding program is authorized by the Congress.

In any event, the bill includes the requirements of the Navy Department, as now visualized by it, to carry on the war for the fiscal year 1944.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our Lord, our natures are teeming with tendencies, desires, and ambitions; we therefore pray Thee to come richly into our hearts that we may be wisely directed. Help us to guard our wandering wills, subdue all threatening passions, and let our minds mingle with quietness, restraint, and courage. May we look with increasing gratitude upon our country, beautifully comforting, nobly sustaining, and dynamically inspiring. We praise Thee that we are American citizens, blessed under our Constitution with political, civil, and religious liberty. Enable us to realize fully that eternal vigilance is the price of everything sacred to our hearts; help us ever to hold aloft freedom's holy light. We pray that an aroused public opinion may put the garment of shame upon anyone who seeks to betray his country under the deceptive guise of patriotic motive. He who refuses to surrender a little temporary liberty for essential safety deserves neither liberty nor safety. Almighty God, we pray for our distinguished Commander in Chief, the coordinate branches of our Government, and for every individual citizen that the sacred rights of a free people may ever be safeguarded.

Thou who hast laid on the altar of the world the divinest love, we wait in appreciative memory of one who has left the folds of the Congress. Modest, yet with patriotic zeal, he served the state with ability and fidelity. Blessings upon her, the devoted companion of his years. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, June 4, 1943, was read and approved.

CLAIM OF MOUNT VERNON, ALEXANDRIA & WASHINGTON RAILWAY CO. (H. DOC. NO. 222)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and with the accompanying bill referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I am returning herewith, without my approval, H. R. 1667, a bill to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co., a corporation."

It appears that the Mount Vernon, Alexandria & Washington Railway Co. had been granted by an act of Congress the right to use certain streets in the District of Columbia. The act expressly provided, however, that it might "at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by the Congress of the United States." By act of May 25, 1926, the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to provide suitable sites for proposed buildings for the executive departments, such sites to be within the area between Pennsylvania and Constitution Avenues, and between Sixth and Fifteenth Streets NW. The Secretary, among other things, was authorized to close and vacate streets. At that time the railway company maintained tracks within the foregoing area. The Secretary of the Treasury served notice on the railway company requiring it to remove or abandon the tracks. After unsuccessful efforts to obtain an injunction in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the company complied with this requirement. Thereafter, it abandoned the operation of the street railway.

Subsequently, the railway company brought suit against the United States in the Court of Claims to recover damages for the taking and destruction of its franchise rights. The court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, first, because the action of the Government did not amount to a taking of property, and, second, because the franchise of the company was revocable due to the express reservation on the part of the Congress of the right to repeal the grant, and that consequently no vested property right was taken or destroyed by any action of the United States. The railway company made an application to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of certiorari, but the application was denied.

The purpose of the bill under consideration seems to be in effect to reopen an issue that has been duly adjudicated on the merits by a court of competent jurisdiction. The claimant has had his day in court and no reason appears discernible for reopening the matter by legislative action.

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 7, 1943.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Thomas E. Lyons, secretary of the Foreign Trade Zones Board of the Department of Commerce. I have checked this matter with the Government Printing Office and am informed that it will cost $54.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. D'ALESANDRO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by the inclusion of an article from the Baltimore Evening Sun of June 5, 1943, on the gas situation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MUNDT, for 2 weeks (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts), on account of official business.

To Mr. BULWINKLE, for 4 days, on account of death in his family.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

Mr. KLEIN, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 2584. An act to abolish certain naval trust funds and deposits thereto, and to simplify naval accounting procedure, and for other purposes.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, it becomes my very sad duty to announce officially to the House the passing at about 5 o'clock on Saturday morning of our colleague ULYSSES S. GUYER, of the Second District of Kansas. According to our rank in service, this would have been the duty of my colleague the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], but he has accompanied the funeral train.

Mr. GUYER was the dean of the Kansas delegation. He served an unexpired term in the Sixty-eighth Congress, was not a candidate in the Sixty-ninth, but came here with the Seventieth, and has been a continuous Member since. The last few years he has served exclusively on the Judiciary Committee, of which at his passing he was the ranking minority member.

Mr. GUYER was born in Illinois, educated in the three States of Illinois, Iowa, and Kansas, attended the old historic Lane University at Lecompton, was principal and superintendent of the schools at St. John, Kans., in the late nineties, studied law following that and located in Kansas City, Kans., where over 30 years ago he was elected mayor. He failed to receive the congressional nomination in 1916 by 1 vote, and later succeeded Colonel Little, who defeated him at that time.

Mr. GUYER was a lover and a devout student of American history. He belonged to the old school, which we regret is not more prevalent today, in his emphasis on the historical and his eloquence in expressing it on many occasions.

One of the little sidelights of his versatile character was his great interest in the Christy picture of the signing of the Constitution. He went frequently where Mr. Christy was painting to watch the progress of the picture and always showed it to his visiting friends.

One of the most outstanding and enviable characteristics of our friend was his friendliness itself. He possessed a culture of friendliness that was beyond the average. His morning visits of a minute to his colleagues' offices were always welcome. He brought cheer, pleasantry and never stayed to interfere with one's work.

It is especially interesting that his written request is being carried out that he should be buried at St. John, Kans., the place which he left over 40 years ago. He had taken a wonderfully personal interest in every pupil who had been under his supervision in 5 years. He corresponded with many of them, and sent them little interesting things through all the years. He will be buried out there tomorrow among the boys and girls who were closest to his heart.

In the House Memorial Service April 21, in 1936, he spoke for the minority. These were his opening words:

> Veneration for the sepulcher and reverence for the dead belong to the most ancient instincts of the human race. To respect and to honor the memory and dust of our ancestors is common alike to the savage and the civilized. This inclination to consecrate the grave and to enshrine the memory of our departed ancestors may have been and doubtless was the beginning of the worship of Diety, for in that black night of prehistoric darkness the human soul reached out toward the only symbol of Diety it possessed—its earthly parental
> Thus today, both in harmony with the precedents of the House and the customs of mankind, we meet to honor those who have gone to that "undiscovered country" and who for a brief time were associated with us in this forum fashioned by our fathers in the Constitution. This day the discord of party passion divides us not. Individual interests and personal ambitions are forgotten. The battle for supremacy and the struggle for precedence sleep for the moment like those we mourn. All that is sordid, all that is ignoble in this game of politics retreats in silence from the presence of death.

There are no minority views in this committee's report. It is accepted by unanimous consent without debate. That report constitutes the epitaph of the seven strong men who are the objects of this memorial. Their work in this forum is finished. Their record is completed. Their roll calls have all been answered. Their speeches have all been uttered. Their offices have been vacated by the decree of fate. Soon others will occupy their places and the current of life will resume its accustomed course.

It is one of the inexplicable mysteries of life in which one surrenders his peace of mind, his tranquillity of soul and life under his own vine and fig tree for a disappointing, disillusioning ignis fatuus in the morass of public life. Yet, arduous as the duties are, we are loath to leave its unrivaled associations.

I think the expressions of my friend and yours are more interesting to recall now than anything that I might say myself. Mr. GUYER seemed to be at his best not only on that memorial occasion but also that same summer when they dedicated the beautiful new courthouse in Kansas City, Kans. I close, quoting him further on that occasion:

Who built this symbol? The pioneer who came in the yesterdays of turmoil and danger. The pioneer here on the edge of the Santa Fe and the Oregon Trails, the two most romantic trails that ever blazed the path of empire. They built it in the campfires where danger haunted their bivouac. They built it in the fields where disappointment mocked and gaunt famine stalked. They built it in the little red schoolhouse where the children loved their books.

Thousands who sleep beneath the sod of the soil they loved so well built it in the sweat of their brows and in the fiber of their brain. They and more built it. The workman in the factory on the river brink built it and made it sacred with his sweat and possible with his labor. They and more built it. The mothers at the hearthstone and at the cradle built it; built it in the fathomless blue of their babies' eyes. They and more built it. Generations yet unborn built it in the hopes of their fathers and mothers that are to be, for they, too, by and by, will help to pay for it. The past with its struggles built it. The present with its problems built it. The future with its hopes and fears built it, built it in love of country and mankind.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the death of our beloved colleague, Judge ULYSSES S. GUYER, brings universal regret and sorrow. For 20 years, he was a conspicuous and valued Member of this House, and during this long period of service, he commanded our respect and admiration.

He was a scholar, jurist, statesman, and public benefactor. He was an ardent advocate of many causes, like women's rights and prohibition, which stirred deep controversies and emotions. But he was ever the perfect, courteous gentleman, who recognized the sincerity of those who found themselves in opposition to his views.

Judge GUYER had a vast fund of knowledge of the history of our country. He was a close student of the great men and women, whose genius and sacrifice made possible this great Republic of ours.

He knew intimately the story of the building of the great West; the pushing back of the frontiers of our country. His story of Lincoln's trip through Kansas, a year before he made his Cooper Union speech in New York, was a fascinating revelation of a part of the life of Lincoln not generally known. He was an outstanding authority on the life of the Great Emancipator, as he was on many of our other great American men and women. It was always an intellectual treat to listen to his stories and recitals of the early days of our national life. He was an outstanding member of the legal profession and a sturdy supporter of the Constitution and the American way of life.

We suspend today our legislative battles, we lay aside our struggles that we may unite in doing honor to a great statesman and an outstanding public servant.

We join with his good wife in mourning the loss of this fine American statesman. With sadness we bid U. S. GUYER farewell. But our sorrow is somewhat eased by the knowledge that the worthy life he led will bring him happiness and contentment in the other world to which all of us must go eventually.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the death of our late friend and colleague, ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, leaves another gap in our ranks, taking from our midst one of our ablest, most experienced, and beloved Members. A man of character, of sincerity of thought and purpose, of devotion to duty, a gentleman at all times, his sweet, charming personality will be missed by all who knew him. During his years of service in this body he made many contributions to the progress of our country. He has left his favorable imprint upon the pages of time.

One of his greatest contributions as a legislator in this body was his service as the ranking minority member of the special committee of 1934 that investigated subversive activities, of which committee I was chairman. His contribution to the work of that committee and its legislative recommendations was an important factor in the success of the committee. Out of that committee's investigations came a bill compelling propagandists of a foreign government or foreign principals in this country to register. That bill has been termed the most important legislation of its type in the past 50 years. The country is indebted to Judge GUYER for the effective contributions he made in the drafting and passage of this important legislation.

This illustrates the constructive mind he possessed, and further that he exercised his mind in a constructive manner. It will take a long time for those who knew him to adjust themselves to his permanent journey into the Great Beyond. His death is a great loss to the Nation and to his State, both of which he loved intensely.

His passing is also a great loss to the people of his district that he represented so ably, as well as to those who served with him in this body.

In the irreparable loss that Mrs. Guyer has sustained, I know that all of the Members of the House join with me in expressing and extending to her our profound sympathy in her bereavement.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CARLSON].

Mr. CARLSON of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, in the death of ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER we have lost a true and real friend. He will be missed greatly in the House of Representatives, of which body he was a valued member for 16 years. I will especially miss the Judge, as he was commonly called by his friends. My office is located only a few doors from his and seldom did a day pass that he failed to stop in for a few minutes' visit. He was a good visitor and always did I find his conversations interesting and instructive. Although Illinois was his native State, most of his life had been spent in his adopted state of Kansas, which he loved with the utmost devotion, and which he watched and helped develop into the great State that it is today. He knew Kansas history as few men know it, and when my memory needed brushing up on early-day history of our State it was Judge GUYER with whom I consulted.

While he was a friend to all, he was especially kind and considerate of the new Members. Well I remember when I first came to Congress. I was acquainted with the functions of the State legislature but knew little of the procedure of Federal legislation. He seemed to take a great deal of satisfaction from taking me under his wing and helping to analyze the situation, and for his suggested courses of action and rounded advice I am deeply grateful. Through his many act of kindness he endeared himself to all.

A few days previous to his death I chanced to meet the young lady who has been in his employ for several years. In discussing the condition of his health, which we knew was precarious, she remarked, "The country cannot afford to lose men like Mr. GUYER." She knew him for his sterling qualities; how he had always been found fighting for the things that mean so much for the betterment of humanity. The morning following his death an employee of the House Office Building, not a secretary or a clerk in a congressional office, but an employee of the building, stopped me and said: "How I regretted to learn of the death of Mr. GUYER. I come to work at 7:30, and nearly every morning I would meet Mr. GUYER on the way to his office. He was never in too great a hurry to stop and exchange greetings with me. He was always the same friendly, lovable man, and I deeply regret his death." Everyone who met him felt the influence of his good will, of his great desire to render to each one the courtesy and recognition of his right as a member of society to which he was entitled.

In his early years Mr. GUYER was an educator, and in this field he was most successful. While following the teaching profession he took up the study of law and was admitted to the bar in Kansas City, Kans., in 1902. His sterling character and his firm stand on the right side of all moral issues won him the respect and confidence of his fellow citizens. This respect and confidence was displayed by the people of his home town in 1909 and again in 1910, when he was elected mayor of Kansas City, the largest city in Kansas.

Today I am glad I was privileged to enjoy his close friendship and confidence. This I cherish as a bright spot during my years of service in the House.

In his passing, not only the Second Congressional District of the State of Kansas, but the Congress and the country suffered a real loss.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WINTER].

Mr. WINTER. Mr. Speaker, it is difficult indeed for me to express my feelings here today and pay adequate tribute to the dearest friend that I had in the Congress of the United States, SAM GUYER. In 1938, when I was elected to Congress, in November, I did not know much about what I had been elected to. I had never had any legislative experience. A few mornings after the election was over I received a telephone call. On the other end of the line the voice said, "This is U. S. GUYER speaking from Kansas City. I am going down into the south part of my district tomorrow, and I would like to have you come and meet me. I have never had the privilege of meeting you." I knew Judge GUYER only by reputation as one of the leading citizens of Kansas and of the Nation. So I drove to his little town and listened to Judge GUYER make the first speech I ever heard him make. After he had finished he took me in his automobile and we drove out to the edge of the town. He parked the car and there explained to me some of the things that I would be faced with when I came to Washington, and offered me his help. He told me about the necessity of filing on an office, which I knew nothing about, and he told me about how to get supplies, and said that I should arrange for a place to live in Washington—that I probably would have trouble getting a good place to live. He told me that he was returning to Washington within a few days and would be glad to look after those details for me. When I arrived in Washington Judge GUYER had filed on an office for me and arranged for living quarters for me at the same hotel where he and Mrs. Guyer resided.

My acquaintance with Judge GUYER grew into a beautiful friendship, and his death to me is a great loss and the House of Representatives, no matter how long I serve, will never be the same. There never was an evening that I did not see Judge GUYER at the hotel. We sat and discussed many problems of interest to both of us and he gave me much timely advice. On several occasions when I was ill it was Judge GUYER who would come to my room and bring me the little things that make a person feel that someone cares about how you are progressing. Today words fail me to say anything about Judge GUYER, except that to me he was just like a father. He was a Christian gentleman—a truly Christian gentleman. He exemplified in his daily life those Christian virtues. We all know that. The lovable character that he possessed and his way of meeting his friends has endeared him to the hearts of every Member of this House.

I can say to Mrs. Guyer that she need have no fear about the voyage upon which her beloved husband has embarked. As I sat with him less than 3 weeks ago he told me that he knew the end might be near, but that he was prepared to meet it. He said to me then, "Young man, get yourself prepared to enter that which we call eternity and you will not worry about what the future will bring for you."

To my good friend, Judge GUYER, I can only say bon voyage.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as the House knows, Mr. GUYER was for a long time the ranking Republican on the Committee on the Judiciary of the House of Representatives. The relationship among the members of that committee is very close. We are friends; we develop a spirit of mutual respect for each other's views. There is practically no partisanship in that committee. I feel as close to the members on the Republican side as I do the members on the Democratic side. As chairman I discuss matters of public interest with them just as freely and receive the same sort of cooperation. This has been possible in no small degree because of the fine Americanism of our distinguished Member, whose recent going away has brought sadness to us all; a deep sense of individual, personal loss. Judge GUYER was a modest man. He had a correct conception of the size of man, the relative littleness of man in the great economy. Mr. GUYER had great respect for public opinion, but he was not one of those people in political life who was dependent for happiness upon popular applause and upon place and position for himself, but he measured succcess by the standard of usefulness in his day and generation. He never posed or pretended. He realized that we all are creatures here on this earth but for a moment; not so long as a second, measured by the sweep of the ages. Our comrade walked into the deepening shadows unashamed and unafraid. He could look into the eyes of his constituents and know that he had never betrayed them for their votes; never betrayed his country for his job. He seemed to realize that if when he walked in the silent places, he could have the companionship of a clear conscience, a realization that he had been true to his people, to his duty, to his country, that whether people stuck out their tongue at him or clapped little hands in applause made very little difference after all. He had a correct notion of the relative value of things.

We are going to miss Judge GUYER very much in our committee. Most of us are well acquainted with his wife; have great respect for her. Our deepest sympathy goes out to her. Judge GUYER delivered here a few years ago on Memorial Day an address which is one of the masterpieces of the English language. Permission having been granted, I present it to be printed as something which in substance I would say on this occasion if I could say it as well:

[Memorial exercises in the House of Representatives—Speech of Hon. U. S. GUYER in the House of Representatives, delivered April 21, 1936]

Mr. GUYER. Mr. Speaker:

"Leaves have their time to fall,
And flowers to wither at the north wind's breath
And stars to set, but all
Thou hast all seasons for thine own, O Death."

Veneration for the sepulcher and reverence for the dead belong to the most ancient instincts of the human race. To respect and to honor the memory and dust of our ancestors is common alike to the savage and the civilized. This inclination to consecrate the grave and to enshrine the memory of our departed ancestors may have been and doubtless was the beginning of the worship of Deity, for in that black night of prehistoric darkness the human soul reached out toward the only symbol of Deity it possessed—its earthly parentage.

Thus today, both in harmony with the precedents of the House and the customs of mankind, we meet to honor those who have gone to that "undiscovered country" and who for a brief time were associated with us in this forum fashioned by our fathers in the Constitution. This day the discord of party passion divides us not. Individual interests and personal ambitions are forgotten. The battle for supremacy and the struggle for precedence sleep for the moment like those we mourn. All that is sordid, all that is ignoble in this game of politics retreats in silence from the presence of death.

There are no minority views in this committee's report. It is accepted by unanimous consent without debate. That report constitutes the epitaph of the seven strong men who are the objects of this memorial. Their work in this forum is finished. Their record is completed. Their roll calls have all been answered. Their speeches have all been uttered. Their offices have been vacated by the decree of fate. Soon others will occupy their places and the current of life will resume its accustomed course.

It is one of the inexplicable mysteries of life in which one surrenders his peace of mind, his transquility of soul and life under his own vine and fig tree for a disappointing, disillusioning ignis fatuus in the morass of public life. Yet, arduous as the duties are, we are loathe to leave its unrivaled associations, and every Member may refer with pride to his membership in this forum of the people. The duties and growing exactions upon its Members increasingly draw upon their powers of endurance and resistance which constantly increases their mortality. I have been a Member of this House for 10 years under five Speakers, three of whom have gone to that undiscovered land where there is always a quorum present.

In my humble opinion, the presiding officer of this House holds in his credentials of election as Speaker the supreme testimonial of exalted character, unimpeachable integrity, and superlative ability. He is no accident. He must prove his fitness for this great office through a long series of years in the fierce furnace of political debate, the fisticuff of parliamentary strategy and maneuver, and by his ability to manage strong and intelligent men under the most trying and difficult circumstances. That, in my opinion, was what led the late Nicholas Longworth to twice declare upon this floor, "I would rather occupy that chair than any other office in the world."

While in the roster of public offices a Member of this House is not the most exalted, membership in the House holds the opportunity for the highest type of public service. The principal difference between the higher and lower offices is that the higher the more exacting and the more disappointing and disillusioning. Men speak of the Presidency as the greatest office in the world, and we do not dispute that estimate. But what a tragic and disappointing illusion.

With more or less familiarity I have known the last seven Presidents; knew each before his elevation to the high office, met each while serving his term, saw all of them after the expiration of their terms, except one, who escaped in the embrace of death, and every one of them withered under the devastating experience like the grass withered under the furnace breath of the drought of 1934. The Presidency saps the life like a vampire and like a vampire mocks.

I saw Woodrow Wilson stumble down into the valley and the shadow amid the wreck of his shattered dream of peace, disappointed, disillusioned and heartbroken beyond the dream of despair. I saw that world-famous smile of William Howard Taft, which they said would never wear off, fade forever among the things that were. Warren G. Harding, as Senator, might still be in the land of the living. We were all so sure that the cold, calculating, imperturbable equanimity, the impenetrable stoicism, of Calvin Coolidge would be proof against the lethal draught, but now we know that a happy decade or mayhap a tranquil score of years were shorn from his span of life. One of the seven by reason of his superlative strength and his indomitable will survived a decade in the generous hope of again sacrificing himself upon that alluring altar, but before his dream came true he expired like a steed plunging back into his burning barn. I saw Herbert Hoover, too sensitive for such an office, grow old while I looked at him.

There are living six widows of former Presidents and the wife of the only ex-President, eloquent tribute to the eternal feminine and tragic evidence of Presidential mortality. Let no one deceive himself into believing that the present incumbent, in spite of all his playful laughter and gallant front, is not corroding under the acid of this enervating ordeal. We sigh, "Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown," but no more uneasy than the head that is pillowed in that snowy palace at the other end of the Avenue. We speak of "the white light that beats upon a throne," but it is no whiter and not nearly so hot as that which flames about the Presidential chair. But this office confers immortality upon one's name, so scores of patriots surge to immolate themselves upon this alluring but fatal altar.

During the last holiday season I drove past that gleaming palace, with its noble portico aflame with a rainbow of Christmas lights, and I thought as I mused upon the somber shadows that lurked among its stately columns and hid in its classic corridors that we should write above those iron gates what is etched on the lintels of Dante's Inferno:

"Lasciate ogni speranza voi ch'entrate."

Shakespeare, in his tragedy of greatness, puts upon the lips of Marc Antony the naked truth concerning human greatness. Antonius was standing above the body of his assassinated friend and comrade, that "piece of bleeding earth," that pathetic clay that but yesterday was Julius Caesar, "whose word might have stood against the world." As he gazed upon this prostrate form he exclaimed:

"O mighty Caesar, dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure?"

Massillon, delivering the funeral oration of Louis XIV in the Cathedral of Notre Dame, exclaimed, "Dieu, seul, est grand"—God, alone, is great. Such is the tragedy of human grandeur. The old Romans had a lucid saying: "Sic transit gloria mundi"—so passes the glory of the world.

This service reminds us of the swift mutations of life. Nothing in life is permanent or static. Nature abhors both a vacuum and dull monotony. Life is a stream on whose bosom is etched everlasting change. The earth is full of life, music, beauty, and loveliness. But its beauty and loveliness do not last. It changes as swift as the wings of light:

"Beauty comes and beauty goes,
Like the petals of a rose.

Song is but a moment's bliss,
Fleeting as a lover's kiss.

Dawn's bright promise of a day,
Quickly crumbles in decay.

Spring is but an eerie, banshee light,
Vanishing in a burst of flight.

And in all this transiency,
Only God and hope remain to me."

The passing of these colleagues of ours brings into sharp relief not only the eternal change of all things but the mystery of death. Life, too, is quite as much a mystery. What is life with all its wondrous, mighty energies? Its definition and its source have escaped all our sages and philosophers. What is death? Only the poet can approach a definition. Nancy Byrd Turner has recently given her version and vision of death under the title, "Death Is a Door":

"Death is only an old door
Set in a garden wall.
On gentle hinges it gives, at dusk,
When the thrushes call.

"Along the lintel are green leaves,
Beyond, the light lies still;
Very weary and willing feet
Go over that sill.

"There is nothing to trouble any heart,
Nothing to hurt at all.
Death is only a quiet door
In an old wall."

But what a pitiable little span is human life. When viewed only from its troubled surface, what a strange and pathetic tragedy. Yesterday the warm, sweet current of life; today still in the chill of death. Yesterday the thrill and exhilaration of superiority and preeminence; today the democratic equality of the dust. Death, like love, "levels all rank." There is no caste in the dominion of the sepulcher. Death is the universal decree. The earth itself is but one vast mausoleum. We touch it not without desecrating a myriad sepulcher. The very rocks that wall us in are but the dusty archives of life that throbbed in dead and forgotten ages. All that lives must die.

"The hand of the king that the scepter hath borne,
The brow of the priest that the mitre hath worn,
The eye of the sage and the heart of the brave,
Are hidden and lost in the depth of the grave."

But it has been said that there is no life without death. That death is the prophecy of life.

"Plato, thou reasonest well!
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
The longing after immortality."

Bryant teaches us a beautiful lesson relative to the migratory bird:

"There is a Power whose care
Teaches thy way along that pathless coast—
The desert and illimitable air—
Lone wandering, but not lost.

* * * * *

"He who from zone to zone,
Guides through the boundless sky thy certain flight,
In the long way that I shall tread alone,
Will guide my feet aright."

The bird that sunward guides its flight does not know that eternal summer laughs beneath the tropic sun. He has never seen the leaves that never fade nor felt the heat that never cools. His native home was where Arctic ice drove summer from the earth he knew. But in his little fluttering heart the Almighty had planted this cosmic urge to seek a land of everlasting summer; and when the bird arrives, there the summer is. Neither Nature nor Nature's God ever deceived their children.

I used to have a friend who was a great lawyer and a greater poet and philosopher, though he wrote all of his poetry in the form of prose. In an essay discussing the conservation of energy and the well-known fact that always and everywhere in Nature nonextinction is her most imperious command; that matter and energy were indestructible and eternal. He tells it so much better than anyone else ever did, so I will quote briefly:

"Each meanest mote of matters' dust doth hide a king, divinity doth hedge. He may his venture's fashion change, or may put on the Gyges ring: he ne'er shall abdicate.

"Though worlds may crash and matter wreck, or seethe in flame with fervent heat, and seeming chaos come again, without a tremor, still enthroned, his royal plumage all unscathed, his power nor jot nor tittle 'bates.

"When comes the time, and come it shall, when seemingly this solid earth, yon flaming sun, and all that his wide eye beholds, in sheer vacuity dissolves * * * his crown serene he still shall wear, shall still his royal scepter wield."

If this mote of matter, Judge Keplinger's humble but regal grain of dust, shall survive the wreck of worlds, what shall we say of mind and soul and energy? Mind and energy are eternal. I am mind, I am energy! I am immortal!

I know of no better manner of concluding this faltering memorial to those of our number who have gone to the land of their dreams than by quoting a little poem by the great dramatic critic, William Winter. About a quarter of a century ago Mr. Winter was very ill and close to the gates of eternity. He recovered, however, and afterward wrote this poem, and, in my humble opinion, no sweeter honey of its kind has dripped from the hive of genius since Tennyson wrote The Crossing of the Bar. In the gentle faith of Him who walked by the tideless sea and in the calm philosophy of William Winter, as expressed in this poem, we can look toward the sunset trail with confidence and hope:

"One other bitter drop to drink,
And then—no more!
One little pause upon the brink,
And then—go o'er!
One sigh—and then the lib'rant morn
Of perfect day.
When my free spirit, newly born,
Shall soar away.

"One pang—and I shall rend the thrall
Where grief abides,
And generous Death shall show me all
That now he hides;
And, lucid in that second birth,
I shall discern,
What all the sages of the earth
Have died to learn.

"One motion and the stream is crost,
So dark, so deep!
And I shall triumph, or be lost,
In endless sleep.
Then onward whatsoe'er my fate,
I shall not care!
Nor sin nor sorrow, love nor hate
Can touch me there."

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HANCOCK].

Mr. HANCOCK. Mr. Speaker, the sad news of the death of our beloved colleague, U. S. GUYER, brings to me a deep sense of personal loss as it does to all of you who were closely associated with him.

Judge GUYER first came to Congress to fill an unexpired term in the Sixty-eighth Congress. He returned in the Seventieth Congress to serve his district and his country for the rest of his life. I was also a Member of the Seventieth Congress. We were sworn in together in December 1927. For the past 10 or 12 years I have sat beside him on the Committee on the Judiciary. I feel that I knew him well, and I was proud to call him my friend.

He was deeply religious, intensely patriotic, a close student of history, a gifted speaker, an able and conscientious legislator and lawyer, a cultured Christian gentleman. He set high standards of rectitude for himself from which he never deviated, and yet he gazed upon his fellow men with kindly, tolerant, and friendly eyes. He was a delightful and stimulating companion. I shall miss him. It saddens me today to realize that we shall never see him again.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER].

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of intense sorrow that I speak, yet I had the high privilege of serving in this Chamber with U. S. GUYER for many years, and during that period I learned to respect and honor him. We worked together for long duration on the Committee on the Judiciary. His wise counsels, his opinions, ever the result of careful thought and impartial research, are indeed written indelibly in the archives of that committee. I was always impressed with his quiet demeanor, his whole-hearted sympathy with those oppressed and underprivileged souls. His kindliness, his broad-gaged charity, his untiring devotion, his courage made him one of our most beloved Members. He was an indefatigable worker, an ardent defender of any cause he espoused; indeed, the Nation and the State of Kansas loses a humble scholar and an effective servant. We in this Chamber lose an honorable and kindly colleague. Our words and resolution of sorrow and condolence go forth to his loving wife and loved ones. With Alfred Tennyson we may well say: "God's finger touched him and he sleeps."

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, the tributes already paid have pretty accurately portrayed the life, the character, and the standing of Judge GUYER here in the House.

Mr. Speaker, when the Death Angel rapped at our door on Saturday last it summoned one of our older and most distinguished colleagues, the late Representative ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER, of Kansas.

Judge GUYER came to Congress in 1924. It was then that I became acquainted with him. He was an exceptional man in many particulars. As a school teacher, a businessman, a lawyer, a mayor, and a judge, he came to Congress with a wealth of experience in dealing with the public. He was an idealist. A man of strong convictions, he never temporized with that which he thought was not morally and fundamentally right.

For many years before the advent of national prohibition he was an indefatigable worker for the dry cause. His work in this field was of national scope, and few were more jubilant than was Judge GUYER when the eighteenth amendment became a part of the Constitution.

On the occasion of the memorial services held for the late Senator Sheppard, of Texas, the author of the eighteenth amendment, Mr. GUYER said:

It was not difficult for one to go along with the crowd when I first came to the House in 1924, when the so-called wets could not muster enough votes to successfully demand a roll call. Then it was easy to ride along with the tide of public opinion, which favored the eighteenth amendment by a great majority. But the time came when it was the reverse, when it was impossible for the drys to muster enough votes to order a roll call. But this only aroused Senator Sheppard to renewed faith and activity, which he directed toward convincing the people that a repeal was a tragic mistake.

In this reference to Senator Sheppard Mr. GUYER was speaking his own mind, and he never changed his views or lessened his endeavors in behalf of a cause in which he so thoroughly believed. There was no camouflage or equivocation on his part. He kept the faith that was in him. He died working for the same objective.

For many years preceding its acceptance, he was an advocate of the woman's suffrage amendment to the Constitution, and in late years he has enthusiastically supported the so-called equal-rights amendment for women.

While he was adamant in these matters, yet he was always considerate and tolerant. He respected the conscientious views of others at all times, and only asked like consideration for himself.

Judge GUYER was an orator of no mean ability. He possessed a splendid vocabulary and a clear, analytical mind. His manner of public address was not spoiled by the modern microphone. He was always enlightening, entertaining, and pleasing. A reader of good literature, a student of history and biography, he was a ready conversationalist. He possessed so many of the attributes most valuable in public life and, consequently, was effective. In the passing of this conscientious, courteous, and cultured gentleman, the State of Kansas and the Nation has lost one of its worth while public servants. This is a better world because Judge GUYER lived in it.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, with bowed heads, moist eyes, and throats constricted, your Committee on the Judiciary comes before you today unanimously but sadly to participate in this tribute to our beloved late colleague. The gentleman from Texas, Judge SUMNERS, has already spoken of the affectionate regard we have in that committee, and have always had, toward each other on both sides of the political fence. That was particularly true, it seemed to me, with respect to this great man. We all knew his name, but to many of us, particularly in the younger ranges, it seemed that his initials were typical of the man and that here, indeed, was a real American in whom there was no guile, a cause partisan in whom there was no bitterness, and a political foeman worthy anyone's steel, who never sought an unfair advantage, whose kindliness did not forsake him when he went out of the committee room, where politics is barred, and into the forum where political fights were raging.

"U. S." were his initials, U. S. was the man. He was a citizen and Representative of the United States. Although no Representative could have represented his district and his State more loyally, he was too big to be claimed exclusively by any district, State, or section.

As we look at his figure going into the shadows there is one outstanding contribution of this great and beloved man to our faith: that men like Judge GUYER never die; that as he goes on and up to the high calling, which he recognized, we can be assured that the accumulated knowledge his studies and rich experiences brought him through the years is not lost, but will prove a basis for the life and the activities to which he has gone; and the truth we heard so beautifully sung here the other day by the Metropolitan Opera star, Miss Doris Doe, There Is No Death.

We saw him live it, we heard her sing it; we knew it to be true.

And so today, without cant or preachment, this memorial service means that to me, as he looks back over his shoulder and says to us his friends—and there was no enemy here—"Come on, boys, get ready for the better life." We note the ring of truth in the conviction which sounds through his voice in that message to us. There is a chance for us so to live here that the open grave will be stood on end and become but a door to a life of greater usefulness and joyful activity. There should be great incentive in that challenge. It seems to me a grand heritage he has left us. We mourn his passing, but it is not goodby, merely au revoir.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I rise to join with other Members of the House in paying a last tribute of respect to our departed friend and colleague, Hon. ULYSSES S. GUYER. While the death of Judge GUYER had been expected for some time, yet the announcement of his passing came as a heavy shock to all of us.

It seems but yesterday we paused in our busy deliberations to mourn the death of another outstanding Member of our body and a distinguished Republican leader, the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLEBRIGHT].

The constant passing of our friends impresses upon us the fact that each and every one of us must meet this greatest adventure of all—the passing from this earthly sphere to the great unknown—Eternity. Longfellow expresses the thought most beautifully in the words

There is a Reaper whose name is Death,
And with his sickle keen,
He reaps the bearded grain at a breath,
And the flowers that grow between.

Neither youth nor age, poverty nor riches, the humble nor the great, the weak nor the strong, the wicked nor the good, can escape this reaper with his sickle. Yet, with this certainty, death of each one of our loved ones and friends brings shock and grief to us.

It has been said that our friend and colleague, Judge GUYER, met death without fear and as a man who was about to receive his greatest reward for a beautiful, splendid, and useful life. His was a full life as an educator, jurist, lawyer, and for nearly 20 years as a Member of Congress.

As an educator he shaped the lives of thousands of young people; as a jurist he was able and honest, and as a Member of Congress he served his constituency, his State, and his country and our institutions with fidelity and patriotic zeal.

The House of Representatives today honors itself in laying aside its official activities and in paying honor to one of God's noblemen. He was the ranking Republican on our Judiciary Committee and I sat near him. I have been closely associated with him for many years in the House and there is no Member of the House for whom I felt a greater affection or whom I held in higher esteem.

Death is one sorrow from which we refuse to be divorced. While mere words are almost futile on occasions like this, however, I find much consolation, as do, I am sure, the members of his family and his friends that Judge GUYER lived a long and honorable life. He won and held the respect and esteem of all those who had the good fortune to know him. He was one of those men who knew himself. He controlled himself and best of all he denied himself and took up his cross and followed in the footsteps of the Man of Galilee. His was a life of service to his family, his constituency, his State, and his country. I have greatly admired him through the years for his high and noble purposes and his lofty patriotism. He loved his country passionately, and he was ever ready to defend our institutions and American ideals. The Congress and the Nation have lost a great American and we this day mingle our tears with his family and his other friends.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT—

Break, break, break,
On thy cold gray stones, O sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.
O, well for the fisherman's boy,
That he shouts with his sister at play!
O, well for the sailor lad,
That sings in his boat on the bay!
And the stately ships go on,
To their haven under the hill;
But O for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that is still!

Mr. Speaker, while we all daily expected the death of our late and lamented colleague the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. U. S. GUYER, we were naturally grieved to hear of his passing. It only goes to show that after all there is nothing in life which men will cling to, and fight so tenaciously for, as life itself. However aged or infirm, and regardless of how much they may be suffering, we are never quite ready to give up those who are near and dear to us.

One of the first men I met and became personally and intimately acquainted with after my election to the Seventy-first Congress nearly 15 years ago was ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER from the State of Kansas. I suppose it was only natural that I should meet him because several years previous to that my father who was postmaster of my little home town had attended a postmasters' meeting in Kansas City. He returned and told me in glowing terms of the beautiful, masterly address he had heard by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GUYER] and having graduated myself from Baker University, which is located in his congressional district, it was natural that I knew many of his constituents. Often when I have spoken in Kansas City those constituents have done me the honor and extended the courtesy of attending those meetings. So, because of mutual friends we had on both sides of the line in Kansas and Missouri, there grew up between us a warm and abiding friendship. Time was, Mr. Speaker, when the boys in Missouri and Kansas did not get along quite so well together. Well did Mr. GUYER recall when Quantrell and his gang from my State raided Lawrence and burned the hotel. But all of that bitterness and discord back in the time of the War between the States and immediately following, has vanished. Behold how sweet it is for brethren to dwell in brotherly love.

U. S. GUYER, Mr. Speaker, was a sort of grand, picturesque figure. He belonged to the old school. While he was not blind to the march of progress and not unwilling to keep step with the times, he was fundamentally conservative. He was grounded in the history and past traditions of our American Republic. He believed in the Declaration of Independence and revered the Constitution almost as much as he did his Bible. He read the Farewell Address of George Washington, the Father of our Country, almost as assiduously as he read the Holy Writ. He stood for the Bill of Rights, and I know that the anxiety and the worry that he has entertained in recent years at the trend away from representative, constitutional democracy toward centralized powerful bureaucracy did not prolong his life.

Mr. GUYER was a great orator. I think it is unfortunate that the new Members of this Congress, even those who served in the last Congress, never knew him. Oh, you have seen him often, but you did not know him as did the older Members of this House. I wish that you might have seen him in his heyday along with the elderly Members of this body, when torrential eloquence poured from his stentorian throat with Niagara force, sentences that sparkled with the brilliance of diamonds, phrases that rolled like peals of thunder, charming and convincing his auditors whether they be in this House or on the public platform.

U. S. GUYER was a man of a deeply religious nature, entertaining strong moral convictions to which he adamantly adhered; yet he was full of the milk of human kindness and had enough hard common sense to know that no pancake is ever so flat but that it does not have two sides. Always he was willing to look at both sides of any great burning public issue.

We can ill afford to lose men of his character and caliber in such times as these. Oh, how I wish I might say something to assuage the sorrow or lessen the grief of his dearly beloved wife, who was truly a great helpmate, a charming woman who has the same kind of religious convictions and the same burning patriotism in her breast as did her husband. But she will discover, Mr. Speaker, that time perhaps is the only thing that can partially heal such deep and sore wounds as she has at this hour. When my heart is overwhelmed I look up unto the Rock that is higher than I. And it must be a source of great comfort, solace, and strength to Mrs. Guyer in this dark hour of her irreparable loss to look up unto that Rock that is higher than she and who, because she has the same kind of religious convictions her husband had, will find a strength and a support in the everlasting arms of a benign and beneficent Providence, a source of strength that comes from Someone greater than any human mortal.

We all extend to her our deep, heartfelt, and sincere sympathy, and we, along with her, shall cherish until our final summons the precious and tender memories, the glories of combat, triumph, and defeat which we have experienced during the past score of years in this body with one of the finest Christian gentlemen and greatest Americans that it has ever been our privilege to know.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with the Kansas delegation in giving my tribute to the late and lamented ULYSSES S. GUYER, now deceased. On Saturday morning, when I learned of the death of our distinguished friend and colleague, I was both shocked and grieved, because I had been associated closely with him since I came as a Member of this body at the commencement of the Seventy-sixth Congress. Judge GUYER, as we affectionately called him, was one of the men I first met when I came; from the hour of our meeting until he was taken away from us, our friendship had ripened and continued. I came to recognize in him those admirable traits of character which directly appeal to all of us—those of a fine citizen, an outstanding patriot, a great statesman, a devoted and constant American, and a loyal friend.

Many of us in this great lawmaking body are not thrown together in extremely close association, because of our segregated committee work and because of our extremely busy days in intricate legislative problems with which we have to deal. But it was my rare good fortune to have been closely associated with our colleague on the Judiciary Committee, in the House of Representatives. Judge GUYER was the ranking minority member of that great committee, of which I have had the honor to be a member during my service here. Thus, our association became close and constant. His parents when they migrated westward had resided near Sulphur Springs, in Henry County, Ind., for a period of time, which place of their residence is located in the congressional district which I have the honor to represent. By reason of that fact, Judge GUYER would frequently discuss with me some of the older inhabitants in that vicinity, many of whom he knew by personal contact during visits he had made to the vicinity of the family residence in Indiana.

Judge GUYER loved his home State of Kansas. He was a part of the very fiber and sinew of that great Commonwealth. He held positions of great responsibility and public trust in his home State and as mayor of Kansas City, Kans., he demonstrated outstanding executive ability. His long service in this body stamped him as an outstanding legislator and statesman.

In early life he faced many struggles, but by reason of energy, honesty, loyalty to his people and his country, and unwavering fidelity he ascended the ladder of fame to a fixed place in the hearts of the people of this Nation. His counsel and advice was often sought by the Members of this body and especially by the younger Congressmen, and it was a rare privilege for him to aid and assist those who were less informed. He was truly the friend of man.

When our country became involved in this terrible war, Judge GUYER was greatly distressed. He frequently discussed with others the great hardships and suffering of our soldiers and sailors in this gigantic crisis; he was saddened by it; he expressed the hope that peace would soon come to our Nation. Thus we knew him—our esteemed friend—when he was under the stress of grave responsibilities, when our country was engaged at war, and we knew him when the veil was removed and those finer intimacies which are forever reserved by each one of us for but a few were then exposed; and we knew him when he expressed sound logic and statesmanlike utterances in his constant effort to solve the pending problems of the day. He loved his country. He was both kindly and he was brave.

Our loyal friend, our constant friend, whose memory I will long cherish, lived a good life. He ever struggled onward and forward with the constant weight of the livid problems of the people before him. He continued at his post serving his people as long as health would permit. His last appearance in this Chamber came when he was scarcely able to come; yet, as ever, he responded to his duty as a servant of the people he represented. The summons came for his departure while he was in this city. He was unafraid. While within the shadow of the scene of his constant effort for his country throughout the many years of his service here, he "calmly wrapped the draperies of his couch about him and lay down to pleasant dreams."

Thus, Mr. Speaker, the life work of our friend was ended. The brilliant career of a brilliant man was over.

As we say to him, "Farewell," I wish to pay my humble, yet sincere, tribute to him—my friend—in the unforgotten words which were spoken of a hero in the years gone by—

His life was gentle, and the elements
So mix'd in him that Nature might stand up
And say to all the World, "This was a man!"

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, there are none of us who have friends to spare, but when death stalked into this Chamber and took away ULYSSES S. GUYER a loss was inflicted upon me that I can ill afford. Judge GUYER to me was eminent in all things. In his life there were mixed in right proportions all the virtues that go to the making of a man. His high talents were never soiled by ignoble use.

As a Member of this body who knew him long, intimately and well, and as one who loved him devotedly, I join with the thousands who bemoan his passing.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Speaker, it is true that today the spoken word will show the deep and sincere affection with which Judge GUYER is held in the hearts of his colleagues of the Congress. The written record cannot show the timbre of sincerity and sadness of the voices of those who have spoken of our beloved friend.

It was my privilege to serve during the Seventy-seventh Congress with Judge GUYER upon the House Judiciary Committee. The distinguished chairman of that committee, Judge SUMNERS, has expressed the thought that sometimes our sense of values is disproportionate—that sometimes we have a false sense of values. It is a most affectionate recollection to have known Judge GUYER not only on the committee but on occasions that I met and had early breakfast with him. He had a great fund of anecdotes and history of the Midwest—not only historical as to Iowa and Kansas and Indiana and of other States, but of individual characters of those States—and often my day began with the inspiration of hearing Judge GUYER tell at the breakfast table some of his early personal recollections of people and events that made history in the Midwest. He was in himself a historian and it will be regretted if Judge GUYER did not leave some written memoirs, which would be of great historical value.

Judge GUYER is a lesson in himself to all of us in public life. When we get down to the end of things the personal esteem and affection in which we are held by those with whom we serve is perhaps the finest tribute that can come to men.

ULYSSES SAMUEL GUYER never asked how many were on his side of a cause; if he believed in a cause he was the advocate and champion of that cause. He was a devout Christian. His advocacy and his religion were always tempered with tolerance, and his associates knew his kind and generous nature. It is a tribute to the members of the legal profession and of the Judiciary Committee that while they may be as individuals engaged in the conflict of a cause, whether it be in the courts or in legislation, that they bear no animosity in the conflict and clash of debate, whether it be upon the law or upon proposed legislation.

Norse mythology has given us the Halls of Valhalla; that to these halls were summoned the warriors who had died in battle, and that every morning thereafter poured from its 540 gates these spirit warriors who continued to fight the battles in which they died. And so it is with the causes that Judge GUYER represented, for from Valhalla his warrior spirit will ever continue by the influences which he made in his lifetime.

I join with you who have spoken and who will speak in extending my most heartfelt sympathy to Mrs. Guyer in the loss which she has sustained. She will be in some measure comforted in knowing how much we appreciated in his lifetime the distinguished, splendid, Christian gentleman, U. S. GUYER.

The Second District of Kansas and the Congress will share with her the sadness of his passing.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON].

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, the Old Testament stresses the God of Wrath. The New Testament stresses the God of Love. There was no greater interpreter of the new dispensation than the Apostle Paul. Nothing he has sent down to us through the ages has done me personally more good than the description he gave of the kind of sounding brass and tinkling cymbal an eloquent tongue was which spoke from a heart in which there was no charity.

Mr. GUYER was one of the first of the old Members I met when I came here some 10 years ago. He was friendly with new Members because he was friendly with everyone. In all the time I served here with him, I never heard him say an unkind word against anyone.

After I came to know him better, he often reminded me of an old friend I knew in Richmond, Dr. J. T. Mastin. When I was elected to the State senate in 1915, State-wide prohibition was the burning political issue in Virginia. Dr. Mastin was chairman of our State board of charities and corrections, doing the work later assumed by what we call the State welfare board. Dr. Mastin was for State-wide prohibition. In February 1916 we had before the State senate a bill to raise Dr. Mastin's salary from the munificent sum of $2,400 a year to $3,000 a year, which was in that day and time a major increase and precipitated a lively debate. Naturally, because feeling over the prohibition issue had run so high, I expected to see considerable criticism on the floor of the State senate over the proposal of our senate finance committee to increase the salary of Dr. Mastin. Much to my surprise, the leader of the wet forces in the senate, possibly the most eloquent man in that body, Col. Tom Downing, of Lancaster, Va., arose in support of the increase in the pay of Dr. Mastin and in the course of his remarks said to us, "Dr. Mastin is so charitable you would not know he is a Christian."

Some who have led reform movements have proceeded, I fear, on the theory of the Old Testament, the God of Wrath, the theory of compulsion, the theory of force; but not our departed friend. He proceeded on the theory of love, on the theory of persuasion.

I will miss Mr. GUYER. The House will miss Mr. GUYER. The House is better by reason of his 18 years' of service here, because, "careless of monument by the grave, he built it in the world; a monument by which men might be taught to remember not where he died but where he lived."

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], in his remarks very properly included a tribute to the beautiful character of the bereaved widow. Within a day or two after I came to join this body, Mr. GUYER came over and sat down beside me, introduced himself, and explained that Mrs. Guyer was a native of South Dakota and he took a great deal of interest in any Member who came from that State.

We visited there a little that day, and I shall never forget a remark he made to me at that time. Someone was speaking from the well of the House and delivering himself at some length and with a great deal of energy. Mr. GUYER said to me, "CASE, when your time comes to speak here, do not take yourself too seriously. Some of the speeches you will think are the best speeches you have made, perhaps those you work the hardest on, will not be appreciated as you think they should. Above all, do not talk too long. You must remember that nearly every person who becomes a Member of this body has to make some speeches to get here, and a lot of the fellows are going to be sitting back thinking how much better a job of making that speech they could do than you."

I have thought of that a great many times, and have profited by the advice. As to Judge GUYER himself, however, I have thought of it somewhat in reverse, because there were few men who spoke to this body who had such oratorical force as ULYSSES S. GUYER when he was in the full strength of his powers.

He was a man who did take an interest in new Members, as so many Members have said. And we have always been appreciative of the special interest which he and Mrs. Guyer took in the Members from South Dakota because of her early residence there.

I think probably one can find in his own remarks the best epitaph of his work. In an address which Mr. GUYER gave on the service of Members of the House at one time, he spoke of the high purposes and the great aims with which most Members come to this body and how they devote themselves to their accomplishment. In that address there ran a passage like this: "We come here with high hopes, we do what we can about these things, and then one day we find we have grown old in the effort."

The phrase "We grow old in the effort" has come to me as I have thought of Mr. GUYER in the last few weeks, because he was a man who came here with high purposes, who fought the good fight for the causes in which he believed, and who grew old in the service of his country. Of no man could it better be said, I think, that he could come to the end of his days, hear the summons to join the innumerable caravan, and, sustained by an unfaltering trust, wrap the draperies of his couch about him, and lie down to pleasant dreams.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I am a comparatively new Member of the House, yet I, too, held Congressman GUYER as one of my best friends in this Chamber. I am not a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, so I cannot speak of my association with him from that standpoint.

To indicate my high regard for him I was about to characterize him as a scholar and a gentleman, but that would be inadequate, so I want to revise that and characterize our departed friend as a profound scholar and a Christian gentleman.

I have listened carefully to the eulogies pronounced today by my colleagues. I notice that they paid tributes to him as a jurist, an outstanding lawyer, a statesman with a wonderful background of experience. One Member spoke of his power of oratory by saying he was an orator of no mean ability, which I thought was an understatement, for I always looked upon him as a brilliant orator.

Reference has been made to some of his speeches here in the Chamber, especially on memorial programs. One address of his which is outstanding in my mind is the oration that I heard in the Rotunda at the time of the unveiling of the famous painting by Howard Chandler Christy. It is one of the most scholarly efforts I have ever heard, and one which I have reread with interest and profit.

Congressman GUYER told me that at one time he had been a school teacher, and that was an open door to my heart. I know that he was deeply interested in the right kind of education. Because he was so devoted to basic American life, he attempted, for educational purposes, to get copies made of this famous painting here at the Capitol, the signing of the Constitution of the United States in Old Independence Hall, September 17, 1787, to be widely furnished to schools. He wanted the boys and girls of America to know that famous group of men who established our supreme law, and I have concurred with him and helped a little bit in that effort.

Sometimes I feel that the outside world is prone to think of Members of this Chamber as men who are engrossed wholly in politics, so that they do not think of spiritual things. That is not true, and when I have attempted to refute it in the public mind I have often pointed to Congressman GUYER of Kansas. It has been said here that he was a champion of causes arousing great controversy, and he stood adamant for what he thought was right without fear or favor. Regardless of politics, I say to Christian America that it has never had a finer representation in this Chamber than that of our departed colleague, the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. GUYER.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. VOORHIS].

Mr. VOORHIS of California. Mr. Speaker, a number of reasons prompt me to say a word today in honor of our late colleague. The first one is that some 42 years ago I was born in a small city in the district which Congressman GUYER represented while he was in Congress. I knew many people that he knew. We used to discuss them, some of those people were still in Kansas, and some had gone from Kansas to the district I now represent in California. I remember the last conversation I had with him was about a very fine woman who had recently passed away in Pomona, Calif. She had come there from eastern Kansas. I remember Judge GUYER said on that occasion how little any of us ever know when our time will come and when we, too, will be called.

Another reason I wanted to pay my tribute was because on one occasion I had the honor of speaking from the same platform in one of the churches in Washington, D. C., with Judge GUYER, one of the happiest memories I have of my experience here in Washington. I, too, like Judge GUYER and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK], have spent a considerable portion of my life as a school teacher, and we recognize certain things in one another and are able to sympathize and understand each other. Finally, it can be truly said of Judge GUYER that "he has run a good race, he has finished his course, he has kept the faith." It becomes our simple duty not only to pay tribute to his memory in words here today, but to attempt to carry on our work in a manner worthy of the tradition which he so nobly advanced while he was here.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. WHITE].

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, as a Member of the Board of Directors of the Corporation, the United States of America, I know we have lost a most valuable Member of this Board, the Congress of the United States, a Member whose wise counsel and devotion to American ideals and the welfare of our country was an inspiration to the membership of this body.

In the passing of Congressman GUYER the people of Kansas have lost a great advocate, and our country has lost a noble citizen, and I have lost a valuable friend.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GWYNNE].

Mr. GWYNNE. Mr. Speaker, the death of Judge ULYSSES S. GUYER has saddened all of us.

For several years it has been my privilege to serve on the Committee on the Judiciary, of which Mr. GUYER was the ranking minority member. He filled that post with dignity and honor. He possessed a great knowledge of the history of our country. He was a deep student of politics in its broad sense and was one of the ablest and most sincere defenders of the philosophy of government set forth in the American Constitution. In all his work in Congress he kept foremost his duty to his Nation, his State, and his district.

Many of us will always remember him as a true and helpful friend. Judge GUYER was one of the first men I met when I came to Congress. As a young man he lived in Toledo, Iowa, and many people in Iowa knew him and are proud of his splendid record. In the troubled times that lie ahead his counsel will be greatly missed.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this solemn occasion to pay my humble tribute to a great American and my warm personal friend, Congressman U. S. GUYER, of Kansas. His passing is a personal loss to me. I am saddened and depressed.

At the beginning of my service in Congress, more than 10 years ago, Congressman GUYER was among the first Members with whom I became acquainted. His office and mine were almost opposite on the same corridor in the Old House Office Building. He called on and conferred with me more than any other Member in Congress. He was not only my colleague and friend but my neighbor in the fullest sense and meaning of that word. I admired and respected him greatly. His courageous convictions and steadfastness on issues for the moment not mandated by popular approval marked him as a man of principle and resolute purpose.

His rectitude in all things, his sterling character, his noble attributes, his generous impulses, his unyielding adherence to what he believed to be right, his sobriety and clean habits of living marked him as an outstanding man.

He was endowed with rare ability. He was truly a great orator. He possessed a remarkable memory and never wearied those who listened to his historic narratives and information. He stood like a giant among men. He was kindly and considerate, hard working, careful and conscientious in his legislative duties. He searched for the truth. He was a fearless defender of the American form of government and our American way of life under it. To him can be ascribed the phrase that "an honest man is the noblest work of God."

Congressman GUYER was such a man. He was a firm believer in and was sustained by an unfaltering faith in God. He was a Christian gentleman.

His State and Nation were made better by his life and deeds. He has answered the last roll call and joined another company where there is no middle aisle. Farewell, faithful and intelligent servant of the Republic.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the first Member of Congress I met on coming to Washington, D. C., was Judge U. S. GUYER, of Kansas. Over a period of 2½ years we became well acquainted. For several months we lived at the same hotel. We discussed many legal questions in which, lawyer-like, we had a common interest. It has been said that Judge GUYER was not only an able jurist but a historian. I know that to be true. Our congressional districts adjoin for more than 100 miles along the Missouri-Kansas border. I have often heard Judge GUYER refer to the bloody but historic warfare which at one time raged along that famous border. That warfare gave rise to bitter feelings which exist to this day, and which influence the political currents of Missouri and Kansas. Congressman GUYER, or Judge as his friends prefer to call him, knew all the details of that tragic era of history.

Judge U. S. GUYER was a kindly man. He was a good, moral man. He was a man of keen mind and stanch faith. His passing is to me a personal loss. It will be difficult for the good people of Kansas to find a man to represent the Second Kansas District with the luster shown by Judge GUYER in his long and useful service to State and Nation. All honor to his memory.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, Mr. U. S. GUYER, from the the neighboring State of Kansas, was one of the first men to greet me and try to make me welcome when I came into the House of Representatives, a stranger. He tried to make me feel at home in this great deliberative body. In order to make a personal contact, he recalled that he had a niece living in the little town of Paonia, Colo., in which I reside. I had known her for many years and also her family, including Mr. GUYER's sister. Thereafter, if he passed anywhere near my seat, he would stop and ask if I had had any recent word from his niece or her family back in the western part of Colorado.

I did not know Mr. GUYER during the days of his greatest activity in this body, but I did have the privilege of knowing the sympathetic, thoughtful, kind man who treated me more as a son or nephew than as a new Member coming into a strange surrounding. All my life I shall recall the cordial greeting and the friendly visits and the occasional advice that he gave me on matters that affected the mutual interests of his State and mine.

May there be many more men with that same understanding, the same courteous manner, the same thoughtful and friendly interest in people and in this great country of ours.

Mr. REED of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the death of our colleague, ULYSSES S. GUYER, was a sad blow to his friends and a great loss to his country. His lingering illness filled us with apprehension and prepared our minds in some measure to expect the announcement of the end, but the tenacity with which he clung to life, the determination with which he fought the ravages of disease, and the cheerfulness with which he faced each new complication gave many of us hope and even belief that he would surmount all obstacles and emerge victorious in his battle for physical existence.

His high sense of duty persuaded him a few weeks ago to arise from his sickbed and attend a session of the House of Representatives in order to cast his vote on the pending tax bill. He had, however, miscalculated his strength and the effort exhausted him. He departed soon after the roll call, never to return.

Congressman GUYER was born in Illinois. His parents shortly thereafter moved to Iowa and thence to Kansas, where he attained his academic, classical, and legal education. His rise was rapid. He became successively an educator, a lawyer, a judge, a mayor, and a Member of Congress. Assigned to the Committee on the Judiciary, he devoted his major energies to the legal problems that that committee considers. He was firm in his convictions, which he reached only after careful investigation. There was nothing hypocritical in his make-up. He did not profess one thing and do another. He detested demagoguery. It was readily discernible that, as a practicing lawyer, he had not been one who would represent a client in the justice of whose cause he had no confidence. His uniform courtesy was notable. Never, in committee, in all the discussions in which he took part, did a word escape his lips that bore the sting of bitterness nor was he ever guilty of insinuations against or aspersions upon the motives of those who opposed him. Thus he was always sure of a respectful hearing, no matter what might be his attitude upon any question at issue. He revered the Constitution and the orderly processes of the law, to which he had dedicated his life. But he never forgot his earlier struggles in life and the people who were his friends and associates before he had entered upon his chosen profession.

Six years ago he gave me a copy of a letter of greeting that he had just sent to those who had been students in the high school when he was principal—40 years before. To them he expressed his philosophy of life in these beautiful words:

Oh, a wonderful stream is the River Time,
As it runs through the realm of tears,
With a faultless rhythm, a musical rhyme,
And a broader sweep and a surge sublime,
As it blends with the ocean of years.

How the winters are drifting like flakes of snow,
And the summers, like birds between,
And the years in the sheaf—so they come and they go,
On the river's breast, with its ebb and its flow,
As it glides in the shadow and sheen.

There's a magical isle up the River Time,
Where the softest of airs are playing;
There's a cloudless sky and a tropical clime,
And a song as sweet as a vesper chime,
And the Junes with the roses are straying.

And the name of this isle is the Long Ago,
And we bury our treasures there;
There are brows of beauty, and bosoms of snow;
There are heaps of dust—oh, we loved them so!
There are trinkets and tresses of hair.

Mr. LAMBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (H. Res. 251), which I send to the desk.

SENATE

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1943

(Legislative day of Monday, May 24, 1943)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Frederick Brown Harris, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, who in the former times didst lead our fathers forth into this land, give Thy grace to us their children in these days of crisis, that we may prove ourselves a people mindful of Thy favor and eager to be the instruments of Thy will. Bless our land with honorable industry, sound learning, and pure religion. Save the inner life of the Nation from violence, discord, and confusion, from pride and arrogance, and from every evil way. By the very fiery trial through which we are passing fashion into one people the multitudes brought hither of many kindreds and tongues. As we gird ourselves to do battle with the principalities and powers of evil Thou art the courage that arms us, the strength that sustains us.

Endue with the spirit of wisdom those who have been trusted with responsibility and authority in these troublous times. For the preservation of liberty, for the defeat of all tyranny, for the opportunity still to be free souls, for the redemption of democracy from its failures, for the establishment of a just and lasting peace, we lift our hearts to Thee, O God of our salvation. In the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT BEFORE DELEGATES TO UNITED NATIONS CONFERENCE ON FOOD AND AGRICULTURE

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD the address delivered yesterday afternoon, June 7, 1943, by the President of the United States to the delegates to the United Nations Conference on food and agriculture.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

It gives me great pleasure to welcome to the White House you who have served so splendidly at the epoch-making United Nations Conference on Food and Agriculture.

I use that word "epoch-making" advisedly. The Conference could not have failed to be significant because it was the first United Nations Conference. But it has succeeded even beyond our hopes; it is truly epoch-making because, in reaching unanimity upon complex and difficult problems, you have demonstrated beyond question that the United Nations really are united—not only for the prosecution of the war but for the solution of the many and difficult problems of peace. This conference has been a living demonstration of the methods by which the conversations of nations of like mind contemplated by Article VII of the Mutual Aid Agreement can and will give practical application to the principles of the Atlantic Charter.

You have been dealing with agriculture, the most basic of all human activities, and with food, the most basic of all human needs. Twice as many people are employed in work on food and agriculture as in work in all other fields combined. And all people have, in the literal sense of the word, a vital interest in food.

That a child or adult should get the nourishment necessary for full health is too important a thing to be left to mere chance.

You have recognized that society must accept this responsibility. As you stated in your declaration, "The primary responsibility lies with each nation for seeing that its own people have the food needed for health and life; steps to this end are for national determination. But each nation can fully achieve its goal only if all work together." On behalf of the United States I accept this declaration.

You have gone beyond the general recognition of principles to deal in specific terms with specific tasks and projects.

You have examined the needs of all countries for food and other agricultural products, both as they will exist in the short-run period of recovery from the devastation of war and as they will exist over the longer run, when our efforts can be fully devoted to expanding the production of food so that it will be adequate for health the world over.

You have surveyed with courage and with realism the magnitude of these problems and have reached unanimous agreement that they can, and must—and will—be solved.

It is true that no nation has ever had enough food to feed all of its people as we now know human beings should be fed. But neither have nations representing over 80 percent of the world's 2,000,000,000 inhabitants ever before been joined together to achieve such an aim. Never before have they set out to bend their united efforts to the development of the world's resources so that all men might seek to attain food they need.

For the short run, you have pointed out steps which have to be taken both in increasing supplies and in maintaining economy of use and coordination of distribution.

In considering our long-range problems, you have surveyed our knowledge of the inadequacy in the quantity and quality of the diet of peoples in all lands. You have pooled our knowledge of the means of expanding our output, of increasing our agricultural efficiency, and of adjusting agricultural production to consumption needs. In the fields of both production and consumption you have recognized the need for the better utilization of the knowledge we now have and for extending still further the boundaries of our knowledge through education and research.

You have called upon your governments individually and collectively to enlarge and improve their activities in these fields.

For the perfection and rapid execution of these plans, you have recommended the creation of a permanent United Nations organization. To facilitate and hasten the creation of that organization, and to carry on the work you have begun until its creation, you have established an interim commission. The Government of the United States is honored that you have asked that the interim commission have its seat in Washington, and will be glad to take the preliminary action for the establishment of that commission which you have entrusted to it.

Finally, you have expressed your deep conviction that our goal in this field cannot be attained without forward action in other fields as well. Increased food production must be accompanied by increased industrial production and by increased purchasing power. There must be measures for dealing with trade barriers, international exchange stability, and international investment. The better use of natural and human resources must be assured to improve the living standard; and, may I add, the better use of these resources without exploitation on the part of any nation. Many of these questions lie outside the scope of the work you have undertaken, but their solution is nonetheless essential to its success. They require, and shall receive, our united attention.

In the political field, these relationships are equally important. And they work both ways. A sound world agricultural program will depend upon world political security, while that security will in turn be greatly strengthened if each country can be assured of the food it needs. Freedom from want and freedom from fear go hand in hand.

Our ultimate objective can be simply stated: It is to build for ourselves, for all men, a world in which each individual human being shall have the opportunity to live out his life in peace; to work productively, earning at least enough for his actual needs and those of his family; to associate with the friends of his choice; to think and worship freely; and to die secure in the knowledge that his children, and their children, shall have the same opportunities.

That objective, as men know from long and bitter experience, will not be easy to achieve. But you and I know also that, throughout history, there has been no more worth-while, no more inspiring challenge.

That challenge will be met.

You have demonstrated beyond question that free peoples all over the world can agree upon a common course of action and upon common machinery for action. You have brought new hope to the world that, through the establishment of orderly international procedures for the solution of international problems there will be attained freedom from want and freedom from fear. The United Nations are united in the war against fear and want as solidly and effectively as they are united on the battle front in this world-wide war against aggression.

And we are winning by action and unity.

ADDITIONAL SALES OF WHEAT FOR FEED

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I wish to have a measure taken up in order to expedite an issue raised last Friday, when the Senate unanimously amended the lend-lease bill by adopting a provision enabling 50,000,000 bushels of wheat to be released for sale. I find, on my return today, that last Friday the House of Representatives passed a joint resolution, House Joint Resolution 133, identical with the Senate amendment to the lend-lease bill, and it is now on the desk of the Vice President.

I ask unanimous consent that House Joint Resolution 133 be considered and passed at this time, in view of the fact that the Senate unanimously adopted the same provision last Friday, in exactly the same form, as an amendment to the lend-lease bill, as I have already stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 133) to permit additional sales of wheat for feed, which was read twice by its title.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a declaration of principles recently adopted by the American Agricultural Institute.

There being no objection, the declaration of principles was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

1. The increase and dissemination of information in the fields of agricultural science and economics.

2. Adequate production on American farms and in American factories.

3. Recognition of the right of American producers to the American markets, and full protection of such rights.

4. Support of sound cooperative associations.

5. Continued study of the problem of securing for agriculture its fair share of the national income in peacetime as well as war, and of efforts to bring about a just and permanent solution.

6. A better understanding between agriculture, industry, and labor, with mutual confidence, respect, and cooperation.

7. Protection of individual rights and liberties. Encouragement of individual initiative. Support of the doctrine of self-help.

8. The right of every man to sell his services or his products without interference, and to increase his earning power by improving his skill or increasing his output.

9. Evaluating every business institution or activity by the service it renders to society.

10. The best possible transportation facilities, at the lowest costs consistent with good service. Impartial encouragement of rail, water, highway, and air transport, and coordination where possible.

11. Restriction of governmental activities to the legitimate and necessary functions of government. Abolition of unnecessary bureaus, boards, commissions, and authorities. A simplified but effective regulatory system, with industry and labor subject to equal controls, and assuming equal responsibility.

12. Rigid control of Federal, State, and local governmental expenditures. An equitable taxation system, with levies held to the lowest possible levels.

13. Preservation of American institutions and the American way of life.

14. Promotion of international commerce and good will.

The board of directors announce that plans are under way for extending and enlarging the research and educational work of this organization. A long-time program for the economic and social welfare of agriculture is being developed. The Institute hopes to make substantial contribution to the national effort to avoid a repetition, in the coming post-war period, of the disastrous experience of agriculture following World War No. 1.

EFFECTS OF ROLL-BACKS AND SUBSIDIES ON FOOD PRODUCTION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR CAPPER

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in the nature of a substitute.

AGRICULTURAL APPPROPRIATIONS

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate resume the consideration of House bill 2481, the agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, that is entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making agricultural appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first committee amendment passed over.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 66, line 11, after the word "amended", it is proposed to strike out "Provided further, That none of the fund made available by this paragraph shall be used for administrative expenses connected with the sale of Government-owned or Government-controlled stocks of farm commodities at less than parity price as defined by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938" and in lieu thereof to insert "Provided further, That none of the fund made available by this paragraph shall be used for administrative expenses connected with the sale of Government-owned or Government-controlled stocks of farm commodities at less than parity price as defined by the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 or the comparable price as provided by section 4 (a) of the act of July 1, 1941 (Public Law No. 147, 77th Cong.): Provided further, That the foregoing shall not apply to the sale or other disposition of any agricultural commodity for distribution exclusively for relief purposes, nor to commodities which have substantially deteriorated in quality or are sold for the purpose of feeding or the manufacture of ethyl alcohol, butyl alcohol, acetone, or rubber, or the extraction of oil, or commodities sold to farmers for seed or commodities sold for export or new or byproduct uses: Provided further, That no wheat or corn shall be sold for feed at a price less than the parity price of corn at the time such sale is made: Provided further, That in making regional adjustments in the sale price of corn or wheat the minimum price need not be higher in any area than the United States average parity price of corn."

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think this is the amendment which I asked to have go over until today.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. I did not make the request in my own capacity, but a Senator who was absent yesterday and is absent today asked me to have the amendment go over. I am advised through his office that he has no objection to the amendment. Therefore I am willing that action be taken without further discussion, so far as that Senator is concerned and so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Georgia if this is the amendment on page 66 restoring the parity-price provision?

Mr. RUSSELL. The amendment is found on page 66 of the bill, and it is practically the same language as that carried in the present appropriation law, under which the Commodity Credit Corporation is now functioning, the difference being that last year the Senate committee placed a limitation of 125,000,000 bushels on the quantity of wheat that could be sold for feed. Early in this year the feed situation became so acute throughout the country that it was necessary to pass an act permitting the sale of another 100,000,000 bushels of wheat for feed. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] a few moments ago presented and the Senate passed a House joint resolution permitting the sale of 50,000,000 more bushels of wheat for feed between now and the beginning of the next fiscal year. The provision of the committee amendment as it applies to next year contains no limitation on the amount of wheat which may be sold for feed. Today a very acute condition prevails throughout the entire country, and there is an unquestioned need for more feed for livestock and poultry, due to the unusual demands of the war for foodstuffs.

Mr. President, I do not think there is any objection to the committee amendment. As yet none has been raised. Even those who opposed a similar provision which was placed in the bill last year have favored legislation subsequently enacted increasing the amount of wheat which would be available for this purpose.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator from Georgia for the information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 68, after the word "newspapers", to strike out "$300,000,000" and insert "$400,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 68, line 3, after "$400,000,000", to strike out the comma and the words "to remain available until June 30, 1945, solely for programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and for compliances with soil-building practices and water-conservation practices under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, as amended, pursuant to 1943 programs carried out during the period July 1, 1942, to December 31, 1943, inclusive," and in lieu thereof to insert a comma and the words, "to remain available until June 30, 1945, for compliance with programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, and the act of February 29, 1936, as amended, pursuant to the provisions of the 1943 programs carried out during the period July 1, 1942, to December 31, 1943, inclusive."

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, has the amendment at the top of page 68 been acted upon?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, that amendment was agreed to. Does the Senator wish that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered?

Mr. BYRD. I simply wanted to express my opposition to the increase from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000. I think the time has come when the farmers, instead of being given subsidies, should have an increased price for their products. I do not intend to ask for a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will do so, because I think it is important that the question be voted on. I hope that even if it be by voice vote only, a vote will be taken on the amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Virginia desire that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered?

Mr. BYRD. I ask that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment appearing in line 2 on page 68 was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. BYRD. I am opposed to the Senate committee amendment. I am willing to support a $300,000,000 appropriation, as provided by the appropriations bill as passed by the House, but I think that is a sufficient amount, and that we should not increase it to $400,000,000. The time has come when we should give the farmers a reasonable and proper price for their products and eliminate subsidies. If we cannot eliminate them now, I do not think we can ever do so.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, we naturally feel reluctant during time of war to change the system which has been in effect and which primarily was introduced as a depression aid to agriculture. However, today all the money which is appropriated in this bill for any purpose whatsoever is borrowed money. The Government is not taking in sufficient money to pay for its war effort, and of course agriculture is a part of its war effort, but not primarily a governmentally operated war effort, because the farmer is an individual businessman. If he needs $300,000,000 for aid in one way or another, it seems to me that in these times the prices he receives should be fair and should furnish the aid, and it should not be sought through an indirect appropriation by the Government, which only adds to the national debt.

Let me briefly illustrate, that if $400,000,000 is appropriated a year for this purpose, and the war lasts 3 years, it means that a sum in excess of $1,000,000,000 will be added to the national debt, which the returning troops, as well as our own generation, and perhaps future generations, will have to pay. I think we have reached the point in these times when a great many of the depression agencies should be eliminated. I do not believe it is sound to carry them through this period. If after the war is over, we fall into a period of business depression, as is not unlikely, pending the readjustment, and have to establish these agencies and functions over again, that is one thing, but I believe we have today reached the point where many of the depression-created agencies and functions should be reduced or eliminated.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I merely wish to repeat the statement I made yesterday in regard to this item. For a number of years this appropriation for soil conservation payments to farmers has been $500,000,000. Last year it was reduced to $450,000,000. This year the Bureau of the Budget reduced the amount to $400,000,000. To assure a further reduction next year language has been placed in the bill as it appears at the bottom of page 69, which provides that the program for the next fiscal year cannot amount to more than $300,000,000.

There is more involved in this matter, Mr. President, than any mere question of substance, as stated by the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Virginia. These payments are made to farmers for following certain soil-conserving practices on their lands. The program was announced in December 1942, and was carried into every agricultural county in the United States. The farmers were told that if they would follow certain practices with regard to soil conservation and the handling of crops, they would receive certain payments this year. That announcement had been made each year for the 6 previous years. The farmers in many cases, on practically 6,000,000 farms in the country, acting upon the announcement of the Secretary of Agriculture, have expended large sums of money in buying the material which was necessary to be had in order to comply with the program. Of course, the Congress can break that contract with the farmers; it can say it has no sanction of law. That is a debatable question. However, my own construction of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 is that the Secretary of Agriculture is required to make the announcement to the farmers, and I think the Congress is morally bound to make the appropriations. Approximately $200,000,000 of this money represents what are in effect out-of-pocket expenditures by the farmers in order to carry on the soil-conservation practices, and in no event can properly be considered a subsidy.

The program has been reduced from year to year, as I have outlined. It may be that these questions pertaining to agriculture are of no importance in time of war; but I think they are of just as vital importance as the production of planes and tanks; because all the equipment obtained with the moneys which are expended for military purposes—and yesterday afternoon we passed an appropriation of more than $20,000,000,000 for the Navy Department, and not a word was said or not an objection was raised as to a single item in the bill—is not worth 2 cents to us without adequate food and clothing to take care of the men who are to operate the machinery.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator said the farmers were promised $200,000,000. Who, except the Congress of the United States, has the authority to promise an appropriation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, evidently the Senator did not follow my remarks. I said the question as to whether the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 permitted the Secretary of Agriculture to promise those payments to farmers was a debatable one.

Mr. BYRD. Does the Constitution authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to obligate the Congress to make an appropriation from year to year?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in the passage of the War Department appropriation bill and the Navy Department appropriation bill we have authorized contractual obligations running into the tens of billions of dollars.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator does not contend that we have authorized a contractual obligation with respect to soil conservation; does he?

Mr. RUSSELL. Most assuredly I do. It is my construction of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938 that, within the limit of appropriations authorized by law——

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, that is exactly the point. Without authorization by law an appropriation of $400,000,000 could be said to be just as much an obligation as an appropriation of $200,000,000. Does the Senator contend that the Congress is obligated to appropriate $200,000,000 for this activity?

Mr. RUSSELL. I say that so long as we have adopted language, as we have, limiting the amount to $300,000,000 for next year, the Secretary of Agriculture is obligated to make the expenditures in conformity with the authorization and the announcements.

Mr. BYRD. Will the Senator find that particular point in the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, while the Senator is finding it, will he yield to me so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The money is for payments in the next fiscal year——

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; it is to carry out the program authorized for this year.

Mr. TYDINGS. If that be so, when shall we reach the point of being able to reduce the appropriation, if we can only follow in line with the commitments made?

Mr. RUSSELL. The provision is—

That such amount shall be available for salaries and other administrative expenses in connection with the formulation and administration of the 1944 program or plans hereafter authorized under section 7 or 8, or both, of said act of February 29, 1936, or under said provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938——

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator, if he will yield to me at that point. Did I understand him to say the 1944 appropriation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is for next year.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. We appropriate in the 1944 appropriation bill to pay for this year's program; and that is why I say it would be a breach of faith to appropriate less than the farmers have been led to believe they will receive. I was showing the Senator how we were undertaking to limit the appropriation for next year without any breach of faith.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me again so that I may ask him a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. First, I should like to read the remainder of the paragraph:

the total expenditures of which including administration shall not exceed $300,000,000.

At least by such action, which would be a limitation on an appropriation—a clumsy way to approach the problem, but the only approach we had—we would undertake to assure a reduction of $100,000,000 in the appropriation next year.

Mr. TYDINGS. What I am getting at is whether, if that appropriation is put in the bill, when this time next year comes, we shall have to appropriate more money because the Secretary of Agriculture will have bound us in connection with the program and commitments for the following year. Shall we have to do that?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; because in the bill we limit to not exceeding $300,000,000 the total expenses which are to be made in promulgating the program.

Mr. TYDINGS. So, if the Secretary of Agriculture were to carry the program to a point involving appropriations beyond the amount of the appropriations we authorize, he would do so at his peril, and the Congress would not be bound to appropriate any further money for soil-conservation payments; is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. Absolutely.

Mr. TYDINGS. Am I to understand that the Senator's statement is that if the Secretary of Agriculture perhaps incurred an obligation to carry out the program, he will have been circumscribed and curtailed by the limiting language to which the Senator has referred?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is exactly the purpose of the committee.

Mr. TYDINGS. So that, hereafter, Congress could refuse to appropriate any money for this function, if it deemed such a course to be wise; is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. It could do that now. As a matter of fact, all the work sheets issued to the 6,000,000 farmers throughout the United States carry a statement that the offer is made subject to appropriations to be made by the Congress. There is no question about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree as to that. However, the point is that when those work sheets are issued, the farmer has a right to believe that the Congress will back up what its servant, the Secretary of Agriculture, is attempting to do.

What I should like to know is whether the work sheets will go out again next year. If they do go out, shall we not be in the same position next year we are in now?

Mr. RUSSELL. Within the limitation of this amendment, because we put them on notice, and notify the Secretary of Agriculture that he should not enter into a program next year that will cost more than $300,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why limit it to $300,000,000? What is the magic of that figure?

Mr. RUSSELL. Because we were endeavoring to reduce appropriations, not to strike down all the soil-conservation program.

Mr. President, let me say that if the Congress wants to abolish the program it should do so with a limitation now that will provide that no payments shall be made next year. I am opposed to such a course. I think it would be a mistake, even in time of war, to strike down the program.

However, if the Congress should decide that it desired to strike down the program, it should place a limitation in the bill to the effect that no part of the funds should be available for formulating a program next year that would cost one dime, instead of taking the money out of appropriations made to apply to contracts which already have been entered into in good faith by the farmers.

Mr. TYDINGS. I can appreciate the sense of the Senator's statement, to wit—that after we have made agreements in one form or another with the farmers, the Congress would not be keeping faith if it did not appropriate the money. I can understand that; but I am curious to know how we can get in a position so that, if we desire to change or amend or alter the program, or even eliminate it, that can be done.

Mr. RUSSELL. There are two ways by which that could be done. One would be by repealing the section of the act of April 27, 1935, which authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to incur obligations not exceeding $500,000,000 for any one fiscal year for this program. The other would be by placing in this appropriation bill a limitation which would prohibit the formulation of any program whatever for next year. Of course, I should be opposed to either of those courses.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, I do not have detailed information on these matters. I think the Senator from Georgia is one of the best-informed Members of Congress on this whole program.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish I could deserve the Senator's encomium.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am sure the Senator deserves it, and I commend him for his long and tireless efforts in behalf of agriculture—efforts which I think have been in almost all cases constructive, as I view the picture. But all the money being paid out on the soil-conservation program is not, in my judgment, achieving the results for which it has been paid out. For example, many farmers are doing what they previously were doing, and are collecting the payments for adhering to certain practices which they have been employing for generations.

I understand that there are certain places where these practices have not been put into effect and where this program is being used as an educational program in order to bring the soil to a point of higher fertility. I cannot speak for many States, but I think that generally in the East—in New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and some of the other nearby States—most of the soil-conservation practices have been used by the farmers for many years. In the future, where the fruits of the educational program are being borne, I think we might consider limiting it and applying it only to sections of the country where it is not practiced. What we are doing today in many communities under the guise of soil-conservation payments is simply paying farmers for doing exactly what they have been doing for 15, 20, or 40 years.

That being the case, I would rather see the prices of farm products sufficiently high to compensate the farmer for the expenses to which he is put, rather than to have indirect subsidies paid as a means of lowering the prices. The farmer is entitled to no more than a fair price, and he is entitled to no less than a fair price; but, in the long run, all these indirect payments from the Federal Treasury, added to the national debt, will do the farmer more harm than if we were to proceed, so far as possible, on a pay-as-you-go basis, because the farmer will have to make his contribution to the whole debt structure. Therefore we are not quite candid when we let him believe that he is getting something for nothing, because in the end, like every other workingman, whether he be on the farm or in the factory, he will have to pay his share if our bank deposits and the integrity of our financial structure are to remain unharmed. There is no other way to do it. Therefore I am hopeful that the amount will be reduced in line with what the Senator from Virginia has recommended, because I think the curtailment ought to take place now, while farm prices, on the whole, are good, and when we can reduce this expenditure without hurting the farmer.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. We have been discussing the amendment on page 68, line 2, under the heading "Conservation and use of agricultural land resources." The House provided an appropriation of $300,000,000. The Senate committee has raised the amount to $400,000,000.

On page 74 of the bill we find the heading "Soil Conservation Service." The total appropriation recommended for that Service is $21,850,136. What is the difference between the purposes of the two provisions?

Mr. RUSSELL. Both programs have the same objective, but it is approached from different standpoints. The appropriation which the committee is seeking, of $400,000,000, is to pay the individual farmers the amounts which they were assured they would receive when the work sheets were issued to the local A. A. A. committees last December. That is for the work the farmer does on his land.

The whole philosophy of the Soil Conservation Act was that the Nation had a stake in preserving the fertility of the soil, so as to assure that in years to come the soil will not become so depleted that it cannot produce adequate supplies of food to take care of an increasing population.

The Soil Conservation Service item to which the Senator refers is the technical service in the Department of Agriculture. It makes investigations and furnishes information to farmers as to methods of soil conservation to pursue.

Furthermore, I believe 43 of the States have enacted State laws providing for the establishment of soil-conservation districts. Whenever the farmers within a certain area, at an election duly held, vote for the creation of a soil-conservation district, the lands within that area are subject to a certain program. The appropriation of $21,850,136 to which the Senator refers is for the technical force in the field, in the soil-conservation districts, to serve each individual farm and make suggestions to the farmer as to the soil-conservation practices he should pursue. A map is made of each farm. Suppose a farm consists of 60 acres. The map will show the lands which the expert from the Soil Conservation Service regards as suitable to be devoted to crops. Suggestions will be made as to planting wood lots or trees in a certain area which is not susceptible to cultivation. Advice is given and surveys are made for the erection of terraces, to see that the soil of the entire farm is properly drained and not eroded because of improper terracing and drainage.

That is the difference. The Soil Conservation Service deals with the soil-conservation districts and with the technical aspects of the problem, making research into soil-conservation practices. The other item is for payment to the farmers for carrying out those practices.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In other words, both appropriations are, in fact, really under the same head.

Mr. RUSSELL. Both have the same objective, which is conserving and preserving the fertility of the soil on the farms of the United States.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Why are the items divided in this manner?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is a question of opinion. Congress has enacted various laws. All of this program is authorized by acts of Congress. I believe the items were divided in this manner because the Congress would have been hesitant to place a compulsory program upon the several States and incorporate them into soil-conservation districts. Therefore Congress enacted legislation inviting the States to hold elections within the watersheds to determine whether or not the farmers would go into the soil-conservation districts.

The other appropriation applies to the individual farmer. He may carry out the practices suggested, or he may not carry them out. The option is with him, whereas in the soil-conservation districts, when three-fourths of the farmers or landowners in a certain area so vote, all are bound to carry out certain soil-conservation practices.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. In the last analysis, however, we appropriate a little more than $420,000,000 for this single purpose, under these two items.

Mr. RUSSELL. For the objective of conserving the soils of the Nation.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. How much of the $400,000,000 is used for the type of payment which it is sought to deduct in determining parity prices? What is that program called?

Mr. RUSSELL. Under the present Executive order all these funds may be deducted in price fixing. As a matter of fact, they are not now all deducted. As to these funds that order is an injustice, and I hope they will not be deducted. A large part of these payments are to reimburse the farmer for out-of-pocket expenditures and to deduct them has the effect of fixing his prices below parity and causes him an actual loss.

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, when a farmer does certain specific things on his farm, or installs certain kinds of improvements, those are not taken into consideration specifically, but there is a general payment program. Is most of the $400,000,000 used for what, in effect, is a subsidy for particular crops?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no. As I recall, $197,000,000 would go for the general soil-conservation practices, such as liming, planting trees, and building terraces. So much per running foot is allowed for terraces of a certain height. Then there is the administration expense, which next year would be limited to not more than $32,500,000. That would leave approximately $160,000,000 for payments for the other purpose to which the Senator refers, less than half the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Referring to the provision at the top of page 69, it reads:

Provided further, That not to exceed $32,500,000 of said amount shall be available for salaries and other administrative expenses for carrying out such programs.

Does that mean that a general administrative pay roll of $32,500,000 is required to operate this $400,000,000 program?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has heard previous discussion on that subject. Of course, there is a limitation on the amount which may be expended in the District of Columbia. I was the author of that amendment some years ago. I thought the administrative expenses were too high. In some cases the expenses of the local county committees have been perfectly staggering. For the current year all expenses of administration amount to approximately $54,000,000. We are trying to reduce those expenses. We think they are excessive. In some areas the county committees would meet only a very few days during the year, to formulate the program and see that it was enforced. In other cases they would meet as many as 100 days a year. We are seeking to reduce the administrative expenses from $54,000,000 this year to $32,500,000 next year. That applies to all the locally elected county committeemen in every county of the United States where there is any agricultural interest, as well as the community committees, and all other administrative expenses. As the Senator knows, this program is broken down into the community committeemen, the county committeemen, the county representatives, and the Washington office.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do not many of these committees do various other things besides attending to soil conservation?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, yes.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Do they not do many things which they are not supposed to do?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know that they do. I have not heretofore heard that charge made.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Is this not the group which has been repeatedly charged with widespread propaganda, to such an extent that recently the Secretary of Agriculture had to chastise them?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; there has been a terrific fight in some States between the Farm Bureau and the Extension Service on the one side, and the triple A committees on the other side. I think that is not true throughout the entire United States, but it has been true in some cases, I will say, in all frankness to the Senator from Michigan. In defending their conduct of the program, the triple A committeemen criticized the Extension Service and the Farm Bureau, and their ideas in taking over the program. There has been quite a political fight between those agencies. I do not think it has been a partisan matter. I do not think there is any line of demarcation between Democrats and Republicans. It has been a fight waged for power between the Farm Bureau and the Extension Service, on the one side, and the triple A committees on the other, as to who should administer and control the farm program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. As I understand the Senator from Georgia, the expense of administration for the past year reached $54,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; that is true.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Out of a total expense of how much?

Mr. RUSSELL. Out of $450,000,000.

Mr. VANDENBERG. And the committee found that to be indefensible, and tried to reduce it to $32,500,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; we thought it excessive.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Why is $32,500,000 the figure? Is not that still a tremendously extravagant figure for administrative expenses?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I cannot answer the question categorically. The Senator from Michigan knows that in trying to bring about reductions, it is sometimes necessary more or less to use a rule of thumb. I think the committee seized upon that figure because some officials of the farm organizations, when they appeared before the committee, said that they did not believe that in any event the appropriation for administrative expenses should be reduced below that amount.

My judgment is that this program should be administered, and can be administered, with approximately $25,000,000, but I do not think that the committee would be justified in making such a drastic reduction in 1 year. I believe that it would be better to reduce the amount from $54,000,000 to $32,500,000, and next year try to reduce it to approximately $25,000,000. That is my own view. I am not attempting to express the view of others. I do not know what prompted the committee to adopt the figure of $32,500,000 unless someone in the committee—I may have been the culprit—thought that that was the amount suggested by the Farm Bureau as the minimum amount upon which the program could be administered.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am glad that the committee is starting to curb this particular item. It seems to me totally indefensible to think of a 10 percent administrative charge against a farm encouragement program. I think if the Senator should suggest $25,000,000 he might find many other Senators agreeing with him right now.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I should like to propound an inquiry. Assuming the analysis of the matter which the Senator has given to be accurate—I am sure that he believes it to be correct—I should like to have him explain why the House feels that this program could be carried out with an appropriation of only $300,000,000 and why the Senate committee feels that an appropriation of $400,000,000 is necessary to meet our commitments, in line with the Senator's explanation of those commitments which he gave a few minutes ago.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, I do not know what prompted the House to reduce the amount to $300,000,000. I read the record. No real reason was given, other than that some Member of the House expressed the fear on the floor that some of these funds would be paid out for incentive payments. There was also an impression abroad that if these payments were made to farmers for carrying out this program, it would be like putting money into one pocket, and then, under the price-fixing theory, the farmer would be denied the money by having the payments deducted before his ceiling prices were established, thereby taking it out of the other pocket.

Mr. TYDINGS. It would be treated as a subsidy.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct. That is my impression as to what prompted the House in doing what it did. However, Mr. President, I will say that if I should undertake to explain what motivated the House in its action on this bill I would be attempting something which I believe no man could possibly do. In the shape in which the bill came to the Senate, that would be impossible.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Georgia has given a very fair explanation of the situation, but my own opposition springs primarily from the fact that I think it would be a very serious mistake now to embrace a system of what would amount almost to direct subsidy payments. That is one reason why I shall support the $300,000,000 appropriation rather than the $400,000,000, in the belief that in the final result agriculture itself would be better served than by pursuing the opposite course.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope that no Member of the Senate will get the impression from the Senator's remarks that we are embarking on any new program under the proposed $400,000,000 appropriation. The plan is merely to carry out a program announced last December to the farmers of the country, and represents a reduction of $100,000,000 in the funds available year before last.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. In line with what the Senator from Michigan has said, I should like to relate two instances which may have some explanatory effect in connection with the size of the administrative expense.

Two years ago the Department of Agriculture brought a party of approximately 600 persons, representing the Department in many sections of the United States to the State of South Dakota, and spent nearly a week there, partly in vacationing and partly in conferences.

From the Senator's explanation, I assume that the expense of that activity was met from the fund for administrative expense.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, all the administrative expenses of this program are paid by the farmer because of the fact the expenses are deducted from the appropriations made for payments to the farmer. Under the policy which the Department was finally prevailed upon to adopt, each farmer was supposed to be shown on his check what proportion had been deducted for administrative expenses of the Triple A.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Then the farmer has not been receiving all the money he should have received?

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not follow at all.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to relate another incident. About the same time as the occurrence to which I have referred, the Secretary of Agriculture who was then in office held a meeting in the city of St. Paul, or Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota. Representatives of the Department went into my State, as well as adjoining States, and solicited people to go to St. Paul or Minneapolis to hear the Secretary speak.

A special train went from the section of the State in which I live, and all expenses were paid to St. Paul. Was that expense a part of the administrative expense which we are discussing?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have never previously heard of that incident. I think the Senator should have come before the Committee on Appropriations and told us about it so that we could have had an opportunity to investigate. I would have appreciated hearing about it. I certainly do not consider such expenses a proper part of the administrative expense of this program. I do not believe any Member of the Senate would.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. I should like to endorse the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan that if the amount were reduced to $25,000,000 we might agree to it more readily.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] made the point that $32,000,000 is the total of the administrative expenses of the Department of Agriculture. It is my understanding that $32,000,000 is for the payment of per diems and expenses of the 90,000 committeemen. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think not. That amount includes all administrative expenses, in Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. BYRD. It could not possibly include all administrative expenses.

Mr. RUSSELL. It does.

Mr. BYRD. The Department of Agriculture has 76,624 regular employees, in addition to the 90,000 committeemen. Last year there was actually expended $42,000,000 for compensation to committeemen, so the amount stated could not possibly include all the administrative expenses.

Mr. RUSSELL. It includes all the expenses of the Triple A. That is what is dealt with in this item.

Mr. BYRD. I was talking about the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, it does not include all the administrative expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BYRD. Under the pending bill what would the 90,000 committeemen be permitted to withdraw from the Treasury?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no idea what they would be permitted to withdraw from the Treasury, because we have reduced the appropriation so that no more than $32,500,000 may be spent. I do not know how much of this would go for the committee's expense.

Mr. BYRD. Does that have reference to the committeemen?

Mr. RUSSELL. No. That is for all the Triple A administrative expenses.

Mr. BYRD. What will the Triple A cost for the present year?

Mr. RUSSELL. Approximately $54,000,000. I do not have all the figures before me now.

Mr. BYRD. Does not that all go to the committeemen?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Department is limited to $32,500,000 for Washington in the field and for the committeemen under the amendment.

Mr. BYRD. How many regular employees have they?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not have the figures, and I cannot tell the Senator.

Mr. BYRD. I do not want to contradict the Senator from Georgia, but the committeemen drew——

Mr. RUSSELL. No; I insist that the administrative expenses for the Triple A program, wherever they are, are contained in this $32,500,000 appropriation.

Mr. BYRD. Ninety thousand committeemen have been drawing per diem for traveling around the country as they please, going here and there, for a great many years, and last year they drew out of the Treasury $42,000,000. That is a matter of record.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am not prepared to controvert that, but we are trying to cut it down to such a point that compensation for the committeemen and all other administrative expenses including those in Washington could not exceed $32,500,000.

Mr. BYRD. Is that in the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is in the bill. We have been discussing it on the floor. If the Senator will look at the top of page 69 he will find the limitation. We are trying to limit and reduce the expenses of the Triple A.

Mr. BYRD. I should like to ask the Senator if he made any investigation of communications expenses of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. I think I have the figures here.

Mr. BYRD. For 5 months, from July 1 to December 1, 1942, their expenditures for telephone and telegraph service were $1,153,000. Does that conform with the Senator's record?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not have the figures for 6 months. I find that the communications services for the entire Department for the whole fiscal year 1943 were, approximately, $2,000,000. So the Senator's figure is about correct for 6 months.

Mr. BYRD. For communications by long-distance telephone for 6 months the expenditure was $736,000. That would be a million and a half dollars for the year.

For travel expenses the Department of Agriculture expended $5,175,796 for 6 months, or in excess of $10,000,000 on a yearly basis.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am trying to find the figures as to travel expenses. I think the Senator's figures are about correct.

Mr. BYRD. Then, the paid employees with the Department of Agriculture, exclusive of the committeemen, number 76,624.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator's figures with regard to travel expenses are approximately correct.

Mr. BYRD. Has the committee made any attempt, in this bill, to reduce travel expenses?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; travel expenses are reduced. The Senator will recall that last year we made a reduction in travel expenses in several items spread throughout the bill; we made a small further reduction this year.

Mr. BYRD. Is that contained in the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. Not as a specific item. It appears in the Budget estimates.

Mr. BYRD. There has been a reduction of travel expenses?

Mr. RUSSELL. There was a substantial reduction in the 1943 bill over the preceding year, and we have reduced it almost half a million dollars more in the current bill.

Mr. TUNNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. TUNNELL. I understand from the Senator's statement that a good deal of the money which has been appropriated has really been expended already on the promise by the Secretary of Agriculture that it would be forthcoming or in the belief that it would be forthcoming.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is undoubtedly true; large sums have been expended by farmers throughout the country on the assurance that they would be reimbursed from the appropriation of these funds.

Mr. TUNNELL. Lime has been bought, I take it.

Mr. RUSSELL. Lime and trees, and terracing practices have been carried out, involving a considerable expense.

Mr. TUNNELL. The farmers of the Nation had reason to believe that the necessary amounts would be appropriated by Congress?

Mr. RUSSELL. They had reason, based upon the construction of the act I read a few moments ago, and on the fact that for 6 years Congress had appropriated funds sufficient to discharge the obligations of the Department of Agriculture to the farmers.

Mr. TUNNELL. And a refusal to appropriate now would fall upon the farmers who have already spent the money and who believed that they would be reimbursed?

Mr. RUSSELL. Undoubtedly, in part, that would be the effect of it, because it would be undertaking to discharge a dollar debt, as I see it, by the payment of 75 cents. It is true that we are at war, but I do not see any reason why, if we can pass a bill appropriating approximately $24,000,000,000 for the Navy in 15 minutes, we should attempt to make a reduction in the payment of funds to the farmers who have already expended in many cases funds out of their own pocket. It is not fair; indeed, it is a breach of faith to the farmers of this country.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, with respect to this issue, I agree in principle with the Senator from Maryland and also the Senator from Virginia. I hope to see the day come when we will abandon this kind of a program, but, in view of the obligation that has either been expressly incurred or exists by strong implication, we would be breaking faith if we did not appropriate sufficient money to carry out the program which has been established and under which the farmers have operated this year. Is it the judgment of the Senator and the judgment of the committee that it will take $400,000,000 to discharge that obligation?

Mr. RUSSELL. The best authority the committee has is the statement of the Secretary of Agriculture and the Administrator of Food Distribution and Production, both of whom appeared before the committee and said that the announcement which was made to the farmers last year contemplated the payment of $400,000,000, and that the appropriation of less than that amount would not enable the Department to meet the obligations which were incurred when the program was formulated last December.

Mr. McCLELLAN. In other words, if we reduced it now to $300,000,000, we would be breaking faith to the extent of about 25 percent of our obligations.

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly so understand the matter.

Mr. McCLELLAN. With respect to the amendment the committee has incorporated in the bill dealing with 1944, it is attempted by that method, rather than by repealing the section of the A. A. A. statute, to continue further to reduce the program.

Mr. RUSSELL. We are undertaking to assure that the program next year will be reduced $100,000,000 and will not exceed $300,000,000, under the language the committee has recommended.

Mr. McCLELLAN. With this amendment in the bill the Secretary of Agriculture and no one else would be authorized to obligate the Government beyond $300,000,000 to the farmer, and the Senator now understands that that would be the limit of next year's program?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is exactly what the committee is proposing and trying to do.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I want to commend the committee and the Senator for what I regard as a progressive step to get rid of some of these programs.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President——

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GILLETTE. Perhaps the Senator answered the question I am about to ask before I came into the Chamber; but did the Senator state the reason which induced the committee to drop the House proviso that no part of this appropriation should be used for incentive payments?

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be happy to refer to that; I have not touched on it, and I shall be glad to tell the Senator the reason. The committee struck that provision because nobody on the committee knew exactly what it meant. I should like to have any Senator define for me exactly what is meant by the words "no part of this appropriation shall be used for the purpose of making incentive payments."

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I am not familiar with the background of this situation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I was going to explain that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I should like to put in the Senator's mind an idea which he can consider when he explains the matter. I interpret that language to mean that the Secretary could go ahead with soil-building and conservation programs, but he could not use this money as an inducement to farmers to plant a particular crop by promising to give them so much a bushel, for example, or so much a ton; but the money would have to be spent for soil-building and conservation programs. I think that is reasonable. If that is the limitation and that is the interpretation of the provision, I should be inclined to support it. If, however, we are to have a soil-conservation program which will be so hamstrung that it cannot be carried out, then I should not want to support it. I hope the Senator will explain it.

Mr. RUSSELL. I should be glad to explain it so far as I can, but, frankly, I do not know what the effect of the language will be. I think I know the reasons why the House put the provision in the bill. The Budget submitted estimates to the House of Representatives for $100,000,000, and in endeavoring to describe the payments which are to be made from the $100,000,000, the Department of Agriculture, in making up the Budget, referred to the payments as "incentive payments." That appropriation was rejected by the House, and the Senate committee has not undertaken to insert it in the bill. However, this statement of the reasons for the insertion of the provision is a mere conjecture on my part. The House was opposed to those payments and used the same term to describe them in the limitation.

I can conceive of a situation in which it would be impossible even to make a soil-conservation payment if this language were contained in the law, because a soil-conservation payment is in the nature of an incentive payment. It is paid as an incentive for the farmer to improve his land. The appropriation which the committee is recommending is for the purpose of meeting obligations entered into last December. I could see no good reason for cluttering up the bill with language which no one could clearly understand or define.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe that if the word "direct" were inserted in the bill before the word "incentive," the Department of Agriculture, with the rulings of its own attorney, who would be favorably inclined toward the provision, would interpret it as Congress means that it should be interpreted—namely, that the money shall not be used directly as a part of the price, per se, for the production of crops, and I think even those who are its greatest friends, or those moderately inclined toward it, are not voting for it as money to be used for incentive payments. I think we are voting it to be used for soil-conservation practices, and I believe we would be wise to reinsert the House provision and, if necessary, make it plainer than it is in the words of the amendment.

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to point out that we are dealing here with a very complex problem. The soil-conservation payments are not made only to the producers of basic commodities, they are made also to dairy farmers, they are made in small programs affecting only commodities having a limited production area scale. For example, the law applies in some way to the naval stores program in my own State. Some small payments are made there out of this fund. I think we would be doing a very dangerous thing if we put this limitation on an appropriation to pay for a program which has already been promulgated by the Department and carried out by the farmer. If we insert this limitation on this appropriation, we are likely to cause some rulings or interpretations which would prevent the farmer from being paid funds which are due him now. If it is to be inserted in the bill, it should be inserted as applying on the program for next year, not to tie this program down by language which is not applicable to it, which no one clearly understands. I doubt whether any man living could now predict the effect this language might have on these payments.

We are not undertaking a new program, we are complying with the program which was announced to the farmer last December and on which the farmers signed worksheets before they planted their crops this year. Payments have to be made for this purpose, because that is the program which was announced, and if we are undertaking to control the program in the future, the language should be put at the bottom of page 69, in the committee provision affecting the program next year, because I do not know what would be construed to be incentive payments; the Senator from Maryland does not know, and no one else knows. The Senator knows what he has in mind, and I know what I have in mind, but when in an appropriation bill reported to the Senate we are defining something which has not been defined by statute, we are doing a very dangerous thing, because this program has many ramifications, and applies to many commodities throughout the country other than wheat, corn, and cotton.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am very glad the Senator made the explanation as lucidly as he has made it, as he always does explain a matter, because it was evident to me that there was a widespread feeling throughout the country that the purpose of the provision inserted in the bill by the House was to prevent the payment of the so-called subsidy payments. The use of the term "incentive payment" raised the question that is in the Senator's mind, which he has just presented to the Senate, that a soil-conservation payment is an incentive payment. But there is a deep-rooted and bitter antagonism in the Congress toward the payment of subsidies, or to the diversion of funds appropriated for specific purposes to pay subsidy payments, as a policy.

I have in mind that that was the motivating thought in the House when it put this provision into the bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield for one observation?

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to say that I did make inquiry as to whether there was going to be any undertaking to switch these funds from the purposes announced last December to any new purpose, and I was assured that no such idea was contemplated, that they would be used for the purposes announced when the Secretary announced the program last December.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator has answered my question. I could not see where there would be any authority, even if the House amendment were eliminated, to use for the payment of direct subsidies funds appropriated specifically for soil building and conservation purposes, and, in my humble judgment, if that is done, it will be an affront to the intent and will of the Congress, and without any authority of law. In view of the Senator's explanation, and the general understanding that these funds are not to be diverted in whole or in part, having gotten that from the administrative authorities, we might with some reasonable degree of assurance assume that the funds will not be used in the payment of direct subsidies for crops.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I would not undertake to say that not one dollar of this fund would be expended for what some might term a subsidy payment, but it will not be expended under the new program; it will be used in the program that was announced last December, before the submission of the extra Budget estimates for the so-called incentive payments, which were regarded as a direct subsidy. This program affects a great many commodities, and I am not advised as to how it all is to be applied, but I do know that it is to be applied only in conformity with the regular soil-conservation and domestic-allotment program that was announced by the Secretary last December, and that none of the money is to be diverted for any new purpose or any new program.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It has been suggested repeatedly this morning by the able Senator from Georgia, and I believe by the able Senator from Arkansas, that there would be some breaking of faith if we should not pass this appropriation bill with the $400,000,000 item in it. I should like to be advised upon what ground that statement is made. What assurance has Congress given that this appropriation would be made at this time?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I read the statute once, but I shall read it again. It appears in the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, and is the last section in it. After stating the payments which the Secretary may make, and the obligations he may incur for various purposes, for the planting of pasture land, range land, and for the planting of forests, and general soil-conservation practices, this language occurs:

Mr. REVERCOMB. But was not an appropriation made?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; I am reading the language of the obligations:

> The obligations incurred for the purpose of carrying out, for any calendar year, the provisions of section 590g, 590h, 590i, 590j, 590j–590n, of this title shall not exceed $500,000,000.

That is the language on which the Secretary relied for his authority. It may be a debatable question. I expressed it as my opinion that the Congress authorized the Secretary to promulgate the program. Any other Senator, of course, has a right to a contrary view.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does the Senator from Georgia hold that that would be a recurring obligation?

Mr. RUSSELL. For 6 years we have been making appropriations to fulfill the obligation. Congress has followed that policy for 6 years, and appropriated the full amount of payment to farmers that the Secretary has obligated. This is the first year any question has been raised concerning the authority of the Secretary.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does the Senator contend that there is a recurring obligation from year to year to appropriate $500,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. I certainly do, and I pointed out to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that it was my opinion that the only way that situation can be relieved is by repealing the statute, or by, as in this bill, limiting the amount to the appropriation for next year. I think this matter is similar to the provision with respect to appropriation of one-third of the customs receipts to the Department of Agriculture. That is done by permanent statute. There is not even an appropriation item in this bill carrying those funds, because 10 years ago Congress passed an act providing that one-third of the funds collected from customs receipts shall be paid over as a continuing appropriation to the Department of Agriculture for specific purposes. That item is not even in the bill. Yet the Senator says that Congress cannot authorize such matters. We have done it in that particular case. I think we had a right to do it in that case, and we have passed bills year after year which authorized the making of contractual obligations by various departments. It has run into the billions in authorizing contracts for ships as provided in one bill.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I must say in all candor to the Senator that I cannot follow his reasoning that when a statute is enacted providing that the Secretary of Agriculture may expend $500,000,000 under the law passed in that year——

Mr. RUSSELL. It says "obligate." It does not say "expend."

Mr. REVERCOMB. Obligate?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I cannot follow the Senator's reasoning that that would be a recurring obligation from year to year.

Mr. RUSSELL. That represents a difference of opinion. My viewpoint is that it is a recurring obligation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, on page 68, line 2, to strike out "$300,000,000" and insert "$400,000,000."

Mr. RUSSELL. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Green	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the time available for final passage of the bill is so short, and that its consideration in conference will be so involved, I think the Senate conferees are entitled to know the sentiment on this question. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays on the question of agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before the vote is taken, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he will inform me regarding one or two points.

Mr. RUSSELL. Certainly.

Mr. TYDINGS. As I understand, the $400,000,000 appropriation includes almost $200,000,000 which is to be paid to farmers for not producing more than their acreage allotment. Is my understanding correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not exactly correct. Some of the money is to be paid to farmers under the program which has been in effect. That provides for the limitation of acreage planted to some commodities.

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not talking about the program which has been in effect; but I think I am correct in stating that a large proportion of the money—upward of $200,000,000—is to be paid to farmers for not planting such crops on more than a certain amount of acreage on their farms. That is the rule in my State, and I think it is the rule in the Senator's State. So I understand that the program is to be used in part to restrict the production of certain crops; is that correct?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the only crops which are under marketing quotas at the present time are cotton and tobacco.

In the program this year, as I understand, there is no limitation on the acreage of wheat or corn which can be planted.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let us take cotton, alone. Is it not a fact that if a farmer plants only so much of his acreage in cotton he gets a part of the money, under the program, whereas, if he plants his acreage as he sees fit, to cotton, without limit to the acreage put in cotton, he does not get a part of the money?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is correct in part.

Mr. TYDINGS. The point is that those procedures are not soil-conservation processes. They involve nothing more than utilization of the money to restrict the acreage planted to certain crops. As I recall, even in Maryland, a farmer can plant only so much acreage in corn and only so much acreage in wheat, if he desires to receive a soil-conservation check.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is in error about that.

Mr. TYDINGS. I myself received this spring one of the questionnaires which had to be signed.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator got it on last year's payment and last year's crop, too.

Mr. TYDINGS. It showed how much was allowed to be planted in a certain crop; and if more than that acreage was planted in the crop, the payment would not be received. That is my recollection of the questionnaire.

Mr. RUSSELL. That procedure has been used.

Mr. TYDINGS. If that be true, there is no use in calling this program a soil-conservation program. It is a crop-limitation program, insofar as the money can be used for that purpose.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator can call it what he pleases. Of course, heretofore, last year, for example, under the program there were marketing quotas on wheat, cotton, tobacco, and rice.

Mr. TYDINGS. And corn.

Mr. RUSSELL. There were no marketing quotas on corn, and there never have been.

Mr. TYDINGS. I mean production quotas.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; production quotas; but they represented goals. There was no restriction on the planting by the individual farmer; he could plant all the corn he wished to plant.

Mr. TYDINGS. But if he did, could he receive the soil-conservation payments?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, if he planted a certain number of acres in cover crops and leguminous crops, and so forth. As to cotton, the quotas on cotton have not been lifted. There has been considerable discussion as to whether they should be lifted. They have been increased by 10 percent.

If a farmer who has a basic allotment of cotton does not plant that acreage to cotton, to enable that farmer to receive one of these payments out of the soil-conservation funds, it is necessary that he either plant the land which is not planted in cotton to the production of a leguminous or cover crop approved by the A. A. A. and plow that crop under, or that he plant the land to one of the essential food crops needed this year.

Mr. TYDINGS. If he plants it to an essential food crop, that is not soil conservation and soil-building practice, because in raising an essential food crop he takes substance out of the soil and does not put it back. I think it is only fair to say that a large part of this program was used to cut down the acreage of cotton as a national policy.

Mr. RUSSELL. Not only cotton, but wheat.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was not used primarily as a soil-building and conservation measure. I do not believe it is fair to confuse the two appropriations, one of which attempts to limit production of certain commodities on the farm, and then call that a soil-conservation program, because the land taken out of one crop is often put into another crop which is just as injurious to the soil as was the previous crop.

Mr. RUSSELL. It may not be fair to call it a soil-conservation appropriation, but all these payments have been embraced under this head, which is the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, ever since that statute was enacted by the Congress.

Mr. TYDINGS. What does the Senator mean by "domestic allotment"?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is the allotment program to which the Senator refers. Payments have been made for those practices for the past 6 years. There is no difference in the character of the payments which are made to cotton producers this year, as compared with those which have been made for the past 6 years. The difference in the case of the wheat producer is that the restrictions on the marketing of his wheat have been entirely removed this year, whereas he was under restrictions last year.

Mr. TYDINGS. That may be true; but I still maintain that with an appropriation of $300,000,000 there is ample money for the soil-conservation program, and that during the war the Congress ought to discontinue the limitations on production which we used to cut down surpluses. That was the purpose of them. That was why we appropriated the money. There was a tremendous surplus of some commodities on the agricultural market. A great many of those surpluses are being whittled down. Some have disappeared; but under the guise of soil conservation we are continuing a program devised primarily to cut down surpluses, when it is not soil conservation at all. In my humble judgment, if we appropriate $300,000,000 there will be sufficient money available to carry out the soil-conservation program in accordance with the commitments made by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, if we are referring to the funds expended by farmers by soil-conservation practices, $197,000,000 would cover that. That has nothing to do with this question. For 6 years we have carried on this program under the same act, the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. No question has been raised heretofore about any division of funds. It is all on the same work sheet which the farmer signs, which is similar to those which he has signed in years gone by.

The Senator has referred to cotton. I am always a bit hesitant about discussing cotton on the floor of the Senate, because naturally I have a basic interest in cotton as a commodity produced in my State. However, I wish to say, in all fairness to the cotton producers who receive these almost infinitesimal payments, that if the Senator from Maryland or anyone else had to buy seed out of his own pocket and sow his land with leguminous crops, and then turn those crops under before he could receive the little payment, which in many cases amounts to not more than three or four dollars, he would feel that he had earned it, and that there was no absolute grant or gift for taking the land out of cultivation, because he must devote the land which he takes out of cotton production either to a soil-building crop or, this year, to such crops as peanuts. We have a shortage of approximately 1,000,000,000 pounds of vegetable oils.

It does not make any difference whether the crop be cotton, corn, tobacco, wheat, or rice, or whether the farmer be a grain farmer or a dairy farmer. It is not fair to him to change the rules after the game starts, and after the program was announced in December. It is not fair for us to say, when the time comes to make the appropriation, that we are going to change the rules because Congress has changed its mind as to what is a soil-conserving practice.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer an interruption?

Mr. RUSSELL. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be a great mistake for the Senate to alter this important agricultural program in the midst of war. This Nation has been most profligate in the development of its natural resources. We have sacrificed our timber, until in more recent times when we have made an effort, by the expenditure of huge sums of money, to check the sacrifice of our timber resources by bringing about more scientific methods of cutting the timber. We have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in reforestation.

The loss of our timber assets was more spectacular than the loss of our soil resources; but it does not require an expert to travel through the areas of this country which have been longest under cultivation, to see that the apprehensions which Thomas Jefferson felt when he saw how the soil was being wasted and eroded have come to pass.

It is estimated that we are losing annually 3,000,000,000 tons of topsoil in this country through erosion. In short, we have been mining our soil resources; and the older areas of cultivation in this country all bear visible testimony to the fact that we have been mining the soil.

Mr. President, some effort has been made in the past few minutes to indicate that this program is devoted in part to the purpose of curtailing production. That is true only in a limited sense. How could we ever get any soil conservation and rebuilding of the assets which have been mined out of the soil unless we diverted some of the acreage which has been planted for generations in cotton to some type of crop which would restore nitrogen and fertility to the soil?

If Senators have been in certain areas of the South, they have seen entire counties eroded beyond any hope of redemption. If they have traveled through New England, they have seen the result of the resettlement programs of the past. In New England the soil was mined, and today farms are abandoned.

We solved our resettlement problems in the past because we had a vast public domain, and once farms became infertile as a result of erroneous and profligate practices in their cultivation, the oncoming generation of younger men and women could move back, take new soil, and repeat the process. It has been only within recent years that we have come to understand that unless we conserve our soil resources, unless we restore the fertility of the millions of acres from which it has been taken, the ultimate fate of civilization in this country will be the same as that of civilizations of the past which have gone down because they have not conserved their soil. The cradle of civilization is now a virtual desert. Go to China, or read about China; study the history of China, and see what has happened to the millions of Chinese as the result of the wastage of their soil resources.

Mr. President, insofar as the curtailment of the acreage of cotton is concerned, I believe it is a tragedy that it has not been further reduced and some effort made to convert those acres to the production of food which the people of this Nation will need vitally before this war is over. As a matter of fact, I fear that the people will go hungry in this country next winter, not because they do not have money with which to buy food, but because the money which they possess, and the rationing coupons which they have in their books, will not permit them to secure the delivery of the food which they require.

The farmer has been a much-abused member of society ever since this war began. It has been "open season" on the farmer. I think it is high time that we reverse that policy and realize that unless we have adequate food and fiber essential to the war effort, the prodigious strides which we have made in the production of war materials may turn out to have been a futile endeavor; for I say that in total war we not only have to maintain the dietary standards of those in the armed services, but we have to maintain the dietary standards and furnish the food to the people who are supplying the materials for the fighting forces to use against our enemies.

What has been the attitude and policy of the Government, Mr. President? It has been to turn to industry and say, "Produce the goods—we care not what the cost. We will provide you with a contract providing for a return on your managerial contribution, but your costs may be whatever shall be necessary."

The slogan "Produce the goods regardless of cost" has been, figuratively speaking, the policy of Government insofar as industry has been concerned. But, so far as the farmer is concerned, Mr. President, he has been turned upon in this situation if he asked for a price which would represent his cost of production and his labor. He has been denounced as an individual seeking to enrich himself at the expense of the rest of society in this war effort.

I believe a very unfortunate psychological effect was produced in the farming communities of this country as a result of the address made by the President of the United States on last Labor Day. I do not think the farm communities have yet recovered from that psychological situation. However, I know of nothing which would contribute more to the demoralization of the farmers at this time than to have Congress now turn its back upon an obligation which the farmers entered into in good faith and which they now expect the Government to discharge.

Yesterday afternoon the Senate passed a huge appropriation bill providing $24,500,000,000 for the Navy in an hour and 20 minutes. No one strained at that camel. It went through the eye of the Senate without any difficulty. But, what would have been the effect upon the contractors who heretofore had entered into contractural relations with the Government and had not yet been paid if a proviso had been added stating that no contractor was to receive any money out of this appropriation in excess of 75 cents on each dollar the Government owed him? Does any Senator believe that would have had a good effect upon the morale of industry and labor? That, Mr. President, in essence is what is being proposed now. The farmers of this country had every right to assume in good faith that the Government of the United States and the Congress would provide the farmer with the necessary means to carry out the program announced by the Secretary of Agriculture under existing law, and for which the Congress over a period of not less than 6 years had never failed to provide.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does the Senator from Wisconsin believe that an appropriation of $300,000,000 will not fully take care of the undertakings made to the farmer?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I certainly do. I am advised that $400,000,000 is the minimum amount which can be appropriated by the Congress to carry out the program which was announced by the Secretary of Agriculture and which the farmers of the country participating in the program have translated into individual work sheets for every acre of the farm they own.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Have those obligations been incurred?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think they have been incurred. I think that when the Secretary of Agriculture, acting under a law which was passed by Congress 6 years ago, stated that he had the power to make obligations and announced a program to the farmers, and the farmers in turn translated that program into work sheets covering the acreage of the farms which they owned, I think a moral obligation was assumed, and I think that the Congress of the United States has a moral obligation to carry it out.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. My question to the Senator is: Has the program gone so far in being carried out that the $300,000,000 will not cover it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In my opinion it has. In practically every section of the country I know anything about, although the season is tragically late, dangerously late, I may say ominously late, most of the farmers have already planted their crops, or are preparing to do so, and have purchased their seed and made all their arrangements for obtaining fertilizer, in those instances where they could obtain it, and they have planned their entire program for this year. If the Senator can show me a farmer in the United States of America who has not made his plans for the 1943 season, I will say that such farmer does not know anything about his business.

Mr. REVERCOMB. What about the item of purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers? Does the Senator believe that obligation is one which has been carried through to the point that we shall have to increase this appropriation by $100,000,000?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is a provision in this item for administrative expenses. The Senator well knows that no program can be administered unless there is money spent for administering it. The program under the House bill would amount to $300,000,000.

Under the program as laid down by the Secretary of Agriculture it would amount to $400,000,000. Certainly no man can be so naive as to assume that sum of money could be handled and a very substantial portion of it paid out to individual farmers in the United States of America in the form of checks drawn after they had fulfilled obligations worked out on their worksheets, and checked, without the expenditure of some money for the administration of the program.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate very much the remarks concerning soil conservation. The people of Nebraska are interested in that subject just as much as those who live in the Southern and New England States. We want to do all we can to produce and preserve more food. I should like to propound a question. Does the Senator believe that the provision in question which runs through the Triple A has in reality resulted in the increased production of food?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In my opinion, it has accomplished greatly in the increased fertility of the soil and in checking the erosion of the soil. I could take the Senator into my own State, which was one of the 43 States—indeed I think Wisconsin was one of the first States to enact legislation providing for the creation of a soil-conservation system—and travel with him over miles and miles of highway, if I could get the gasoline for the purpose, and show him the most amazing evidences of the value of the soil-conservation program. The State of Wisconsin is usually thought of as a State not subject to much soil erosion, because it is a great dairy State; but even in that great dairy State, Mr. President, the soil-conservation program has accomplished wonders in checking the erosion of soil and in bringing about renewed and increased fertility of soil which had already been eroded.

I have traveled, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, in the South, where I have seen the marvelous work which has been accomplished there in an area where erosion of the soil was much further advanced because of its long-time devotion to the cultivation of two principal soil-depleting crops, namely, cotton and tobacco.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Aside from conservation and production, which the Senator says have been increased—and I am inclined to agree with him—during the past half dozen years we have had in force a restricted agricultural policy; we have paid millions upon millions of dollars to farmers to take land out of production. Now we are confronted with a food situation referred to by the Senator, which will result, I think, in starvation in many places in this country before another year has passed. Yet during all these years, right up to February, this administration has adopted a policy of economic scarcity, and has paid the farmers millions of dollars to take land out of production, when it should have been paying them to produce the foods which are so badly needed. I should like to know if the $300,000,000 appropriation will increase the food supply. Is the farmer going to be allowed to produce all the food he can produce on his land? That is what I should like to have the Senator answer.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Let me respond to the Senator from Nebraska and then I shall yield.

In the first place, I will say to the Senator—and I have previously discussed this matter with him—that I supported the Triple A program in this body because I saw no other alternative to meet the problem confronting the farmer during the years of depression when the buying power of the people of this country was at a low ebb and there were great crop surpluses. I personally was committed originally to the so-called McNary-Haugen program, and it has always been my belief that if the two Republican Presidents who vetoed that measure had seen fit to let it become law we might have avoided much of the difficulty and not have fallen so deep into the depression which we experienced.

I may say further that in the program of growing more food, more agricultural products, the Senator must bear in mind that some of these commodities are not edible—cotton, for example. To my mind, as I stated a moment ago, more cotton acreage should have been curtailed this year than was curtailed. I think that every possible resource of Government should have been properly utilized to produce more foodstuffs upon some of the acreage now devoted to the production of fibers. I know that there are certain vested interests which find it difficult to make such a conversion, but I make the prediction, Mr. President, that by the time the 1st of next January rolls around we will bitterly regret that there was not further curtailment of cotton production and a greater production of foodstuffs which would be available to the people of this country and to the fighting forces.

Therefore, I cannot answer the Senator by saying that it was a mistake to curtail all commodities. In trying to mobilize the Nation for production of food for war, Mr. President, a most careful plan has to be laid down in order to provide the commodities necessary to feed our armed forces, to meet our lend-lease commitments, and to feed the civilian population of the United States.

I think that when next winter rolls around we will be criticized because there was not more and better planning, because there were not more and better devices utilized to stimulate production of the commodities which we so vitally need. I say that we are not moving in the direction of stimulating the farmers who are already laboring under all the handicaps any producer could suffer.

Do you realize, Mr. President, that the farmers are short of labor? Do you realize that they are short of machinery? Do you realize that they are short of the ordinary supplies the farmer must have from day to day, from week to week and from month to month? Do you realize that they have to go through enough red tape and paper forms to discourage a Philadelphia lawyer in order to get the essentials to their production?

Do we want now, Mr. President, on top of all the difficulties and all the trouble the farmer has experienced, and all the abuse he has received, to turn our backs on an obligation entered into so far as the farmer was concerned last December and pay him only 75 cents of what the Congress stated he would be paid? If any Senator wants to take that position, Mr. President, I want it to be taken on the record, so that I can read it next winter when people are hungry.

Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. TAFT, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. REVERCOMB addressed the Chair.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have concluded.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that soil conservation has been a neglected subject in this country, and one that we should pursue both in peace and in war, but I will point out, if the Senator will bear with me, that I think he has been tilting at a windmill when he calls this program a soil-conservation program. As the best evidence is always the law itself, let me read from the law to illustrate my point that a great deal of this program has nothing to do with soil conservation at all. It was a crop limitation program, in part, to get rid of the surpluses which were cluttering up the American agricultural market and had not a single, solitary ounce of soil conservation in it from A to Z. For example, I hold the act in my hand——

Mr. BANKHEAD. What is the act to which the Senator refers?

Mr. TYDINGS. A compliation of soil-conservation and domestic allotment acts brought up to January 2, 1942.

The funds available for payment shall be allotted among the commodities produced with respect to which payments or grants are to be computed.

What were they? They were wheat, cotton, corn, and two or three other commodities. They were to be paid upon their acreage production.

I have informed myself as to how much of this appropriation would go for soil conservation and how much would go for acreage curtailment of one kind or another. The over-all figure is only half of it, so $200,000,000 would be utilized in the field of soil conservation, and the remainder would be used under the domestic-allotment plan, which is a plan to cut down surpluses.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does that mean that the remainder of the fund will be used to keep acres idle and not productive?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I would not want to say that, but it means that as to certain crops, taking prior years as a yardstick, if a farmer raised more than a certain amount of the designated crops, he would get no payment from the Federal Government. If he raised so much or less, he would get a payment. Again putting on the stand the best evidence, which is the law itself, let me read that section so that there will be no dispute about it. How are these allotment plans fixed for the designated crops?

1. The average acreage planted to the various commodities for the 10 years, 1928 to 1937, adjusted for abnormal weather and other conditions, including acreage diverted from production under the agricultural adjustment and soil-conservation program.

That is one of the measures.

2. The value of the parity prices of the production for the allotted acres of the various commodities for the year with respect to which the payment is made.

The value of the thing determines it. If wheat is selling at a high price, the farmer gets less. The Government wants him to produce more. If it is selling at a low price, it wants him to raise less of it. So that there is not any conservation in this.

I agree thoroughly with the conservation observations made by the Senator from Wisconsin. I am not taking issue in those matters. I say it is continuing in the bill, the philosophy of scarcity, and no one can successfully deny it, because I have read the yardstick, and that is the law under which the Secretary of Agriculture must administer the program.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. In a moment I shall yield to the Senator from Ohio.

I agree with the Senator from Wisconsin that there is a shortage of food; I agree with the Senator that we should produce more food if possible; but this does not assure that more food will be produced, does it?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes, I think it does.

Mr. TYDINGS. Why?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Because, in the first place, it would not be at all possible to get farmers to stop producing in part a crop, such as cotton, for example, unless there were some way of offering them an inducement.

Mr. TYDINGS. But the Senator's own argument, if I understood it rightly, was that they would take land out of cotton and put it into soil-building crops, which are not food.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Oh, yes; some of the soil-building crops do produce food. Soybeans, for example, are soil-building food.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And we are greatly in need of edible fats.

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The people of this country are going to be very short of edible fats, which are essential for the maintenance of human energy.

Mr. TYDINGS. I agree with that statement.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. We cannot expect to convert crops which are not useful to the war effort, or crops which are depleting the soil of the country, unless it is made possible to offer some inducement to the farmers to make such conversion.

Mr. TYDINGS. Offering an inducement to switch over from producing one kind of a crop to another and call it soil conservation?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But it is soil conservation.

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment, if the Senator will allow me to prove that it is not soil conservation.

First of all, outside one or two crops which put nitrogen into the soil—and the accepted mode of soil conservation is for green fertilizer to be applied to crops, clover, and so forth, as well as commercial fertilizer—the farmers of the South are being asked to raise potatoes and other foods which are not soil-conservation crops. Producing potatoes takes substance out of the soil. So that in the main, while there may be a case here and there in which the change does produce the planting of a soil-conservation crop, such as soybeans, or other forms of nitrogen-building legumes, in the main under this program the farmers simply go from one crop to another crop which utilizes the fertility of the soil, which is not soil conservation at all, and the language of the law proves it.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. My complaint is that there has not been more acreage diverted from cotton. It is my understanding, and I should like to be corrected if I am wrong, that in the South this year the emphasis has been laid upon the crops which produce things necessary to the war effort, but which at the same time are soil-conservation crops.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator is Roman riding, he is on two horses. They are essential to the war effort.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; but they help build the soil.

Mr. TYDINGS. They do not. When a farmer plants corn, when he plants potatoes, when he plants things of that character, they do not help build the soil, they take substance out of the soil.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But the edible fats do help build up the soil. The Senator is not familiar with the facts if he does not know that there is a prodigious program now going on in this country for increased production of edible oils and fats.

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course I know that.

Mr. TAFT. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Let me suggest that the greatest of the oil-producing crops is peanuts, and that peanuts exhaust the soil possibly as much as any crop which is raised.

Mr. TYDINGS. Take cotton itself, which produces one of the finest oils and cattle feeds of which one can conceive. Cottonseed meal and oil are not only essential for farmers generally, outside the cotton areas, but they are utilized in the production of any number of munitions which are vital to the war. There are all kinds of what I think are called lintels, which come off the seed which are used in one of the operations in the production of explosives, and are in tremendous demand by the War Department today, far beyond the ability of the farmers of this country to produce.

Returning to the matter which is at issue in connection with the bill, it is a fallacy, it is pure sophistry, to call this a soil-conservation program, when the definition of the law itself, which binds the Secretary of Agriculture, provides for the limitation of certain crops, of which, as every Senator knows, there was a surplus which had so far depressed the market for those crops—cotton and wheat and corn at one time—that the farmer could not sell them and recover the cost of production.

Mr. President, the day of that condition is past; it is fading into twilight and into night. We are in a period now when we need to conserve our soil, it is true, and we shall support appropriations designed for that purpose, but we are also in a period when, as the Senator from Wisconsin has said, we need food, and the program we are discussing is nothing more nor less than an indirect way, if it is properly followed, of producing foods, switching from one crop to another, and it is not a soil-building and conservation program in all its ramifications.

I wish to apologize to the Senator from Ohio, because he rose twice and I promised to yield to him, but in the heat of the debate I forgot to do so. I am willing to yield at any time.

Mr. TAFT. I only desire to call attention to the testimony before the committee, which apparently supports the Senator's viewpoint. I refer to the testimony of Mr. O'Neal, the head of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which appears on page 725 of the hearings. He said:

> It is our conviction that additional Treasury funds are not needed to assume maximum productions in 1943. On the contrary, substantial reductions in last year's figures for some appropriation items can be made, and we believe such reductions will be helpful in the war effort.
>
> * * * * *
> In line with these principles, we therefore recommend that this committee—
> Approve House provisions continuing Agricultural Adjustment Administration and limiting appropriations to $300,000,000 solely for soil-building and water-conservation practice payments and administrative expenses.

I take it that the head of the American Farm Bureau Federation is making exactly the same distinction the Senator is making.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct, and not only that, but I understand the Grange took the same position.

Mr. TAFT. Soil-building and water-conservation practice payments are those which are made directly for conservation purposes. But apparently it is desired to eliminate entirely the other class of payments, which in fact are restrictive payments.

I wish to make one other observation on that matter. It seems to me that if the American Farm Bureau Federation, probably having more farmers in its membership than any other organization in the country, says the appropriation should be reduced to $300,000, they cannot be thinking we are violating any promise made to any farmer who is a member of the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the Senator's logic is unassailable. I cannot speak for the farmers of America, because my acquaintance with them, as every other Senator's must be, is limited, but I have read in numerous newspapers and certain farm magazines, and through their own accredited representatives I have heard, that they think the time has come when this part of the old program should be reviewed and eliminated wherever it can be done without injuring the war effort.

Mr. REVERCOMB, Mr. WHERRY, and Mr. AIKEN addressed the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia, who rose first, and then I shall be glad to yield to other Senators.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I may say to the Senator from Maryland and also to the Senator from Wisconsin that I have been very much impressed by the argument with respect to raising more food crops. That is very essential to the United States in time of war. But I may also point out that as recently as November of last year the Secretary of Agriculture in the Wickard case, pressed before the courts, placed a penalty upon an Indiana farmer for raising too much wheat in time of war.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the Senator took the words out of my mouth.

Mr. REVERCOMB. To me it is an abominable circumstance that in this country in time of war, when we need the food, when we acknowledge that we need it, when we know that we need it, the Secretary of Agriculture is vested with the power of placing a penalty upon a farmer for raising a needed crop such as wheat.

Mr. TYDINGS. A farmer living in Carroll County, a neighboring county to mine, a law-abiding man who tries to farm well and does farm well, but who was not conversant with the law, was confronted when he was ready to sell his wheat with a penalty of over $500. He wrote to me about the matter, and I felt somewhat humiliated and ashamed to tell him that I had at least indirectly and somewhat unwittingly been a party to that sort of transaction.

Before I yield to the Senator from Nebraska, let me read four lines at the end—I will not read the intermediate part—of the act to prove what the Senator from Wisconsin has so clearly stated:

> Provided, That farm average allotments shall be made for wheat in 1938, but in determining compliance wheat shall be considered in the group with other crops for which special acreage allotments are not made.

Mr. President, why bring wheat in merely for the year 1938? If this is a soil-building and a conservation program, why not leave wheat in for all time? The truth of the matter is, however, as every Senator knows, that in that year it was supposed that there would be a carry-over and a surplus together which would depress the price of wheat; so this program was used to curtail the production of wheat, not for soil-conservation purposes, but so that the price of wheat perhaps would rise to such a point that the farmer could receive a fair price for it. That is all right, but let us call it by its true name. Let us not call it soil conservation, and let us not have it now if we do not need it now. The truth is we now need all the food of every kind we can get.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator now yield to me?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. In other words, the carrying out of the act as originally passed resulted in the benefits with respect to soil conservation which the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] has mentioned, but if we continue to invoke it for the purpose for which it was created, to place limitations on crops, would not that tend to increase the price all the way along the line?

Mr. TYDINGS. I think the deduction might be drawn in line with the Senator's statement.

Mr. WHERRY. Further, what we want to do is produce all the food we can. Is that not true?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. In my State, we really grow corn. I am not familiar with cotton, but I know something about corn, and I know something about wheat. I know that up to February of this year, if a farmer planted only a wheat crop, and did not in furtherance of the war effort plant some other crops with which we are not familiar in Nebraska, he was penalized on his wheat crop. I went to the office of the Secretary of Agriculture and had a talk with him. I am sure he told me that there were no restrictions now on anything we wanted to grow. If that is true, and I think it ought to be true because the Secretary is well informed, is there any limitation in this act? For what, if anything, are we paying this money aside from soil conservation?

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not compulsory, but there is a limitation, because the Secretary of Agriculture can promulgate regulations providing that if a farmer plants more than a certain portion of his farm to a given crop he shall not receive any benefit.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes, that is the interpretation I place on the language, and therefore, there is still a restriction or limitation on planting wheat and corn.

Mr. TYDINGS. At least indirectly it is implied in the law.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. It is implied in the law. I wish to say that I stated in February that what we need is food, and that we should remove the restrictions with respect to these crops, and if we were to pay the farmer anything we should pay him to produce, and not pay him for not producing essentials we shall need.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I had not intended to rise again, but I did so because I felt that the Senator from Wisconsin had misinterpreted my position, which was not in opposition to soil conservation, but to the utilization of so-called soil-conservation funds for the purpose of limiting agricultural production quite apart from soil-conservation practices.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. BYRD. Reference was made a short while ago to the American Farm Bureau Federation. The American Farm Bureau Federation is on record as supporting the House amount of $300,000,000. I simply wish to say a word with respect to the American Farm Bureau Federation. I have not always agreed with it, but it is the greatest farm organization in America. Fortune Magazine recently took a poll to determine which of the farm organizations had the largest membership. Of all organized farmers the American Farm Bureau Federation had 60 percent. Of the high income farmers the Federation had 60 percent. Of all the medium-income farmers who were organized the Federation had 61 percent. Of the low-income farmers the Federation had 48 percent. The next highest organization was the Grange, which agrees with the Federation in this instance.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I should like to know when the Grange agreed to it. I listened very closely to the hearings and no such statement was made.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is true. Mr. O'Neal spoke for both the Grange and the Farm Bureau Federation, but the Senator will recall that Mr. Goss was there that day——

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Goss of the Grange?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; and some others; I do not know how many, but I think they took the position that Mr. O'Neal had stated the case, and they did not identify themselves.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Goss appeared before the committee in his own right.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I withdraw the statement. The Senator may be correct. I do not wish to take advantage by stating something, no matter how sincerely I am doing it, which may not be accurate.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the point I wish to make is that it is inconceivable to me that the American Farm Bureau Federation would advocate something which is charged to be a breach of faith with the farmers of the country. I cannot conceive that to be true, because the American Farm Bureau Federation is directly responsible to the 60 percent of the organized farmers who constitute the membership of that organization. The federation held local meetings. What was decided at these meetings was carried up to State conventions, and the judgment expressed by Mr. O'Neal in Washington is the judgment which comes from the grass roots all over the country. So I must take issue with Senators who contend that we are breaking faith with the farmers, simply because we propose to reduce the appropriation from $400,000,000 to $300,000,000. I think the Senator from Maryland will agree with me when I say that no official of this Government has the right to bind Congress as to any specific appropriation in future years.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thank the Senator, and I shall conclude with three or four brief observations. The first is that the trouble with the farmer does not lie in whether this measure shall be passed. It lies in the great imponderables which always arise in time of war or when war is imminent—shortage of labor, shortage of fertilizer, shortage of machinery, shortage of transportation, the concomitants of war on a total scale. That is the farmer's trouble, and we cannot legislate for those things back on the farm by the appropriation of money.

The second thing is that prices and wages have been bound up into one general formula by the passage of the O. P. A. Act, the War Stabilization Act, and so forth. It is not good government now indirectly to pay a subsidy to any group working for the war effort any more than it would be fair to pay from the Federal Treasury a subsidy to coal miners or shipyard workers or automobile workers or any other group. If we adopt such a policy, quite apart from the national problem of soil conservation, we might find that it will establish a precedent, and the precedent may be used sooner or later, if the war continues sufficiently long, by the workers to ask for equality of treatment and to request that they also be allowed a subsidy, particularly those groups that perhaps have a better case than some of the more highly paid groups now have.

Finally, I am for the soil-conservation program, as I believe the Congress is as a unit, and as I believe the country is as a unit; but I think we have outlived the policy—certainly during the war—of the philosophy of scarcity. I think we have reached the time when, if we want crops of a certain kind produced, we should adopt some other methods than one which was created to relieve the depression, if we tell the truth, because it is the Siamese twin of the old, original Agricultural Adjustment Act, which was knocked out by the Supreme Court and was revamped to fit the Court's objections insofar as they could be met.

So, Mr. President, in my humble judgment, if the appropriation is reduced to $300,000,000, first, no considerable group of farmers in the country will object; second, an economy, and a deserved economy, of $100,000,000 will be effected; third, the entire soil-conservation program will not be hurt one iota; and, fourth, an inequality created to help a particular group in a period of depression, the depression since having disappeared, will have been eliminated, as it should be eliminated, as we approach more normal times and more normal prices in the field of agriculture, and particularly as to the crops for which the plan was created.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in conclusion. I cannot agree with the Senator from Maryland or other Senators who take the position that we can obtain soil conservation and a rebuilding of our soil without having a diversion for the one-crop areas. All that the Senator from Maryland or any other Senator has to do is to travel by train—he does not even have to travel by automobile—through the cotton areas of the South, to see the effect on the soil of producing only one crop for generation after generation.

We can obtain a diversion, a change in the practices of the farmers, in only two ways: First, by offering the farmers an inducement, which this program attempts to do; and, second, by compulsion, which, in my opinion, would be unconstitutional. I say that any man is blind, indeed, who cannot now go through the South or through any other agricultural area of the country and see what has been accomplished by the appropriation of this money. We could not have gotten the cotton farmers, the corn farmers, the wheat farmers, or the tobacco farmers—the one-crop producers—to adopt any soil-conservation practices unless we had offered them an inducement to do so. That meant a curtailment of the acreage planted to the soil-depleting crops which they had normally and historically produced. If we had not changed that historical basis, we should not have accomplished anything in the way of bringing about soil conservation in the one-crop producing areas of the United States.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me it is to fail to understand the whole theory upon which the program was based, to think that we can divorce soil conservation from the curtailment of acreage planted to crops which are soil-depleting in character. On each farm, on each plantation, there must be made and carried out year after year a program of changing the historical and past practices of the farm owner or plantation owner, and inducing him to curtail the production of certain soil-depleting crops, and to put the acreage into the production of soil-building and soil-conserving crops.

I say that this program has bearing, both direct and indirect, upon food production. I say furthermore that if we go back on the program which was laid down, the farmers of the country will have a right to believe that we have repudiated a moral obligation which they thought we had authorized the Secretary of Agriculture to enter into on our behalf with them; and they will feel that we have repudiated that moral obligation and have agreed to pay them only 75 cents on the dollar of the obligation which our agent incurred.

CONFIRMATION OF COAST GUARD GRADUATES

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I have in my hand a list of Coast Guard cadets who will graduate tomorrow at 11 o'clock, and it is desired that they shall receive their commissions at the time of the graduation, which is the regular order. Therefore I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that I may report the list sent down by the President of the nomination of cadets to be ensigns in the Coast Guard, to rank from the 9th day of June, and I also ask unanimous consent that the Senate consider the nominations at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nominations be considered en bloc, and confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc.

Mr. BAILEY. I ask that the President be notified forthwith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified of the confirmations.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATIONS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2481) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1944, and for other purposes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the debate on the pending amendment has probably covered most of the questions which might arise; but I think certain things which have been said should be clarified. References have been made, particularly by the Senator from Maryland, to the Domestic Allotment Act, in his effort to show that not all these payments are strictly soil-conservation payments. I am ready to agree that not all the payments are made directly for what might be termed soil-conserving practices. But the two programs—that under the Domestic Allotment Act by which we sought to provide what was referred to as the "ever-normal granary" and the soil conservation program—have gone hand in hand in this program, and it is impossible to perform a feat of surgery and to separate one from the other. They are both integral and component parts of the same general program.

Much of the debate which has taken place on this problem would seem to me to be rather far from the question. The point was that the Secretary of Agriculture had undertaken to penalize a wheat farmer who had produced more than his allotment under the program last year. Last year was the only year the wheat farmers have been under marketing quotas. I merely desire to point out that in attempting to enforce that law the Secretary of Agriculture was conforming to the dictates of the Congress. On the question of whether the statute is a good one or a bad one, the responsibility rests upon the Congress of the United States, not upon any individual; because the Secretary of Agriculture was directed by law to enforce that act of Congress.

Mr. President, I should like to point out further that none of the marketing quotas is ever placed in effect upon any commodity until it has been approved by the vote of two-thirds of the producers of the commodity, at elections duly held and supervised by farmers. Under the law passed by Congress, no quotas can be imposed, no farmer can be prosecuted, no limitation can be made in the acreage, unless two-thirds of the producers of the commodity so determine at the polls, in an election duly called in each agricultural county for that purpose. As a matter of fact, at the present time there is no limitation whatever upon the production of corn, there is no limitation whatever upon the production of wheat, there is no limitation whatever upon the production of rice—the three products which are regarded as the basic commodities at the present time. On the contrary, the program announced by the Secretary of Agriculture this year, that to which the farmers have responded, and as a result of which I contend that the appropriation should be made in full, was not designed to restrict or curtail production; but, by the express terms of the Secretary's announcement, it was designed to increase the production of the foods of which there is such a shortage in this country today as to cause some persons to be apprehensive lest we shall have a famine.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand a press release of the Department of Agriculture, issued on December 5, 1942, promulgating the program of the Department for the current year. It is the program upon which 6,000,000 farmers have already acted, and as to which an appropriation of $400,000,000 will be required in order to fulfill the obligations of the Government. I read the announcement:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ANNOUNCES THE AGRICULTURAL ADJUSTMENT AGENCY'S 1943 ADJUSTMENT PAYMENT RATES

Rates of payment to farmers cooperating with the crop-production adjustment phase of the Agricultural Adjustment Agency's 1943 war program were announced today by the United States Department of Agriculture.

Farmers may earn these production adjustment payments in 1943 by complying with their Agricultural Adjustment Agency's acreage allotments for corn, wheat, cotton, rice, tobacco, and peanuts, at the same time meeting individual farm-production goals for special war crops. Following out the Department's policy of full production of all crops needed in the war, severe deductions will be made from each farm's total crop payments in 1943 for failure to plant at least 90 percent of an acreage allotment and 90 percent of a special war-crop goal.

There are no restrictions in this announcement. There is the requirement that the goal for the production of war crops shall be met before the payments shall be made. I continue to read:

This provision is intended to encourage farmers to make full use of their available land. In many instances, farmers will be encouraged to substitute special war crops for allotment crops, especially for wheat and cotton. After farmers first meet their 90 percent special war-crop acreage requirement, they may take any special war-crop acreage above this figure and substitute it acre for acre for allotment crops in meeting the latter's 90-percent planting provision.

In other words, unless 90 percent of the allotment were planted to the crops needed in the war effort, payments to the farmer would be reduced.

In addition to the crop-production adjustment payment described above, farmers also will be able to earn a production practice—or conservation—payment by carrying out specified agricultural practices which improve soil, help prevent erosion, and increase yields of needed war crops. Since these conservation rates vary by regions and States, they are being announced by State Agricultural Adjustment Agency committees.

Mr. President, how in the world is it possible for any Senator to segregate the payments which are made for soil-conservation practices from those which are made for the production of war crops? Today there are no payments conditioned upon the reduction of acreage for any food product. The only payments which are made which are conditioned upon reduction of acreage are those made to producers of cotton and tobacco, and under this program they may plant up to 90 percent of their allotment, either in cotton or tobacco, or in a war food crop; and they must plant the war food crop acreage required of them before they are entitled to payment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. In the South, for example, or in the great burley tobacco-producing areas, how in the world could a single acre in those areas ever be utilized for the production of things needed for food in time of war except by getting the farmers not to plant as many acres of cotton or tobacco as they planted last year, and persuading them to plant the crops we need?

Mr. RUSSELL. It would have been impossible to produce such crops without guaranteeing the price from some other source or instituting a program of this kind under the Domestic Allotment and Adjustment Act.

We have for the moment the controversy as to whether or not the Secretary is legally authorized to make these commitments to the farmers. I wish to discuss this question for a moment from the standpoint of good morals and ethics, and what the Congress should do in this situation.

Whether the Secretary has the legal right to make these commitments or not, they have been made year after year for the past 6 years; and the announcement which he has made has been the yardstick followed by Congress in making appropriations to meet these obligations. For 6 years farmers have gone into their county A. A. A. offices, and worked out their program. They have computed the payments which they would receive in December, and the Congress has made the appropriations and the payments have been made.

This year it is proposed to say to the farmer, "You have done your work; Congress has supported the operations of the Secretary of Agriculture for 6 years; but now we are going to refuse to do so. We are going to pay you with 75-cent dollars."

Whether it is legal, or whether we are quibbling over technicalities or not, I say it would be a breach of good faith and morals for Congress to deny payments to the farmers, who in many instances have gone down into their own pockets and expended their own funds for seed and for conservation practices which were required of them in order to earn these payments.

There is no way on earth to divide this program and say, "This is soil conservation, and that is domestic allotment." If this law is wrong, the Congress ought to change it. If the Secretary has not the right, or should not have the right, to incur obligations for payments under these acts, the Congress should so declare by legislation. However, after the crop has been fixed and the farmer has spent his money in following out the program and checking with his county office as to what he is to receive, after he has already incurred expenditures and put forth his labor and sweat in the fields to conform to the practices, we should not say, "We are not going to make the payments because, forsooth, some of this money has been spent for something that was not a soil-conservation practice."

It would be unfair, unjust, and immoral to take this money away from the farmers, wherever they may be, whether or not the program measures up to what Senators may think is a strictly soil-conservation program. If we wish to adjust this matter we should do it for next year. We should not, after the farmer has acted in good faith, attempt to reduce the appropriation and deny him the payments which he has honestly earned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 68, line 2, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 2, after the word "newspapers", it is proposed to strike out "$300,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$400,000,000."

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I was authorized by the committee to offer an amendment which comes properly at this place, and if in order now, I call it up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, line 14, after the word "inclusive", it is proposed to insert "Provided, That for the purposes of any law, order, or regulation relating to establishing, maintaining, or adjusting maximum prices for agricultural commodities or for commodities processed in whole or substantial part from agricultural commodities, the payments made out of funds appropriated under this item shall not be considered as a part of the prices received by farmers for agricultural commodities or otherwise taken into account."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, am I to understand that the amendment was approved by the committee?

Mr. BANKHEAD. It was.

Mr. McNARY. And the Senator offers it as a committee amendment?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, so far as I can. It is legislative in character, but I was authorized by the committee to move to suspend the rule. That, of course, is as far as the committee could go.

Mr. McNARY. At the present time I am not impressed with the amendment. I should like to have a statement by the Senator.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to make one.

Mr. McNARY. I reserve the right to make a point of order, which I probably shall do, but I should like to have some information about the amendment.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I shall be glad to explain it, and had intended to do so.

Mr. President, a mere reading of this amendment will disclose that it has some of the elements, but not all, of the bill which was passed by the Senate by an almost unanimous vote and was vetoed by the President. The amendment is not intended to raise again, in a direct way, the issues which were presented by the original so-called Bankhead bill and by the President's veto. It is true, however, that the President's Executive order made this amendment necessary, if the order is to be carried out and if a great injustice to the farmer is not thereby committed.

We all recall that the President's Executive order of October 2, which the Senate thought he had no power to make, and so voted, and therefore it did not become a law—and if any Senator cares to see the order I have it here—directed all agencies of the Government in fixing maximum prices to deduct from the parity price, in order to ascertain the maximum price, all parity payments, all soil-conservation payments, and all subsidy payments. Where would that leave the farmers who participated under the soil-conservation program if we completely acquiesced in that doctrine?

There is, of course, as I have indicated, a broad distinction between the original bill which was vetoed and the amendment I have offered, because the bill which was vetoed applied to all kinds of benefit payments; it was not limited to soil conservation, but included parity and all subsidy payments, and was designed to be a permanent statute, to govern until repealed or otherwise disposed of. This amendment limits the consideration of this subject alone to soil-conservation payments which most Members of the Senate, I think, who have given the subject consideration, have believed all the time were not properly denominated benefit subsidy payments because, in the main, a consideration moved from the farmers, under the invitation of their Government, through compliance with regulations announced by the Department and authorized by the statute, and in carrying out the modes of production which the Secretary had a right to prescribe and which he did from time to time prescribe.

The debate today has brought out that this year the farmers have obligated themselves and paid out of their pockets practically half of this entire appropriation. They have bought leguminous seeds; they have planted them; they have hired the labor, when necessary, and in most cases it was necessary; they have bought equipment here and there, when it was necessary; they have engaged in soil practices in other ways, such as terracing ground at an expensive outlay for labor, and on a schedule which the Secretary, acting under the law as he has done from year to year, prescribed, and the Secretary as well prescribed the rates of pay.

On the other part, farmers have diverted their production from soil-depleting crops. Under the rotation system they have abandoned to some extent the production of regular cash crops and changed to other crops in order to meet the war food-production goals which the Secretary laid down. The rates were prescribed, and I have them here. So, under the program, under the announcement of the Government, as the Senator from Georgia has said, the good faith of the Government was involved.

The law has not changed that program, unless the President's Executive order is the law. Certainly the farmers have not understood that a soil program which requires them to engage in expenditures, labor, and effort has been changed by law or even by Executive order, because they have been encouraged to go along, even since the President's Executive order was made. The notice or declaration to the farmers was issued in December, while the President's order was made on October 2. The Department had led them to believe that it was all right, that it was in line with the usual program and practice to spend their money, their time, and their efforts in this particular soil-building program.

This amendment confines the doctrine laid down to this year's appropriation, as to which, as I see it, the good faith of the Government is involved, for the farmers will be money out of pocket if the President's order is carried out. If there is no intention to carry it out, then who can object to this amendment? Even if the amendment is not needed it should be accepted by unanimous vote, because it would give assurance and confidence to the farmers all over the country on 6,000,000 farms who are expecting to receive these payments, which they have worked for and earned.

The President's order to which the amendment is directed provides that these payments must be deducted from the maximum prices, from the market prices, so that if the order is carried out the result will be that the farmer's market price will be reduced below the parity price, if the present market price is at parity, as it is for so many of the more important commodities, but the deduction of these payments in all cases brings down the market price.

I do not believe Congress ever so intended. I do not believe Congress wants to see that result. There is a great commotion all over this country, which is stirring activity in Congress, about a roll-back of the prices of a few commodities, such as meat, and coffee, and butter. Great indignation has been expressed, and protests have been widespread. Although there is not a roll-back of the farmer's price, still there is a fear that that might result.

Here we have a program under the Executive order which constitutes a roll-back of prices, and a roll-back to the farmers, not one affecting processors alone, not one affecting distributors, but a reduction in an amount equivalent to the conservation payments, a reduction in the market price of the farmer, and therefore in the amount of money he gets for his year's work and his crop.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAYBANK in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. The Senator's last statement was that the amount of the soil conservation payments would be taken into consideration in fixing the farmer's price, and his earlier remarks were directed to parity payments. I was wondering whether the Senator had a division showing the amount of money which goes primarily to soil conservation payments and the amount which goes to the domestic allotment plan, because it might be that some Senators would want to differentiate between the domestic allotment plan and the soil conservation plan, where they were separate, and not integrated in the same program.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I must confess that it is somewhat difficult to argue a question such as that with a Baltimore hotel farmer. He talks about the difference between the conservation plan and the domestic allotment plan. I am surprised that the Senator does not know that they are one and the same, and are contained in the same law.

Mr. TYDINGS. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a little difficult for me to interpret the Senator's last remark, in view of the fact that he inhabits Mount Everest, and seems to be emulating the Ethiopian in the woodpile. But if I may approach that proposition, of course they are in the same law, but I have not been able yet to find out where the domestic allotment plan has anything to do directly with soil conservation.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is the whole thing; that is what it is.

Mr. TYDINGS. I myself read the law this morning, with those provisions in it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Perhaps it will give the Senator some light for me to say that the domestic allotment plan and the soil conservation plan are the same.

Mr. TYDINGS. While the Senator was absent this morning I read the law to the Senate, so I am conversant with it, and there is a definite distinction between the domestic allotment plan and the soil conservation plan, so recognized in the law itself.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have not time to educate the Senator on that subject.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, and I do not think the Senator would be able to, because one has to start with knowledge before he can impart it to another.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Some people never learn anything and never forget anything.

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alabama yield?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I yield.

Mr. GILLETTE. Of course, as the Senator from Alabama knows, I am 100 percent with him in his position, and I think there is no logical answer to the argument he is making that there should not be considered the conservation payments, which are paid for a specific purpose in compensation for a specific act, in connection with the computation of price. I call the Senator's attention, however, to the language of his proposed amendment:

> The payment of funds appropriated under this item shall not be considered as a part of the prices received by farmers for agricultural commodities.

In which, of course, we are in full agreement. Then the amendment adds, "or otherwise taken into account."

Mr. BANKHFAD. In fixing maximum prices. It refers back.

Mr. GILLETTE. I am sure the Senator will agree that it leaves that phrase unsupported, where it might be applied to anything else. I suggest, would it not be preferable to add that phrase, if the Senator wants to use it, at the end of line 7, so that it would read that "funds appropriated under this item shall not be considered or otherwise taken into account as a part of the prices," and so forth?

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is all right. If the Senator thinks it clarifies the language, I have no objection.

Mr. GILLETTE. It would seem to me that it very definitely clarifies it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I had my amendment prepared by the legal draftsman, and I assumed it was correct.

Mr. GILLETTE. I do not assume, of course, to have a keener knowledge of drafting such a measure than the Senator has.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I have great respect for the Senator's judgment and complete confidence in his good purpose, and I am inclined to think he is right. I am glad to accept the suggestion.

I shall not take further time of the Senate, unless the minority leader would like to ask me some questions. I have great respect for his judgment. I crave his cooperation.

Unless there is some question, I shall conclude, because I think the Senate understands the proposal, and I shall not take further time now.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the amendment proposed by the very distinguished Senator from Alabama contravenes rule XVI of the Senate. Therefore, I shall make the point of order. Before doing so, let me suggest that I supported this proposal when it was before the Senate on a previous occasion. It passed the Senate and the House, and was vetoed by the President. The veto is now before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and hearings have been had upon it.

I think it is most unusual, and that it does not conform to any rule of legislation, not to mention the rules of the Senate, that there should be an attempt to write into an appropriation bill a vetoed measure, when the veto message is now pending before a legislative committee.

I am anxious to have the bill passed. It must become a law by June 30. But to place such an amendment in an appropriation bill, which in effect would be to place a veto message in the bill, would necessarily result in causing opposition in the House, it would delay the passage of the measure, so that it probably could not be written into law by the 30th of June. The consideration of the veto message is a matter which is now before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Secondly, the provision in question does not amount to very much. I remember very well that the able Senator from Alabama, from whose views it grieves me to part, stated in the Senate when he was anxious that his bill, which I supported, be passed, that the benefit it would provide did not at this time amount to very much for the farmers of the country; I think he made an estimate of $75,000,000. I had a very much lower estimate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. An estimate of $75,000,000 for what?

Mr. McNARY. I think the Senator said if his bill were to pass the farmers of the country would benefit to the extent of $75,000,000 over their present prices.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I think the Senator will find it was about $250,000,000.

Mr. McNARY. Someone said about $75,000,000, and I think that estimate was far too high.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I set out the details with respect to it.

Mr. McNARY. The Senator may have, but I probably was not moved favorably by the details.

Mr. President, I make the point of order for the very substantial reason——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that the amendment is legislation on a general appropriation bill.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I could not conceive of any more unfortunate amendment than the one which has been proposed by the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. It is unfortunate because it is utterly untimely. It would tend, in fact, if adopted, it would actually contribute to and probably make necessary the overthrow of the entire national policy addressed to the gravest domestic crisis which this country has faced in the 18 months since our enemies attacked us. I realize that my statement seems to be sweeping; it may appear at first to be extreme; but I believe I can convince the Senator that it is not extreme and is no more sweeping than the facts justify.

Mr. President, we are in the midst of the gravest internal crisis of the last 8 or 10, perhaps 15 years. We are all familiar, certainly, with the superficial aspects of that crisis. There has been a demand, headed up largely by one man, the president of the United Mine Workers, for an overthrow of the national policy on the subject of wages. He has gone to great lengths. He has even put on a strike against the national defense and in the time of war. He has practically said to the American people, to the American Government, and to its President, and to its Congress that "I, the president of the United Mine Workers, must have my way, whether your country is defeated in battle or not. I must have $2 a day for my miners."

It had not seemed to me, Mr. President, that that demand created a situation in which the mere matter of $2 a day was involved. That projected the whole crucial situation of the stabilization of the American economy by means of a firm national policy. It is a test of the power of the Government. It is a test of the stamina and the will of the President. Should Mr. Lewis succeed, we would know then that the Executive order, called the hold-the-line order, had been breached. We would know that the floodgates were open to thousands of demands from all quarters, and we would know that we had let go such power as we now have to maintain the policy of stabilization. We would have an ascending scale of wages. We would have endless demands coming from the wage earners first, and then from the farmers, and coming justly then from the farmers. We have got to hold that line, Mr. President. The terms of this crisis are not the terms merely of meeting Mr. Lewis. The terms of this crisis are the terms of meeting the necessities of national stabilization, and of maintaining the national policy as declared by the President and with the authority of the Congress. We cannot afford to breach it.

Precisely now comes a demand, not unlike the demand from the labor side of the economy, not only that we shall enact legislation which will open the doors, not just to the attainment of parity by the farmers—oh, no—but upon the terms of an endless series of demands, and ever-increasing rivalry between the classes of America, the groups in labor, and the groups in agriculture, each justly saying, "If you increased the compensation of the other, we must have an increase likewise," thus creating an ascending cycle of inflation, bringing on the destruction of our economy, breaking down the wall and destroying our national policy, and discrediting our Government and its head, the President, and its agency, the War Labor Board.

Mr. President, I know very well that I would go beyond bounds, and that I would probably seem to be unjust if I should say that this amendment is a flank movement coming to the aid of Mr. John Lewis. I do not think that its author had that in mind, but I do not hesitate to say that that would be precisely its consequence. If we enact the amendment into law we would give Mr. John Lewis precisely the club he desires with which to make his case and bring about the consummation represented in his demands.

How quickly would he respond by saying, "All right. You did break down your line; you broke down the line which was established with respect to the farmers. Now you must break down the line for me. You did increase the cost of living; you did enact an amendment which necessarily implied an increase in the cost of living. Now be fair, and give me my demands."

How would we resist that plea? How could we justly pass the legislation which now is in conference, and which shortly will be before the Senate? How would the War Labor Board be able to hold the line? How would the President and his aides be able to maintain the stabilization so essential and so indispensable, not simply to order, but to our security, to the prosecution of the war, and to the maintenance of the economy underlying the war effort? How quickly the whole thing would fall like a house of cards, and the President and the War Labor Board and the Congress and the people be stricken down in perfect helplessness.

Mr. President, I opposed the motion to override the President's veto, made here about 6 weeks ago, as I recall. I thought I knew what I was doing at that time. I opposed it, not precisely on the technical merits of the legislation, but—as other Members of the Senate will recall—in the interest of stablization and by way of fending against the threat of inflation.

Here it comes again—not by way of a report from the committee on the veto message or the motion to override the veto, but by way of legislation in an appropriation bill to obviate a veto message, and that at a time when all the picture of the national crisis is before us.

Six weeks ago when I spoke to the Senate, very probably some Members of the Senate did not realize, as I realized then, that we had to sustain the President, regardless of the technical merits of the matter, because not to do so would have been to paralyze his arm in the hour when he was trying to bring about stabilization. That is why I took that position then, and that is why I am speaking now. If we break down the hold-the-line order, if we contribute to the breaking down of that order, no matter how good the cause, no matter what the merits may be—let it be said that we should like to have the farmers receive increased prices; even let it be conceded that all agricultural prices should be fixed at parity or better; and even let it be said that there is some merit in the demands of the miners, and that it might be well for them to be paid a little more here and a little more there, as Lewis demands—nevertheless, even making those concessions, which I do not make, and to which I would not agree, but even making them for the purposes and the sake of argument, in order to give emphasis to the precise motive which attends me and the necessities of the present hour, I say we can concede anything we please about the merits of the demand, and at the same time say that the hour has come in the United States of America when we must stabilize the national economy, no matter whom we disappoint, no matter what outcries we may hear.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does not the Senator feel that the War Labor Board and the administration are about to grant John Lewis an increase of a dollar and a half a day through the portal-to-portal pay provision?

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator has asked me how I feel about that. I do not feel that way. If I did, I would not trust my feelings. I am not disposed—I hope I shall not appear to be boastful—to depend upon feelings or intuitions. I could say that there are some evidences; I could say that I have some fears; but what I am saying is that I will not be a party to it; I will not contribute to it; I will not willingly have the Congress open the door to it. I will not yield; I will not make it easy for the President to yield, or for the War Labor Board to yield, or for anyone else to yield. If I had the feelings which the Senator seems to think I have, I would resist them with all the power I could summon.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BAILEY. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. After listening to the Senator's argument on the question of holding the line at the present level of things, I wonder whether he means to say that he abrogates and dismisses all the power of Congress and turns all of it over to one man.

Mr. BAILEY. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BAILEY. Of course, I do not, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH. The reason I asked the question is that the Senate, by a vote of 78 to 2, voted for the principle involved in what was a legal question, one which had nothing to do with Mr. Lewis, except inferentially. Then, when the President vetoed the measure, we all submitted. That meant that Congress has nothing to say about it, that the President is to dictate the entire economy, whether just or unjust, and that we have nothing to say.

Mr. BAILEY. I have answered the Senator's question; but he opens up a matter to me. Mr. President, we have the power to open the doors today to all the interminable and unspeakable evils of inflation. The fact that we do not use that power does not indicate that we are supine; it does not indicate that we are giving that power to the President or to anyone else. It simply indicates that we are meeting the demands of the situation by resolving these smaller matters in favor of the larger objective of having a stabilized economy during the war.

Mr. SMITH. It occurs to me that there arose a situation which evidently a majority of the Members of Congress thought was unjust. In stabilizing this matter, the farmers or those who had their benefit payments, so-called, deducted from the parity payments thought that action was unfair. After discussion, the Senate voted 78 to 2 that it was unfair. It was a mere incident, a crook in the line that we were told to hold. The President vetoed the bill. It is now under consideration before a committee of the Senate.

Even though there may be great danger of inflation, I do not think it is likely to come from the great abundance of money which the farmers would have, and which they would spend if they are allowed to enjoy what was promised them, namely, parity.

I could go into some detail, reductio ad absurdum, but I cannot follow the Senator in his argument. The Senator from North Carolina is pleading with his colleagues to obey the behest of one man, against the vote of those whom the people have sent here to represent them.

The situation with respect to John L. Lewis is a thing apart. It is said that if we grant this justice to the farmer, Lewis will say, "All right; you have raised the cost of living. Now raise my wages." The Senate very nobly, and with great backbone, darted under the seats and said, "Yes, Mr. President, since you have vetoed it, we are through."

What did Mr. Lewis do? What is he doing now? Is he holding the line? Five hundred thousand miners went out on strike when the bill was to all intents and purposes killed. I think it is up to us to represent the people who sent us here.

I cannot follow the Senator in his argument. He says, "Hold the line, whether you kill people or not, but hold the line." I am perfectly willing to hold the line if it is held in justice. We may win this war against our enemies and lose America. That is the direction in which we are now headed.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am very much obliged to my distinguished friend. That is just my contention. We can win this war and lose America; and we can lose America before we have an opportunity to win the war.

Mr. SMITH. I think that is the direction in which the Senator is headed.

Mr. BAILEY. We can lose the war on the American front. I hope I am not giving aid and comfort to our enemies. News favorable to our arms comes from all the winds that blow. Two armies of our enemies have been captured and destroyed. We have control of the air in the Mediterranean and off the coasts of Europe. We are making gains against the Japanese. Our sons, to the number of eight or nine million, true to all the best traditions of their land, have put on the armor of their country and have gone forth to battle. Industry has been converted into an arsenal. The American people have gone into their great period of trial. We can make a mistake right here which would absolutely destroy the American economy. My complaint against Mr. Lewis has been just that. He was not only defying his Government, but he was making a demand the consequences of which would open the door to demands from every quarter of labor—demands which we could not resist if we yielded to him.

In speaking today I am not speaking only to the Senate. I am speaking to the authorities down the street. I would say to the President if I were in his presence, "Mr. President, you must hold this line against John Lewis, no matter what the demands are, no matter what the threats are, no matter what the consequences are. Hold the line."

The national policy must be maintained. Once we yield we can never repair the breach. If we continue to yield, we may be as badly off as the French were about 3 years ago today when the news came that the line had been broken at Sedan on a front of 14 miles, and the German hordes were pouring through.

If we yield to Mr. Lewis' demands, we can do precisely the same thing with respect to the farmers, and we can justify the demands of John Lewis by yielding to the demands—if there be demands—from the farmers. I am taking my position against the farmer demand and against the labor demand, and for a firm and stable national policy, resolving all the minor considerations, however meritorious, in the larger objective of stabilizing the American economy, not for the sake of stability, but in order that we may maintain a country capable of sustaining the men who are fighting our battles.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAILEY. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am listening with the greatest interest to what the Senator is saying, because he is talking about something of the greatest importance to our beloved country. But I am wondering if there is not another part of the line that is being swayed just a little. Apparently the granting of practically unlimited subsidies is in prospect. I say that with some degree of accuracy. I understand that subsidies, not granted by Congress but by one of the borrowing agencies of the Government, have been given to beef and butter to the extent of $450,000,000, and that the plan is already in operation, or will go into operation in a day or two.

If that be true, is it not a fact that we have broken the inflationary line in another place? We must tax the American people to pay these enormous subsidies. I am told that we have already started with subsidies for some articles, not by congressional action, but by departmental action. It seems to me that we may strike a spiral of inflation which will take us so far afield that it will be very difficult ever to get back.

The Senator has discussed two other places where the line might be broken. I should like to hear the Senator discuss the question I have raised.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I do not pretend to be prepared to discuss the question posed by the Senator. I have thought a great deal about it. I regret the projection of the subsidy theory into the situation; but I take it that the foundation of the proposal of subsidies is a concession with a view to maintaining the line.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. BAILEY. Let me undertake to answer the Senator, and state my thought. It is a price proposed to be paid in order to prevent a rise in the cost of living, and therefore to justify holding the line for wages.

Whether that is sound policy is another question. Other countries have tried it, and they seem to have had a satisfactory experience. I am not commiting myself to that theory, but I would infinitely rather vote for subsidies in order to keep the cost of living down and thereby justify me in voting to hold wages and prices where they are, than not to vote for them and yield to John Lewis on the one hand and the farmers on the other, and every possible demand from every group in America.

That is the theory of the subsidy. I am not commiting myself to it, but there is such a thing as throwing tubs to whales, even by government. As I understand the subsidy, it is in the nature of tubs for whales.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with practically everything the Senator has said as to the other two lines, but I was astounded a few days ago, in questioning Mr. Jesse Jones, Secretary of Commerce, who has charge of the paying of this particular subsidy. I asked him to whom he was going to pay the subsidy. It seems that $450,000,000 had been set aside for those two articles of food. I asked him, "To whom are you going to pay these enormous subsidies?" He told me they were going to pay the subsidies to the packers, and not to the producers. That is the kind of subsidy which, I am frank to say, alarms me very much. I feel alarmed about it in the same way that I feel alarmed about other proposed breaks in the line. I agree with the Senator that we should "hold the line."

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I am alarmed at these unusual prospects and proposals. We are confronted by a situation which is bound to alarm every one of us. I do not wish to make any extended remarks. I read a part of my mail, as do most Senators. I am alarmed at the revolt in America against rationing. I believe that rationing is necessary. I am alarmed at the complaints against the O. P. A. which have come to my attention. I am alarmed at the general attitude of complaint in America. I am in favor of supporting a necessary national policy designed to meet the situation.

At the time the O. P. A. legislation was before the Senate I had a discussion with the present director of the O. P. A., former Senator Prentiss Brown. I undertook to discuss with him the practical impossibility of price fixing in a democracy. No one who has read history will deny that such an expenditure of money as we are now under the necessity of authorizing, such a limited civilian economy as is now necessary on account of the war, and such a surplus of cash in the pockets of the people which cannot be expended for goods because goods are not being produced, all predicate inflation, and therefore should alarm every thoughtful man and woman in the land.

But it is not sufficient, Mr. President, for us to be alarmed or concerned. We are the responsible body. We must translate our alarm and our concern into a positive policy, no matter what the difficulties may be. We must prevent inflation or pronounce ourselves incompetent to conduct the American Government. We must prevent inflation. By "we" I do not mean only the Congress or the President, but all of us together must prevent inflation, or else the magnificent structure which we have built up for our defense, and all the lofty sacrifices made by mothers, fathers, sons, and daughters, will be shattered and destroyed by an internal difficulty the character of which is such that no nation, since the world began, has ever been able to survive it. We cannot destroy our economy by inflation and have a country left.

Allow me to say another word. I did not mean to speak at such length. Mr. Hitler, in his Mein Kampf, spoke of the United States of America as "the American colossus." Do not think that the German corporal, the German leader, did not have a very respectful conception of the power of this country. It is the Colossus of the West; and he projected his course with the view of avoiding conflict with us. He hoped to keep us asleep until he had all the rest of the world under his heel. He also said that the American colossus, even with all its wealth, its might, and its people, would be no great factor in the war, even if we should get into the war. Why did he say that? He said:

> The American people are a democracy. They are susceptible to all sorts of influences. Every man over there wishes to have his way. We have many groups over there to deal with.

This is his thesis, and this is the explanation of the man so far as we are concerned: He has said that American democracy will never be able to fight a total war. Theoretically he is correct. His calculations may be justified on theory. If America is to behave in that way, we shall not prevail. But America is not going to behave in that way. We will meet total effort by our enemies with total effort over here. We will either do so voluntarily, or we will do so under force of law. If we do so under force of law we shall be acting in response to necessity. Public safety is the highest law. I hope I can avoid—I hope we all can avoid—acting under the force of necessity. I hope we all can avoid undertaking to bring about in America total effort by force.

Hear me, Senators. The only way to achieve that total effort is by a voluntary spirit in the hearts of the men and women of America. We must have leadership. We must uphold our leadership.

I like the way Senators on the other side of the aisle have conducted themselves throughout this struggle. They have not acted as partisans. I like to think that in the Committee on Commerce I have never seen a partisan vote, and never expect to see one. We cannot have any politics now. We cannot even have Democratic politics. We cannot have any personal politics. We cannot even have anti-New Deal or New Deal politics. We cannot have anti-Roosevelt or pro-Roosevelt politics. We must clench the mailed fist of 135,000,000 Americans and strike the enemy while we can. I think the time to do so is close at hand.

We are about to send abroad great numbers of our men. I have heard men say there was a shipping bottleneck. I announced last night in a little speech in Baltimore that there is not a shipping bottleneck. Everything we make can go across the sea, and every man we can equip can go across the sea, and they are going. When they go, they go in the form of their own dearly loved selves; they go with the heartaches and tears of millions of mothers; they go with the flag of their country over their heads, and, God helping me, they are going with the united strength of a national policy that does not yield and does not fear, but, on the other hand, will throw everything it has with them into this vortex of war.

So, Mr. President, I hope Senators will not think of this strike situation as a mere matter of dealing with Mr. Lewis; that they will not think of it as a matter which we can dismiss by an announcement; that they will not think of the strike situation as a mere clash as to who shall have wages and who shall not have them or whether wages are as high as they should be or otherwise; that they will not think of this proposition before the Senate today as a question of justice or injustice to the farmers, but will think of this crisis as one in which farmer and worker and Senator and mother and father and merchant and housekeeper are vitally concerned and in which they must stand as one; and that we will think of ourselves as being now under obligation to uphold the national policy, whether we like it or not.

I am receiving letters every day from people complaining about this thing and the other thing. I am trying to write them back reasonably, that the time for complaining has gone, that they should come here and state their case, and the Government will treat them as well as it can. But the Government cannot yield at any point when to yield is to open the door and invite the hordes to come in, one for wages and the other for prices, and thus destroy the money of the country, destroy its economy, and destroy our capacity to carry on the war.

So, Mr. President, I am hoping we will come through this crisis, and my faith in my country is such that I believe we will come through it. I am hoping at this moment that the Senate will not take a step now, in the very heart of the crisis, which will enable the chief conspirator of them all, Mr. Lewis, to say, "The Senate broke the line yesterday; let me go through." We are not going to do that; and, whether we like it or not, hear me as I take my seat, we have reached the hour when the national policy is established; we cannot break it down; we must sustain it. That goes for the Senate, it goes for me, it goes for the President, it goes for all the American people. I am for holding the line, whatever the cost; and I think of that line as the line that is right behind the boys who are going across the sea today; I am thinking of that line as the line that is right behind the boys who are fighting in Burma, in the South Seas, and who are soon to fight on the continent of Europe and the continent of Asia. We do not let them break the line; we do not ask them where they shall go, and we do not talk to them about justice or injustice or parity or nonparity, and we do not talk to them about wages, either.

Theirs not to reason why,
Theirs but to do and die.

We can ask no less of ourselves.

Let it be said down in North Carolina, if you please, that I antagonized the workers. Very well; say it as much as you please; I will hold my stand. Let it be said down in North Carolina, if you please, that when the motion offered by the Senator from Alabama came before the Senate, BAILEY went back on the farmer; say it as much as you please; you will have to say, when it is all over, that BAILEY did his part to maintain the national policy and prevent inflation, and that he thought of himself as a man honored in a very great position who was not permitted to forget that the line which he held was a part of the line which is also held by 8,000,000 of our men.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I hope we may proceed with the other amendments to this section. The Senator from Alabama, I understand, has filed a motion to suspend the rule; that question will be debatable, and I think we can expedite the consideration of this bill if we proceed now with the committee amendments, and let the motion of the Senator from Alabama come up after their conclusion, as is usually the case.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The suggestion of the Senator in charge of the bill is entirely agreeable to me. I merely want to give notice so that every Senator will understand that at the appropriate time, probably tomorrow, I shall make a motion to suspend the rule, and ask for a yea-and-nay vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 68, at the beginning of line 15 it is proposed to strike out "Provided, That no part of said appropriation or any other appropriation carried in this bill shall be used for incentive payments: Provided further, That no payment or payments hereunder to any one person or corporation shall be in excess of the total sum of $500: Provided further, That this limitation shall not be construed to deprive any share renter or tenant of payments not exceeding that amount to which he would otherwise be entitled: Provided further, That the portion of said amount available for salaries and other administrative expenses for carrying out such programs shall not exceed 50 percent of the amount expended under the Department of Agriculture Appropriation Act, 1943, for salaries and administrative expenses for carrying out programs under such acts for the period from July 1, 1941, to December 31, 1942, inclusive," and insert "Provided further, That not to exceed $32,500,000 of said amount shall be available for salaries and other administrative expenses for carrying out such programs."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, at the request of several Senators I am going to move to amend the amendment by striking out "$32,500,000" and inserting "$25,000,000."

I can state the case in a very few sentences. The Senate will recall that we are back now to the section of the bill which deals with conservation and use of agricultural land resources, and the particular pending appropriation deals with salaries and administrative costs of this particular activity.

Mr. President, the committee itself, according to the able Senator who is handling the bill on the floor of the Senate found that the relative percentage for salaries and other administrative expenses in the administration of this $400,000,000 appropriation was absolutely outrageous. As the result the committee has reduced what was an administrative expenditure last year of $54,000,000 to $32,500,000.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the relative administrative expense is still outrageous. If it was outrageous to spend $54,000,000 in salaries and administrative expenses in handling $450,000,000, it is still a diversion of money from the direct conservation purpose, and it is still outrageous, to spend thirty-two and a half million dollars for the administration of a net three hundred and sixty seven and a half million dollars.

I know very little personally about this matter; I merely know that that relative percentage for pay rolls and administrative expense does not make sense. I just know that if there is to be any sort of approach to personnel economy in this Government, we cannot spend thirty-two and a half million dollars to administer $367,000,000.

When the able Senator from Georgia presented the matter, he said that in his own mind he had thought that $25,000,000 at this point was enough, but that he did not feel like putting his own opinion against the united opinion of those who appeared before his committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCFARLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. I said that I was of the opinion that these administrative expenses could and should be reduced to $25,000,000 next year, but I did not intend to leave the impression that I thought they could be reduced that much this year without disorganizing the program.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator for making definite and clear what I was attempting to refer to. If the Senator comes as close to my $25,000,000 figure as that, it is sufficient support for me to offer the amendment. I remind the Senate that the committee amendment is going to conference anyway. The obvious purpose of the committee itself has been to advertise the fact that the Senate is dissatisfied with the administrative expenses of these committees which administer soil conservation and kindred things. I suggest that we emphasize it to the extent of making a final reduction to $25,000,000 when the bill goes to conference. The item will still be in conference, but the position and purpose of the Senate will be just that much more emphatic.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the Senator is in error in his last statement, as I construe the bill. If it were true that the matter would be in conference, I should not object to the Senator's amendment. I am just as anxious to bring down administrative expenses as is any other Member of the Senate. I am perhaps more anxious than the Senator from Michigan, because while the total appropriation would not be reduced one dime, every dollar we save here is saved to go in payment to the farmers, and I represent an agricultural State, and I am just as anxious as any Member of the Senate can possibly be to reduce these administrative expenses to the fairest level that can be utilized to carry on the program. I want Senators to bear in mind, in voting on the amendment, that we would not be reducing the total appropriation 1 cent. It would be a limitation within the appropriation on the administrative expenses.

The House provision reduces the administrative expenses under this expenditure to $27,000,000. If the Senator will read the language commencing on line 22, he will see that the House has reduced the item to one-half the amount that was expended this year, which would make it $27,000,000. We in the committee undertook to go into the matter fully, but we did not have possession of all the facts. It was impossible to go thoroughly into the matter this year, in connection with the pending bill, if we hoped to have it enacted into law by July 1. We held hearings almost day and night in our efforts to get the bill to the floor, and Senators can observe, from the size of the report of the hearings, that we went as diligently as possible into all the items. If in conference the House conferees have any information which they can present to the conferees on the part of the Senate to the effect that the program can be carried on with $27,000,000, without being severely hampered or disorganized, I shall be glad to withdraw from the limitation of thirty-two and a half million, which was suggested by the Senate committee, but in my judgment it would be a very dangerous thing to say that we were going to cut the administrative expenses in half, and leave the conferees no opportunity whatever to consider the matter.

Even with the higher figure of thirty-two and a half million, we have brought about a most drastic reduction in the administrative expenses. If they can be carried lower than that, no one is more anxious than is the Senator from Georgia to attain that end, because every dime we save in administrative expenses goes to a farmer somewhere.

I ask Senators not to tie our hands, so that we might absolutely wreck the entire program, and even make it impossible to say that the measurements are to be made on the farms to see whether conformity is had with the provisions of the program announced by the Secretary.

I hope that when the Senator from Michigan reads the language here, which makes the limitation of the administrative expenses $27,000,000 on the part of the House, he will not insist on the amount he suggested. I assure him of my good faith in wishing to economize to the fullest extent in the administration of the program, but no man can stand on the floor of the Senate and say what the effect of cutting this appropriation in half at this time would be. I do not know what charges have already been incurred against this appropriation. Such a limitation might bring it down to a point where it would all be consumed by the county committees, which are most numerous, as the Senator from Virginia has pointed out, and no funds would be left to carry on the program for the last 6 months of the year.

I think that in all fairness, as we have made this great stride forward in reducing the administrative expenses, we should not be tied and shackled, and perhaps bring about a condition that would disorganize the whole program.

If the Senator will read the entire section, he will see that under the House language the administrative expenses cannot exceed $27,500,000. Under the Senate committee language they cannot exceed $32,500,000. If it can be developed by those espousing the House position that $27,500,000 is a sufficient amount to discharge the obligations already incurred, and to see that the program is completed, even by economizing to the marrow, below the bone, to the marrow, I assure the Senator that the conferees on the part of the Senate will cut just as low as it is possible to go.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for the attitude of the able Senator from Georgia in this and all other related matters in connection with the bill. He has a very unusual efficiency in handling the entire matter. But in this instance, at least, I wish to register myself as being unwilling not to go at least as far as the House of Representatives itself has gone in this particular item. So I ask the Senator whether I can accomplish the result to which he refers by changing my amendment so that I substitute the figure "$27,500,000" for the figure "$32,500,000." Would that raise the issue in the form in which I now want it raised?

Mr. RUSSELL. I think it would, to be candid with the Senator, but I desire to say that I am just as strongly opposed to that amendment as I am to the other suggestion of the Senator, because I think the proposal is to cut the administrative expenses in half without knowing what the effect would be. I do not think that is a proper way to legislate. The Senator from Georgia has offered amendment after amendment, year after year, to the appropriation bills as they have come along in an effort to reduce the administrative expenses. The Senator from Virginia will recall that when the original Triple A Act was pending I was disturbed about the fact that there were no restrictions on administrative expenses, and I offered an amendment on the floor at that time to assure they would not be too large. Due to the fate of that amendment in the House, and the various constructions by the Department, the desired result was not achieved; but as one who is interested in this program, I do not think we could say that the administrative expenses should be cut by one-half at this time, when we do not even know the amount that has already been obligated or expended.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Will the Senator accept an amendment at $30,000,000? [Laughter.]

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, the hour grows late, and I think I shall heed the injunction to "agree with thine adversary quickly, whilest thou art in the way with him." [Laughter.]

Mr. VANDENBERG. I suggest that the amendment be changed to read "$30,000,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair). The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 69, line 12, to strike out "or any State or county information employees: Provided further, That such amount shall be available for salaries and other administrative expenses in connection with the formulation and administration of the 1944 programs of soil building practices and soil and water conservation practices under the act of February 29, 1936, and programs under the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, as amended, the total expenditures of which, including administration, shall not exceed $300,000,000," and in lieu thereof to insert a colon and the following: "Provided further, That such amount shall be available for salaries and other administrative expenses in connection with the formulation and administration of the 1944 programs or plans now or hereafter authorized under section 7 or 8, or both, of said act of February 29, 1936, or under said provisions of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, the total expenditures of which including administration, shall not exceed $300,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 71, after line 23, to insert:

To enable the Secretary to make parity payments to producers of wheat, cotton, corn (in the commercial corn-producing area), rice, and tobacco, pursuant to the provisions of section 303 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1938, he is authorized and directed to make such commitments or incur such obligations as may be necessary in order to provide for full parity payments for each of the crop years 1943 and 1944: Provided, That such payments with respect to any such commodity for the crop year 1943 shall be made upon the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for such commodity under the 1943 agricultural conservation program and for the crop year 1944 on the normal yield of the farm acreage allotment established for the commodity under the 1944 agricultural conservation program: Provided further, That for each of the crop years 1943 and 1944 the Secretary may provide by regulations for reduction in payments for failure to comply with the acreage allotments, limits, or goals under the agricultural conservation program for 1943 or 1944, as the case may be.

For payments on the 1943 crop, if the sum of the prevailing basic loan rate (if marketing quotas for the commodity have been disapproved, such basic loan rate shall be the basic loan rate which would have prevailed except for such disapproval) or the average farm price, whichever is the higher, for the crop year 1943 and the applicable rate of the payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, for the purposes of the 1943 agricultural conservation program, and the parity payments herein provided, exceed an amount sufficient to increase the farmers' returns to parity prices, parity payments shall be so adjusted as to provide a return to producers which is equal to but not greater than parity price; and for payments on the 1944 crop, if the sum of the prevailing basic loan rate (if marketing quotas for the commodity have been disapproved, such basic loan rate shall be the basic loan rate which would have prevailed except for such disapproval) or the average farm price, whichever is the higher, for the crop year 1944 and the applicable rate of the payments under the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act, for the purposes of the 1944 agricultural conservation program, and the parity payments herein provided exceed an amount sufficient to increase the farmers' returns to parity prices, parity payments shall be so adjusted as to provide a return to producers which is equal to but not greater than parity price.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 74, line 9, to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$7,818,748."

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, that committee amendment deals with the Federal Crop Insurance Act. The amendment proposes to raise the amount from $3,500,000 to $7,818,748. I wish to call the Senate's attention to the record made under the Federal Crop Insurance Act, which appears in the House hearings on this bill. Wheat insurance has been in force for 4 years. It has operated during those 4 years at a loss to the United States Government of $17,417,000. Insurance on cotton has been in force for 1 year and during those 12 months the Government has sustained a loss of $415,000. The total cost to the Government of the crop-insurance plan to date is $47,000,000. It seems to me—and this is my personal philosophy—that any business venture on the part of the Government is wrong. The Government has no business to compete with private institutions which carry on the same character of business. But granting that it is proper for the Government to engage in the business of crop insurance, it seems to me that any insurance activity which cannot justify itself by paying its way certainly should not have the continued support of the Federal Treasury.

While I am not prepared to destroy this activity entirely—although I think it should be destroyed—I move to restore the item in the section to the House figure of $3,500,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course to achieve the end sought by the Senator from South Dakota the proper method would be to vote down the Senate committee amendment. A motion to restore would not be in order.

Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement about this item. The Senator from South Dakota states that this crop insurance is all in competition with private industry. I challenge the Senator to point to a single insurance company in the United States of America today which would insure the type of risk that is insured by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation. The Senator refers to the cost of $47,000,000. That figure applies to the administrative expenses of the organization over the 4 years it has been in operation, as well as the $17,000,000 of losses which have been incurred. It has been the experience of private insurance companies in this country, whether they be the stock fire insurance companies or mutual fire insurance companies, that they have had approximately the same percentage of loss in the first 4 years of their operation that were incurred by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation.

The effect of the Senator's motion would be to repeal the act which provides for crop insurance. That is what the House had in mind when it reduced the appropriations to $3,500,000, and inserted the proviso that no further contracts could be accepted by the Corporation.

It is true that this Corporation has suffered some losses, but it has been dealing in a new field, and did not have the experience of past operation, such as old-line companies have had, on which to rely in arriving at its rates. In the first years of operations the Corporation was selling a one-year contract. A farmer is a smart individual, and he can generally tell about what he is going to produce on his farm in any given year. If there is general precipitation in the fall, if there is good snow during the winter, and if conditions are right, the farmer knows that he is going to harvest a good crop, and he will not take out any insurance. If the conditions are unfavorable when the time comes to plant the crop the farmer would take out insurance. A remarkable map was displayed before the committee showing how increased insurance policies were taken out in areas which had poor prospects for the year.

Last year the Corporation adopted the policy of selling only a 3-year policy, requiring a farmer to pool his risk over a 3-year period with producers in other sections. I do not believe that this plan has had a fair trial. Certainly Senators who talk about legislating on appropriation bills ought to be opposed to the Senator's motion, because here the House is undertaking to repeal a statute passed by Congress by the simple expedient of denying an appropriation sufficient for the conduct of that agency.

We do not think Federal crop insurance has had a fair trial. I could fill the RECORD with benefits which have flowed from this organization. It so happens that the plan is in operation in the area in Missouri and Oklahoma which is being swept by a flood. I have some statistics which show the number of farmers who are insured.

Do not think that if this agency is abolished the Government is going to be relieved from expenditures of this nature, because if there were no crop insurance, Members from the flooded areas of the country would stand on the floor and request appropriations for $20,000,000, $30,000,000, or $40,000,000 for relief of farmers in their flooded areas, or if insects had destroyed crops Senators would request money for relief of the farmers in the areas affected.

I predict that in the long run the crop-insurance program will prove a real economy to the Federal Treasury because of the fact that it insures the crop up to 75 percent of its value. It should be and it will be self-supporting by pooling the premiums all through an area. That will avoid the necessity for making large appropriations in Congress every time a flood occurs, or a crop failure occurs, or disaster of any kind comes to the farmer. This organization is certainly entitled to a fair trial, and the amount carried in the Senate committee amendment is only the amount asked by the Bureau of the Budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 74, line 9.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, if the Senator from Georgia can do so, I should like to have him point out a single insurance company which would not take the risk the insurance covers.

Mr. RUSSELL. I shall be glad to do so. We were advised in testimony given before the committee by a gentleman representing some insurance agency or other insurance organization which was supposed to write insurance on all the risks in the field that at the present time there is no company which will assume all the risks covered by the Government's contract.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. In my State and, I assume, in most of the other States there are companies writing insurance to cover losses caused by hail, losses caused by wind, and losses caused by flood. What losses in addition to those are covered by the insurance the Government is writing?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Government's contract covers losses caused by drought, something which affects the Senator's State, and has affected it for years. We appropriated several million dollars which went for the relief of farmers in the Senator's State in 1 year—an appropriation which would not have been necessary except for the occurrence of droughts. One of the largest appropriations made for such purposes in years was made in order to cover losses occurring in the Senator's State by reason of drought.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. In other words, the insurance is simply a guaranty by the Federal Government that the farmer will raise a crop; is that the situation?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President; not at all. The policy provides that the farmer must work the land in a workmanlike manner, and that the work must be approved by the county committee of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, which must look at the farmer's land and must ascertain that he did do the work in a workmanlike manner. Even if the farmer suffers because of the ravages of drought or grasshoppers or other causes in addition to those mentioned by the Senator in his statement, he will receive a benefit of 75 percent of his loss, not 100 percent, based on the historic 5-year production cycle on the farms.

Mr. President, the crop-insurance program is new. The premiums are now being adjusted. Some have been increased and some have been decreased. Considering the full amount of insurance outstanding, the losses over the entire period do not compare with the appropriations we have made in 1 year for an area of the country which has been the victim of flood or of some other disaster.

Mr. BUSHFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his explanation; but I am afraid my philosophy of government is in direct contradiction to his.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 74, line 9.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next committee amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 74, line 13, after the word "newspapers", it is proposed to strike out the colon and the words "Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for or in connection with the insurance of wheat and cotton crops planted subsequent to July 31, 1943, or for any other purpose except in connection with the liquidation of insurance contracts on the wheat and cotton crops planted prior to July 31, 1943."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee which had been passed over was, under the heading "Soil Conservation Service", on page 77, after line 19, to insert:

WATER FACILITIES, ARID AND SEMIARID AREAS

To enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry into effect the provisions of the act entitled "An act to promote conservation in the arid and semiarid areas of the United States by aiding in the development of facilities for water storage and utilization, and for other purposes," approved August 28, 1937, as amended (16 U. S. C. 590r–590x, 590z–5), including the purchase, exchange, operation, and maintenance of passenger-carrying vehicles, $1,278,649, of which not to exceed $11,000 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I undertook to explain the amendment yesterday. It does not represent an increased appropriation. It represents a transfer of funds from the appropriation suggested for the Farm Security Administration, so as to make the money available for expenditure by either the Soil Conservation Service or such other agency as might be best qualified to carry on the water-conservation program in the Far West. The amendment would restore the language of the appropriation for the present year; and under the amendment, the policy would be the same as heretofore though some funds have been transferred from the Farm Security appropriation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 77, after line 19.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee which had been passed over was, under the heading "Rural Electrification Administration," on page 84, after line 24, to strike out:

Loans: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and for the purchase of property and costs and expenses incurred in connection therewith in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $20,000,000.

Total, Rural Electrification Administration, $22,258,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer as a substitute the legislative amendment, which I was authorized to offer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, after line 4, it is proposed to insert the following:

LOANS: For loans in accordance with sections 3, 4, and 5, and for the purchase of property and costs and expenses incurred in connection therewith in accordance with section 7 of the Rural Electrification Act of May 20, 1936, as amended (7 U. S. C. 901–914), $30,000,000, which sum shall be borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 3 (a) of said act and shall be considered as made available thereunder; and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is hereby authorized and directed to lend such sum in addition to the amounts heretofore authorized under said section 3 (a) and without regard to the limitation in respect of time contained in section 3 (e) of said act; and the amount of notes, bonds, debentures, and other such obligations which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered to issue and to have outstanding at any one time under existing law is hereby increased by an amount sufficient to carry out the provisions hereof.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Virginia withhold his request for a quorum?

Mr. BYRD. Very well.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator that at this time we adjourn until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to the course proposed by the Senator; but the amendment now pending is the rural electrification amendment. I do not know of any Senator who objects to it. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] asked yesterday that the amendment be passed over. But today he has interposed no objection. I should like to make as much progress as possible.

Mr. McNARY. Of course. I thought the amendment might be subject to long debate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know of any Senator who opposes it. There may be some who oppose it; I have not talked to all Members of the Senate.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McNARY. I yield the floor.

Mr. BAILEY. Let me say to the Senator from Georgia that I desire to have a discussion of the rural electrification amendment. I do not understand it. As I recall, it calls for an appropriation of $30,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes; the smallest appropriation which has been made for the purpose for several years.

Mr. BAILEY. And the amendment is legislation on an appropriation bill—a policy which, I believe, should be condemned without fail.

I hope the Senator will agree to the suggestion that the amendment be passed over until tomorrow.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, of course I am very amenable to any suggestions by the able acting majority leader or the able minority leader, but I see no reason why we should not proceed with this matter. The Senator from North Carolina may make the point of order against it; of course, the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BAILEY. I make the point of order right now, with the Senator's permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RUSSELL. Very well; that is perfectly all right. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the bill be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. RUSSELL. Then, Mr. President, I move to suspend the rule. Let me say that the only purpose of the amendment is to determine whether these appropriations shall be made directly from the Treasury or whether the work shall be financed through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation be rejected, I shall move to increase the appropriation by Finance Corporation be rejected, I shall move to increase the appropriation by $30,000,000, which is the amount of the Budget estimates for loans.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, what is to be done with the money?

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator is as familiar with the Rural Electrification Act as I am.

Mr. BAILEY. I am sorry for the Senator if that is the case.

Mr. RUSSELL. Perhaps I misunderstood.

Mr. BAILEY. I think that the Senator, as does Mr. Churchill, understates the case. However, we shall let that go.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, the Senator knows that funds have been provided in varying amounts over a period of years for the purpose of making loans to farmers' cooperatives for the establishment of electrification facilities for the farmers of the Nation.

Mr. BAILEY. Is any part of the fund now used for the purpose of purchasing existing electrical lines, or are all the funds used simply to extend the lines?

Mr. RUSSELL. No power is granted in the amendment that is in excess of that had under existing law.

Mr. BAILEY. But I think that probably the existing law allows the purchase of existing lines.

Mr. RUSSELL. The existing law does not allow the Rural Electrification Administration, as I understand, to purchase anything. The Rural Electrification Administration makes loans to the local cooperatives, and I understand that the local cooperatives have the power to purchase lines.

Mr. BAILEY. I like the rural electrification program. I think people living in the rural areas should have electricity. I am not objecting to that. However, I desire to know the uses to which the $30,000,000 is to be put.

Mr. RUSSELL. All of it is to be utilized, insofar as possible, for loans to local rural electrification cooperatives.

Mr. BAILEY. Is it to be used for the purpose of buying something already in existence, or for the purpose of adding to the facilities? That is the point on which I seek information.

Mr. RUSSELL. The fund can be used for either purpose, at the option of the local cooperatives, but must be approved in any event by the R. E. A.

Mr. BAILEY. Was there any testimony before the committee or is there anything in the report to indicate that the money is to be used solely for the purpose of taking over existing lines?

Mr. RUSSELL. Oh, no; it is not to be used solely for the purpose of taking over existing lines. There may be some existing lines which may be purchased. In the testimony before the committee it was developed that in some instances a rural line ran into a certain area, perhaps into a very thickly populated area right in the heart of the rural electrification cooperative, the farmers' cooperative. In that event, the farmers' cooperative purchased that line, if the owner would sell it. In some cases the owners have sold the lines. I know that in my own State, in the area of one of the strongest cooperatives we have, the Georgia Power Co. had some rural lines, and sold them to the cooperative in order that it might complete the system for the entire area in which the cooperative was operating. But there is no power of eminent domain. The cooperatives cannot take the lines away from the private owners.

Mr. BAILEY. I understand that. I had information—I am not certain that it is accurate—that the whole purpose was to enable them to buy existing lines. I do not see much sense in that. If the people have lines available to them, they have them, and there is no use in buying them. The main object is to have service for the farmers. If the plan is to render service to the farmers by making available to them additional lines in new neighborhoods, I am for it; but if the proposal is one for salvaging, I am not so much interested in that.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think the proposition is so much one of salvaging as it is to enable the cooperatives to live. There have been areas in this country where the farmers have met and organized their cooperatives, and when the private power utilities heard that the cooperatives were organized, they would rush in and skim off the cream of the project before the cooperatives could begin to function. That has happened in a number of cases. It was discussed before the committee. In some such cases, if the cooperatives could not function and carry electricity to farmers whom the private power company did not find it profitable to serve, the cooperatives have purchased the lines. It was all a part of the plan to have an area in which a cooperative could function, so as to make it eligible for a loan from the Rural Electrification Administration.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, the Senator has not cleared up the point in my mind, as to what it is proposed to do with the money. He talks about what the cooperatives may do, and what has been done in the past; but I do not believe the Senator is prepared to tell us whether the suggested appropriation is for the purpose of purchasing existing lines or building new lines. I should like to have some idea as to what is to be done with the $30,000,000.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, sometimes the farmers' cooperatives are cut off by an intervening line from areas in which they could operate, and it has been necessary to buy lines to reach those areas. They could expend these funds for the purchase of such lines. However, I have no earthly way of knowing what is in the minds of the hundreds of cooperatives in this country, and of all the local boards of directors who might submit applications for loans.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I think the answer to the Senator's question is that the purposes of the appropriation is to extend rural lines for the benefit of the farmers.

Mr. RUSSELL. Exactly.

Mr. WHEELER. That is the only purpose. The appropriation is not intended for the purchase of electric lines, except in particular instances when they happen to be more profitable to the cooperatives than to the private company. So far as I know—and I have followed the question rather closely—there has been no effort on the part of cooperatives to take over power companies.

Mr. RUSSELL. As I understand, under the basic act they cannot buy any existing facilities unless such facilities are essential to the completion and purposes of a rural electrification project.

Mr. WHEELER. There have been instances in which the power companies have been glad to sell the lines because of the fact that they did not want to extend their lines farther into a particular territory. However, I do not believe that the Rural Electrification Administration has gone into any territory with the idea of buying or taking over the facilities of a power company.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I was not thinking about buying facilities of power companies. I was thinking about buying existing lines. Are we trying to serve the farmers, or to buy some lines which are already serving the farmers? The Senator from Georgia says that if we do not let the appropriation go through in accordance with the amendment, it will have to be made through an independent measure.

Mr. RUSSELL. Some years ago Congress provided that instead of direct appropriations for the Rural Electrification Administration, the funds should be borrowed by the Rural Electrification Administration from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and loaned to the farmers.

This amendment is legislation. It would not change the power of the R. E. A. by one jot or tittle, but would simply provide a method of financing. The House committee reported the bill in that shape to the House. Under the peculiar conditions obtaining when the bill was considered, making all these provisions subject to a point of order, the item was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. Was there not some testimony before the committee to the effect that there was a dearth of copper and other materials?

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. That accounts for the reduction of the appropriation. It has been $140,000,000. Now it has been reduced to $30,000,000, because that is the amount of material which was estimated to be available by the War Production Board to carry on these projects.

Mr. SMITH. I was prompted to ask the question by the suggestion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BAILEY]. Being unable to obtain the material, the cooperatives would like to buy other lines.

Mr. BAILEY. The lines are already in existence.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I did not complete my statement in answer to the Senator from North Carolina.

When the item granting authority to borrow from the R. F. C. was stricken out on the floor of the House on a point of order, an amendment was offered from the floor appropriating $20,000,000 directly from the Treasury to carry out the same purposes for which sums were borrowed from the R. F. C. That amendment was adopted overwhelmingly on the floor of the House and came to us in the bill. The only proposal is to change the method of financing from a direct appropriation to the method which had been employed for a number of years—that of borrowing from the R. F. C. and allowing the amount of the Budget estimate of $30,000,000 for such borrowing.

Mr. BAILEY. What is the difference?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not think there is a great deal of difference. For my part I do not care. If the Senate does not wish to have the money borrowed from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, it is just as satisfactory to me to get it from the Treasury. I think, however, as this is a reimbursable item it is preferable to handle it through the R. F. C.

Mr. BAILEY. One day we get it from the Treasury and the next day we borrow it from the R. F. C. If the R. F. C. does not get it from the Treasury, I do not know where it gets it.

Let me ask the Senator one further question, and then I shall not trouble him further.

What is the idea of the Appropriations Committee, against the fixed policy of the Congress, in introducing legislation on appropriation bills? I am not allowed to do it. I am not on the committee.

Mr. RUSSELL. The Senator has as much right to do it as I have.

Mr. BAILEY. If I attempt to do it, the committee says that it is out of order. I am voted down, and I thank the committee for doing so. I say that it is right. But the chairman of the subcommittee brings in a number of items of legislation on an appropriation bill. I think the Senate ought to take a position on the question. If the committee can do it, why can we not do it?

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator can.

Mr. BAILEY. No; I cannot. Theoretically I can do it; but I have the whole committee against me, and I yield. I once tried it. I have never tried it since. I think the rule is a very good one. If it is a good rule, we ought to stick to it. I do not mean to read a lecture to my good friends, but I think the Appropriations Committee, above all, ought to adhere to that rule. We cannot afford to confuse legislation with appropriations. When we do so, we put the whole Congress in a bad position, and also make it very difficult for the President to veto legislation.

Mr. President, I should like to have the amendment go over for further consideration and debate. I should like to have a clear statement of policy, and of what it is intended to do. Why is it proposed to get the money from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and what is the difference between that method and getting it from the Treasury? Why are we making a shift?

Mr. RUSSELL. We are not making a shift.

Mr. BAILEY. We are violating a rule of the committee and of the Senate. The Appropriations Committee is setting an illustrious example.

Mr. RUSSELL. We are not violating any rule of the Senate or of any committee. In offering amendments from the floor I am offering them under instructions from the committee, pursuant to a policy which has been adhered to for years. We are putting nothing in the bill which has not been in the act in years past. We are merely undertaking to finance these lines by the method which has been employed for the past 4 or 5 years.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator did not say that it was not legislation.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not say that. I said that it was.

Mr. BAILEY. The point of order has been sustained.

Mr. RUSSELL. I said that it was legislation.

Mr. BAILEY. Does the Senator think that is a good policy?

Mr. RUSSELL. The rule against legislation on an appropriation bill relates to the power of any individual Senator to make the point of order against the item on the floor. The Senator has a perfect right to make the point of order against this amendment if he chooses to do so. He still has all his rights under the rule.

Mr. BAILEY. I do not believe the Senator sees my point at all. The committee can do that sort of thing; but if an individual Senator should try it, he would be unsuccessful. We all know that to be so.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the committee, in offering an amendment from the floor, does anything violative of the rules in this matter, when the Senate is told that it is legislation, every Senator is equally culpable. Under the rule any Senator has the right to make the point of order against this item.

Mr. BAILEY. It is not a violation of the rule in the sense that it undertakes to set aside the point of order; but it is a violation of the policy of the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. I insist that it is not a violation of any policy of the Senate. From time to time legislative provisions are offered by Members of the Senate who are not members of the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. BAILEY. Oh, yes; I realize they are, and even ignorantly; but I never heard of one prevailing.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to ask the Senator to repeat what he said a few minutes ago concerning the uses to which this money is to be put. Did I understand him to say the R. E. A. already had priorities for $30,000,000?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I do not know that they had it down to a question of dollars and cents. The testimony before the committee was that with the 32 projects, the purchase for which of critical materials, such as copper, and so forth, had already been approved by the War Production Board, and the other projects which would be approved under the modification of the ruling of the War Production Board which affects priorities for R. E. A. cooperatives, they could spend $30,000,000.

Mr. McKELLAR. That would then preclude the question of buying other companies?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know, Mr. President. I do not know that they are going to buy any companies. I had not heard of such a thing.

Mr. McKELLAR. I refer to the buying of lines if they have priorities.

Mr. RUSSELL. They have the right to buy lines. They should have that right.

We may as well be frank about this. When the program of rural electrification was started some of the private power companies did everything in their power to create a situation which was destined to cause its failure. There were one or two States in the Union—there was one which I have particularly in mind in which the private power interests ran lines into thickly populated areas and cut off the sparsely populated areas and therefore doomed the people in such areas to live in total darkness so far as rural electric power was concerned. I think if the R. E. A. had been able to buy that line they could have furnished power and light to the people living in the hills and along the creeks. The R. E. A. should have the right to borrow the money and buy that line. Otherwise the rural electrification program can be destroyed. In some States the power interests have cooperated. In my State of Georgia the power company cooperated with some of the companies in purchasing lines, but in other States a pretty bad record has been made in an attempt to take off the cream of the R. E. A. projects and thereby doom the cooperatives to failure from the start.

Mr. McKELLAR. I agree with the Senator from Georgia. The question I wanted answered was, Has the R. E. A. been given priorities which would substantially use up the amount asked? The Senator has answered the question in the affirmative and that ends it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I merely want to make one point. My understanding is that the cooperatives have no right to acquire a private company unless the company is willing to sell.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I think it has been discussed here almost on the basis that the cooperatives have power to take over private lines. They do have. The point is that some of the companies are very glad to sell. Some of them are being faced with dissolution orders and are often in the position of having a line which is in the territory of an operating Rural Electrification Administration cooperative, and they are perfectly willing to sell to the cooperative because they must sell to someone. It is logical in most instances that sales should be made to the cooperative which is serving the particular rural area. As I understand, a number of such purchases have been made so that it cannot be said that this is any disadvantage to the private power companies in those instances because they have found it to be the most logical and most economic organization to sell to, and probably they get the best price they could obtain from them.

Mr. RUSSELL. In some instances it has been of genuine benefit to the private power interests. Under the orders of the Securities and Exchange Commission divorcing holding companies in some cases, some of these companies have had isolated properties which they were ordered to sell, and if they fitted into the rural electrification program I see no reason why the rural cooperative should not be permitted to come in and buy it. They do not have the right of eminent domain. Unless they can agree on terms and conditions of private sale, there cannot be any sale of a foot of line.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I wish to state that I shall offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Georgia, and shall perhaps wish to be heard on the amendment offered by me. It seems that we shall not be able to finish this subject this afternoon.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. BONE. The picture of rural electrification is replete with instances. They come tumbling one on the heels of the other. Where a rural cooperative was prepared to serve territory and upon announcing its purpose to serve a territory which had never previously been served, and which the private company had refused to serve, the private company built a spite line in to take off a certain amount of what is designated as the cream of the business, therefore making it difficult if not impossible for the rural cooperative to come into being and hope to pay its way. I have seen that occur time after time. That sort of thing has been done in my State.

The lines which have been acquired, as has been pointed out in a communication by the Administrator of the R. E. A., are frequently and generally incidental and contributory to the primary purpose of the rural electrification movement then in that community. I happen to know a great deal about those things which I have seen, and I have watched them closely, and I know exactly why objection is raised to this program. I am happy some of my Republican brethren raised it because when they make a point of order after so-called legislative additions have been made to the bill with the consent of the able Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY], it presents a peculiar picture.

Mr. BAILEY. Was the Senator referring to me?

Mr. BONE. The Senator desires to obtain information.

Mr. BAILEY. The Senator said he could tell exactly why objection was raised. If he referred to me, I am going to challenge him to show anything other than what I stated. I raised the objection in order to get the information.

Mr. BONE. If the Senator from North Carolina wishes to accept the appellation of a Republican Member, I am quite content to have him do so. I am talking about what has happened.

Mr. BAILEY. I was the Senator who raised the objection.

Mr. BONE. If the Senator's ears are acute enough he heard me refer to our Republican brethren raising the objection.

Mr. BAILEY. My ears are not so long as some others, but not as acute as those of some others.

Mr. BONE. I know that that is a matter of pride with the Senator, and I shall not take issue with him. However, I wish to point out that the so-called legislative additions to this bill have been made with the consent of the able Senator from Oregon and it will present a peculiar picture if we try to crucify the R. E. A. on a point of order, and if it is made someone will discuss it, probably, but it does not look any too good for Senators to make this kind of a point of order when every Member of this body knows how some private combinations in this country feel toward rural electrification, which has been a most valuable service to the farmers. I know of areas which have never been served, and perhaps for years would not have been served, had this form of institution not come into existence. I do not want to take the time of the Senators in debating the merits of a program of this character, but I do want to protest against an attack being made upon the R. E. A.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I understand it is agreeable now to the Senator from Georgia that consideration of the appropriation be suspended at this time.

Mr. RUSSELL. Yes, I think we may as well suspend now.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McCLELLAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting several nominations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

Mr. McKELLAR, from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported favorably the nominations of sundry postmasters.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there further reports of committees?

THE ARMY

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I report favorably from the Senate Committee on Military Affairs certain nominations in the Army, and ask that they be confirmed immediately. These are nominations of field officers who served in the north African campaign.

Mr. McNARY. These nominations were ordered reported to the Senate yesterday, I understand.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. McNARY. Of course, it is in order to take them up today.

Mr. CHANDLER. I thank the Senator very much. I ask that the nominations be confirmed immediately, and that the President be notified forthwith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the nominations? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified forthwith.

If there be no further reports of committees, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

THE JUDICIARY

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Gerald McLaughlin to be judge of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, there appear on the Executive Calendar the nomination of Eli H. Brown 3d to be United States attorney for the western district of Kentucky, the nomination of John M. Moore to be United States marshal for the eastern district of Kentucky, and the nomination of Loomis E. Cranor to be United States marshal for the western district of Kentucky. These are all reappointments, and the officials are efficient and fine public servants. I ask that their nominations be confirmed by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask that the President be notified forthwith of the confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be immediately notified.

POSTMASTERS

The legislative clerk proceeded to read sundry nominations of postmasters.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the postmaster nominations be confirmed en bloc, and that the President be notified forthwith.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed en bloc, and the President will be notified immediately.

Mr. HILL. I ask unanimous consent that the President be forthwith notified of all confirmations of today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President will be immediately notified.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE GUYER, OF KANSAS

Mr. HILL. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House of Representatives which will be read.

The resolutions (H. Res. 251) were read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

June 7, 1943.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. ULYSSES S. GUYER, a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That a committee of four Members of the House with such Members of the Senate as may be joined be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, the State of Kansas, has lost one of the ablest members of the Kansas delegation in the House of Representatives, I had known ULYSSES S. GUYER for twoscore years, from the time he was a struggling young lawyer in Kansas City, Kans. I had known him as judge of the city court, and as mayor of Kansas City, Kans.; as a civic and political leader; as a public-spirited citizen, and as an equally public-spirited official. And to know SAM GUYER was to like him and respect him. He was one of the ablest members of Congress Kansas has ever had.

Judge GUYER was a believer in our form of government and our way of life. In all the years I knew him, I never knew or heard of him doing a little thing, a mean thing, or a dishonest deed. I sincerely believe he was incapable of littleness, dishonesty, or intolerance, despite the fact that he was uncompromising with himself in his living loyalty to the beliefs he held.

I feel the world is better for his having lived and labored in it. His friends sorrow in his passing, rejoice in having known and enjoyed his comradeship while he was with us.

Mr. President, I send to the desk an editorial from the June 1943 issue of Progress magazine, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD. This editorial is from the pen of Dr. Clinton N. Howard, executive secretary of the International Reform Federation. Representative GUYER was for many years a trustee of this organization. Knowing him as I have, from the time he was a struggling young lawyer in Kansas City, fresh from teaching school at St. John, I think the editorial is most appropriately entitled "An Irreparable Loss."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AN IRREPARABLE LOSS

"We sorrow not as those who are without hope." Death has again invaded our official family and taken from our midst one of our long time and highly honored trustees. Congressman U. S. GUYER, of Kansas, a stanch friend of every good cause, and the father of the bill to make the city of Washington dry, is now a citizen of that "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." The son of Rev. Joseph and Sarah Guyer, he took out his naturalization papers in his boyhood home, and after completing his college education became principal, then superintendent of the public schools of St. John, Kans., named for Governor St. John, the father of the prohibition amendment which remains to this day.

From that date his course was marked by distinguished service as city judge and mayor of Kansas City, Kans., where his administration was marked by a display of courage in the enforcement of the dry law in that wet city, separated by a street from Kansas City, Mo., more wicked and wet—known as "the Bottoms."

Despite political opposition and threats of personal injury, Judge GUYER, as he has since been known, cleaned up the county, the city, and padlocked the Kansas side of "the Bottoms." His record from this point is a confirmation of the divine promise: "When a man's ways please the Lord, He maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him."

A CONGRESSMAN WITHOUT GUILE

In 1902 Judge GUYER was promoted to Congress, representing the nine counties of the second district and was serving his tenth consecutive term, carrying in the late November election all the counties in his district by the largest majority in his nearly 20 years in the House, as a reward for faithful service.

The desperate wets once tried to dislodge him by nominating a voluble wet preacher on a repeal platform, but he was snowed under by an avalanche of votes. Mr. GUYER ran on his dry record in every campaign. He never hid his light under a bushel for political purposes, even threatened by wet reprisals from back home.

One of the first bills put into the hopper of the House on the reassembling of the Seventy-eighth Congress was his bill for prohibition in the District of Columbia which he leaves on the calendar of the House where he was the ranking Republican Member of the Judiciary Committee as his testimony against the liquor traffic in war or in peace.

A COURAGEOUS STATESMAN

He was a man of courage as was shown in many legislative battles. We have room for but one notable example. When the selective-service bill was before the House after its passage by the Senate, the editor prepared an amendment to the bill, providing for the prohibition of the sale, purchase, or possession of alcoholic liquors above one-half of 1 percent content in any military, naval, or aerial training camp, post, barracks, flying field, or canteen, on any premises owned, rented, or operated by the Federal Government, for the protection of the millions of American youth to be enlisted under the operation of the compulsory military law.

S. 860 CAME LATER

Months before Senator Sheppard introduced his S. 860 at the urgent request of several dry organizations both he and Congressman GUYER, at the request of the International Reform Federation sought to tie up the Selective Service Appropriation by making any portion of it available to camps in States where liquors of any alcoholic content were sold. Senator Sheppard was hesitant, as chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee, to run counter to the known policy of the administration, but promised to present it to the committee, which rejected it. Not wishing the amendment to meet the same fate in the House Military Affairs Committee when the selective-service bill reached that body, we suggested to Congressman GUYER that he propose such an amendment the moment the bill reached the floor. Without hesitation he agreed to introduce the amendment, which he did after strengthening its provisions and extending its application and supported by an eloquent appeal which met with overwhelming defeat, few of the Members of the House voting on either side.

Mr. GUYER believed that defeat was less to be dreaded than silence. It requires courage to defend the right in the face of certain defeat. "If thou faint in the day of adversity thy strength is small."

THE LAST ROLL CALL

Early in April he underwent a major operation at the Doctors' Hospital, and it soon became apparent that his chances for recovery faded with each passing day. "Sunset and Evening Star" was written on his countenance, when we visited the sick room at his Washington Inn home, and later the Navy hospital, from which he passed into immortality during the night of June 5. This morning, Sunday, June 6, we looked upon his strong face in sleep, and bade him a sad farewell.

Tonight a delegation from the House and Senate will accompany his body to the last resting place, St. John, Kansas, where he began his distinguished public career in the Sunflower State. Shortly after my call he dictated his last note concluding, "Thank you, dear friend, for the fruit and flowers and the beautiful prayer you made for me. God will reward you." It was his last signature, as characteristic as was the man who wrote it. We pray God to send us another GUYER from the Second Kansas District, and that the mantle of Judge GUYER may fall upon him as the mantle of Elijah fell upon Elisha. As King David said, "I shall go to him, but he shall not return to me."

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I send to the desk resolutions, which I ask to have read and considered.

The resolutions (S. Res. 157) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. ULYSSES S. GUYER, late a Representative from the State of Kansas.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair appoints the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER] and the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] as the committee on the part of the Senate provided for in the resolution.

RECESS

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative, I move that the Senate do now take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 9, 1943, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1943

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite and eternal God, our heavenly Father, what wisdom, what power and majesty in all Thy works. Out of the mysterious silences of our breasts, amid the varying currents of this world, do we seek Thee. Thou who art the inspiration of all that is good and the glory of all that is beautiful, send forth Thy light, reminding us of our place and calling. Do Thou open the windows of our minds that we may receive the spirit of love and truth, thus leading humanity away from the wrong, deceptive altars.

Blessed Lord, as daily there are numberless Calvaries in our land, we pray Thee that all sadly stricken hearts may hear the message which has come across the centuries: "Be of good cheer, I will go with thee all the way." Undergird and uphold them with firm belief in the ultimate triumph of the good. Under all circumstances inspire us to think truly, to speak truly, and to live truly; thus our lives will be open books of good and wholesome deeds. In the name of our Saviour, by whom and with whom, in the unity of the Holy Spirit, all honor and glory be unto Thee, O Father Almighty, world without end. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE LATE HONORABLE GEORGE P. DARROW

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret and sincere grief that I announce the death of my predecessor in Congress, Hon. George P. Darrow, who served as a Member of this House for a period of 24 years.

George Darrow was loved and respected by all who knew him. While an earnest supporter and advocate of the principles and policies of the Republican Party the center aisle did not divide his friends; he was loved and respected by all who knew him. I frequently heard him express his joy and personal pride in the many friendships he made in his long service and he was especially proud of his close association with the former Vice President and Speaker of the House, the Honorable Jack Garner, with our beloved present Speaker, and with Virginia's great elder statesman, Senator CARTER GLASS.

Poor health in his last years prevented the continuance of his activity in public affairs and he retired voluntarily 3 years ago.

We mourn the loss of a good friend, but the memory of his long and faithful service is cherished and may well serve as a guide to all of us.

The entire career of former Congressman Darrow is notable for self-sacrifice and conscientious devotion in the interest of his fellow man. Following his early education in the common schools of New London, Conn., he pursued his studies at Alfred University, Alfred, N. Y., waiting on tables and cleaning classrooms, and so forth, to pay his tuition and board, graduating in 1880, and in later years was honored by having the degree of LL. B. conferred upon him by this university. Following graduation from college he entered upon a business career, which included foreign service as sales representative for an oil byproduct; and, in 1888, he settled in Germantown, Philadelphia, and established and conducted a successful paint business until 10 years ago, when he retired from active business.

Mr. Darrow always took an active interest in civic affairs. During the period of his service as president of the twenty-second sectional school board of Philadelphia he took a leading part in the campaign for the establishment of district high schools and has been known as the father of district high schools in Philadelphia. He served as a member of city council from 1910 to 1915 and was able to secure many improvements for his community and his sound business background enabled him to render outstanding service in the interest of his city and sound government.

In 1914 Mr. Darrow was asked to become a candidate for Congress; he was elected and reelected every 2 years since until 1936, when he suffered unexpected defeat in the landslide of that year; but, in 1938 he was again elected and in 1940 he voluntarily retired from public life by reason of ill-health.

During his service in Congress Mr. Darrow served at various periods on the District of Columbia, Banking and Currency, and Naval Affairs Committees. If any interest was greater than another, there is no doubt it was in our Navy. He was a firm believer in a strong Navy and in his position as ranking Republican member of the Naval Affairs Committee he was enabled to render notable service in its upbuilding. Having served in Congress during the period of World War No. 1 Mr. Darrow was particularly interested in the welfare of war veterans; he successfully sponsored legislation providing increased compensation for disabled veterans while taking vocational training, and in many ways gave aid and assistance to all war veterans and their families. He was co-sponsor with Senator Edge of New Jersey of a bill providing for the construction of the Delaware River bridge in Philadelphia; and, his success in securing the authorization for and funds for the construction of the new naval hospital in Philadelphia was an outstanding feat in that trying period.

Mr. Darrow's position as dean of the Pennsylvania delegation in Congress, his long membership on the Republican steering committee and the Republican committee on committees brought him in contact with practically all of his colleagues.

By his lovable disposition, his courtesy and fairness he won and held their lasting affection and respect.

Friend of three Presidents, elder statesman of Germantown, he will be honored and held in fond recollection by all who knew him for his great services to his city and community, for the example he set of the good citizen, laboring for others during a long and fruitful life.

He giveth his beloved sleep.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. I have asked the gentleman to yield in order that I may say I have served in this House for a long time. I have served with many good men, many fine gentlemen. I never served with a finer man or a more splendid patriot than George Darrow.

Mr. SCOTT. I may say that I know his family will be deeply grateful for the kind expressions of the Speaker of this House, of whom our late friend was so very fond.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield.

Mr. RANKIN. I desire to join in what the Speaker [Mr. RAYBURN] has just said about Mr. Darrow. I regarded him as one of the finest characters I have ever known. His death brings back memories of days gone by. When I came to Congress George Darrow was one of its leading Members. On the other side of the aisle was James Mann, the greatest parliamentarian I have ever seen in action, Frank Mondell, Nicholas Longworth, and many others. On our side, to name only two, was Finis Garrett, one of the keenest blades who ever served in Congress, and Claude Kitchen, one of the ablest debaters of all time.

I have seen those great men leave the Halls of Congress and many of them pass away, but I do not know of anyone who has gone in recent years whose passing I more keenly feel than that of my friend George P. Darrow, of Pennsylvania.

When I remember all
The friends so link'd together,
I've seen around me fall
Like leaves in wintry weather;
I feel like one who treads alone
Some banquet hall deserted,
Whose lights are fled, whose garlands dead,
And all but he departed.

Mr. SCOTT. The gentleman will doubtless recall that a few months ago I called the attention of this House to the eighty-fourth birthday of Mr. Darrow and at that time, as flowers to the living, the gentleman from Mississippi paid tribute to Congressman Darrow, and at that time I reported his words to Congressman Darrow and to his family, and they were very, very deeply appreciative.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, it was with keen regret the older Members of the House learned today of the death of former Representative George Darrow, of Philadelphia. He served many years in the House and was one of its best-informed and most popular Members. He was an outstanding member of the Naval Affairs Committee and a stalwart champion of a strong Navy and of national preparedness.

Men like George Darrow can ill afford to be spared, and to his widow and family will go the deep sympathy of all his former associates and a legion of friends.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, during my period of service here I have enjoyed the friendship of two most estimable gentlemen who were members of the Pennsylvania delegation. One was Hon. George Darrow, the other Hon. Harry Ransley. Both have passed from the scene of worldly endeavors. They won for themselves the gratitude of the people of their State and of the people with whom they served here who had an opportunity to appraise them and evaluate their services and their characters. I am confident they will receive a fine reward in the world to which they have gone.

I learned of the passing of Mr. Darrow with great sorrow, as I did a few years ago on the passing of Harry Ransley. They made records which may well serve as examples to people who are students of public service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD relative to the Armenians in two world wars and their aspirations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD my remarks on two bills on radio operators in the merchant marine, that are pending on the consent calendar today, and to insert certain quotations.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to embrace therein an editorial from the Galveston Daily News.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article by George Rothwell Brown, appearing in the Times-Herald of June 6, 1943.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a recent radio speech I made over station WNBF.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein an article appearing in the Washington Post of today, June 8, on Alaska's future.

The Speaker. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUTHER A. JOHNSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter from an American soldier overseas to his mother about strikes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein a statement concerning a bill I introduced on March 12, providing for the payment of $50 per month to members of the armed forces for each month served from the date of the passage of the Selective Service Act to 6 months after the close of the war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CANNING PLANTS

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 30 seconds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SAUTHOFF. Mr. Speaker, at the conclusion of today's business it is my intention to take up a discussion of the problems of the canning industry, and inasmuch as I shall take only a portion of the time allotted to me, I am going to yield to other Members who have canning plants in their districts and whose operation may be affected.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that today, at the conclusion of the legislative program and following any other special orders heretofore entered, I may address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RUSSIA'S ELECTRIC POWER RESOURCES

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

[Mr. RANKIN addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

POULTRY FEED

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] that the electric power proposition may be all right, but at the moment I am more interested in corn and would like to know something about poultry feed. The poultry feeders in my district are asking how they can obtain poultry feed.

Mr. RANKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes.

Mr. RANKIN. Asking for what?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Poultry feed, to feed the hens that lay the eggs that we all like and need or from which come the chicks that grow into broilers and roasters that will help feed the Nation next fall, winter, and spring.

Mr. RANKIN. Oh; poultry feed. I agree thoroughly, but I thought the gentleman said "poker chips."

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not know anything about poker chips and do not want to. One constituent uses a thousand bushels of corn a day. He wired me Friday:

> We use 1,000 bushels corn in our two feed plants daily. Have less than 1 week's supply. Unable to purchase any corn. We furnish feed for approximately one-half million laying hens and other livestock. Michigan Elevator Exchange, with many carload orders on hand, are unable to purchase any corn. Situation critical. Must have immediate release. Important you make every effort to have Michigan declared an emergency State to receive corn from Commodity Credit Corporation.

Immediately phoned Commodity Credit Corporation and was told there was plenty of corn in the country, but when I asked where we could get some of it for Michigan, for the processors of poultry and dairy food, was advised there was none available. And when I squawked, the gentleman told me our dairymen and our poultrymen were in no worse situation than automobile dealers and would have to take their loss.

My reply that we could not eat automobiles, hence might be able to get along without them, but that we would need milk, butter, and beef, eggs and poultry before the year was over and that if we did not get the corn, someone would go hungry, brought a laugh, a few harsh words, but no corn.

Next fall, winter, and spring, some of you "city fellers" who have refused to listen to some of us from the sticks, will be hungry and so will your constituents. You will all have my sympathy, but you will not be able to make a meal out of that.

It is all right for the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. RANKIN] to be urging the power-development program, but what these poultry raisers and the dairymen want to know is how they are going to get feed for the hens that lay the eggs, for the cows that give the milk and furnish the beef.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an address by the Honorable Frederick M. Davenport, entitled "Life in the Public Interest."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

BISHOP JAMES E. FREEMAN

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain statements of appreciation of the life of Bishop Freeman.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Nation joins with me today in mourning the passing of Bishop James E. Freeman who was my friend and one of the very great figures of our country. A deeply religious man, a great and inspiring leader and preacher, a great humanitarian. A man, although he loved his own belief, his own creed more dearly than his own life, he believed that all religion was of great value and should be recognized. Believing in a free church and in freedom of religion, he stood in simplicity and in strength like the towers of the cathedral he built for one of the "four freedoms." He welcomed to the National Cathedral the clergy of every denomination. Preachers of many faiths spoke from his pulpit. He wished it to be their cathedral too. He performed a great work in securing money for the building of the National Cathedral. It is a living memorial to his unselfish service. At the same time, with his love of humanity, while he was building the cathedral he was building in the minds of people character and was demonstrating what humanity could do and what religion could do for the world.

He can ill be spared today, Mr. Speaker, and when he is laid to rest tomorrow there will be a feeling of tremendous loss. All that could die of Bishop Freeman has died, but his spirit will live on and on through the ages.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and to include a short statement concerning our departed colleague, Harry Englebright.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER. This is consent day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

AMENDING THE NATIONALITY ACT OF 1940

The Clerk called the first bill on the calendar, H. R. 1291, to amend the Nationality Act of 1940.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this seems to be a rather voluminous bill. Will not the chairman of the Committee on Immigration explain it to us?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Speaker, this bill contains a number of provisions. Some sections are just for clarification purposes to correct clerical mistakes, and so forth. One section deals with denaturalization. The Attorney General has quite a number of such cases, and it was thought advisable to cut the period of notice from 60 to 30 days.

Mr. BARDEN. May I ask the gentleman whether or not a rule has been granted on this bill?

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Yes; there is a rule. Let me say to the gentleman, however, that this bill passed the House in the last session and was reported by the Senate Committee on Immigration in the Senate. Only because of lack of time in which to dispose of it was it not considered in the Senate. I hope the gentleman can see his way clear not to object but to let the bill pass and go over to the Senate.

As I say, the bill corrects a number of technical errors. It gives the Attorney General in the case of denaturalization proceedings the right to cut the time from 60 days on a summons to 30 days. There are pending now several hundred cases for cancelation of citizenship. Under the present law the people involved must be given 60 days' notice. The Attorney General feels that 30 will be more than sufficient. The bill requires them to answer within 30 days. This bill also gives the Government the authority to secure a judicial decree indicating loss of nationality. The other sections provide for——

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as a rule has been granted on this bill, I feel that it ought to be considered in that way. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

REPATRIATING NATIVE-BORN WOMEN RESIDENTS OF THE UNITED STATES

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1289, to repatriate native-born women residents of the United States who have heretofore lost their citizenship by marriage to an alien.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 317 (b) (1) of the Nationality Act of 1940 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 8, sec. 717 (b) (1)) is amended by inserting, after "terminated", the following: "or who has resided continuously in the United States since the date of such marriage,".

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDING COAST GUARD AND AUXILIARY AND RESERVE ACT OF 1941, RELATING TO WOMEN'S RESERVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 1616, to amend the Coast Guard Auxiliary and Reserve Act of 1941, as amended.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

ASSIGNMENT OF DEPARTMENTAL PERSONNEL TO AID INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES OF CONGRESS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2468, authorizing the assignment of personnel from departments or agencies in the executive branch of the Government to certain investigating committees of the Senate and House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

ABSENTEEISM

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2553, directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and study of the extent and causes of absenteeism and to make available the facilities of the Department of Labor to act as a clearinghouse for information on methods to control absenteeism.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to have the bill explained.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the gentleman from New York [Mr. COLE], when this bill came up last time, asked to have the bill passed over without prejudice. The gentleman from New York is necessarily absent today on official business and I believe that to protect him I should ask to have it go over without prejudice.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

PROTECTION OF WATER-FRONT FACILITIES AND VESSELS

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2663, to provide a penalty for the willful violation of regulations or orders respecting the protection or security of vessels, harbors, ports, or water-front facilities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

REDUCTION IN COURSE OF INSTRUCTION AT NAVAL ACADEMY

The Clerk called the next bill, S. 879, to amend the act entitled "An act authorizing a reduction in the course of instructions at the Naval Academy," approved June 3, 1941 (55 Stat. 238).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not think we ought to pass measures which are of this apparent importance unless someone explains the meaning of the measure to the House. I hope somebody may be able to do that.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is absent from the Capitol. I do not see the gentleman from Maryland here, who knows about the bill. I suggest that the bill be passed over without prejudice, to be explained later.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

There was no objection.

ALLOWANCE FOR QUARTERS AND SUBSISTENCE FOR MIDSHIPMEN OF THE NAVAL RESERVE

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2629, to provide an allowance for quarters and subsistence for midshipmen of the Naval Reserve.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is another bill of some importance, and I think that somebody should be in position to explain its provisions before we pass it. Nobody is here representing the committee to explain the bill, therefore I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER]?

There was no objection.

CONVEYANCE TO STATE HOSPITAL AT GOLDSBORO, N. C., OF A CERTAIN TRACT OF LAND

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2562, to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to sell and convey to the State Hospital at Goldsboro, Goldsboro, N. C., a certain tract of land, situated in Wayne County, N. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much did this land cost the Government? I see they are going to sell it for $4,100.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, I may say to the gentleman that I do not know exactly what it cost the Government, but I am inclined to think that it was less than $4,000. I happen to know exactly where the land is located. This State hospital is a hospital for the insane, and they need this land to protect the watershed that is just adjacent to the property.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman feel there is no loss to the Government for what it paid for the land?

Mr. BARDEN. No; there would not be a loss to the Government if the Government gave it to them. The State hospital man told me that he raised considerable objection to the $4,000 as being too much. He thinks the Federal Government is charging too much, but the State must have it, it is very useful, so he is willing to go along with it.

Mr. COOLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. I think my colleague from North Carolina is somewhat in error regarding the amount the Government has invested. I think the Government actually has invested somewhat in excess of the $4,000. At the request of the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, a special investigator who is now working for the committee investigating the Farm Credit Administration went down to North Carolina and made an examination and appraisal of this property. He recommends the sale of this property as contemplated in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, upon payment by the State Hospital at Goldsboro of $4,180, to convey to the hospital all right, title, and interest of the United States to that portion of the North Carolina farm tenant security project, located in Wayne County, N. C., known as unit No. 11 of said project, consisting of eighty-seven and ninety-four one-hundredths acres, more or less, described by metes and bounds as follows:

Beginning at a nail on the centerline of a dirt road said corner being a common corner between lands owned by one Charles Davis and the tract hereinafter described, thence along the common line north one degree fifty minutes east one thousand three hundred and forty-five and eight one-hundredths feet; thence north sixty-nine degrees thirty-three minutes east one thousand three hundred and sixty-six and twenty one-hundredths feet; thence south four degrees fifty-three minutes west two hundred and ninety-seven feet to the centerline of a canal; thence along said canal the following courses and distances: South seventy-three degrees one minute east eighty-one and eighty-four one-hundredths feet, south seventy-six degrees fifty-seven minutes east one hundred and two and seventy one-hundredths feet, south forty-seven degrees twenty-four minutes east one hundred and thirty-three and six one-hundredths feet to the west bank of Little River; thence along the west bank of Little River the following courses and distances: South seventy-one degrees forty-nine minutes thirty-eight seconds west fifty-one and ninety-four one-hundredths feet, south seventy degrees ten minutes thirty-two seconds west one hundred and twenty and sixty-five one-hundredths feet, south fifty-five degrees thirty-three minutes forty-nine seconds west one hundred and sixty-four and twenty-one one-hundredths feet, south forty degrees thirty-four minutes thirty-four seconds west two hundred and fifty-three and four one-hundredths feet, south seven degrees twenty-two minutes west one hundred and seventy and twenty-one one-hundredths feet, south forty-six degrees forty-two minutes seventeen seconds east three hundred and ninety-five and eighty one-hundredths feet, south forty-one degrees thirteen minutes thirteen seconds east two hundred and fifty-one and thirty-three one-hundredths feet, south sixty degrees forty-one minutes forty-four seconds east two hundred and thirty-four and thirty-one one-hundredths feet, south seventy-five degrees thirty-seven minutes forty-four seconds east two hundred and fifty-five and fifty-five one-hundredths feet, south sixty-four degrees twenty-six minutes forty-six seconds east eighty-one and forty-four one-hundredths feet, south forty-one degrees twenty minutes nine seconds east two hundred and ninety-five and twenty-eight one-hundredths feet, south seventy-four degrees eight minutes nineteen seconds east one hundred and forty-two and ten one-hundredths feet, south sixty-seven degrees no minutes thirty-eight seconds east three hundred and twenty-three and forty-seven one-hundredths feet, south thirty-one degrees six minutes thirty seconds east eighty-three and eighty-nine one-hundredths feet, south one degree twenty-seven minutes thirteen seconds east eighty-four and fifty-five one-hundredths feet, south forty-nine degrees fourteen minutes west two hundred and twenty-seven and thirty-seven one-hundredths feet, south seventy-four degrees twenty-six minutes seven seconds west three hundred and twenty and fifty-six one-hundredths feet, south forty-eight degrees fifty-six minutes eleven seconds west one hundred and seventy-five and thirty one-hundredths feet; thence leaving the west bank of Little River and running south seventy-seven degrees thirty-nine minutes west seven hundred and fifty-eight and sixty one-hundredths feet; thence north seventy degrees eighteen minutes west nine hundred and four and seventy-nine one-hundredths feet to the centerline of a dirt road; thence along the centerline of said dirt road the following courses and distances: North twenty-six degrees eleven minutes west two hundred and thirty-one and sixty-six one-hundredths feet, north thirty-eight degrees twenty-two minutes west one hundred and thirty-two and no one-hundredths feet, north fifty-two degrees twenty-five minutes west one hundred and thirty-two and no one-hundredths feet, north fifty-eight degrees twenty minutes west two hundred and ninety-one and eighty-five one-hundredths feet to the point of beginning.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MISCONDUCT FOR COMPENSATION AND PENSION PURPOSES LIMITED TO FELONIOUS MISCONDUCT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 986, to define misconduct, for compensation and pension purposes, as limited to felonious misconduct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That paragraph IX of Veterans Regulation No. 10, as amended, be, and hereby is, amended to read as follows:

"IX. A disability, injury, or disease will be held to have resulted from misconduct when it is due to felonious misconduct."

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "misconduct", insert "only."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING MORE ADEQUATE AND UNIFORM PROVISIONS IN VETERANS' LAWS AFFECTING COMPENSATION, PENSION, AND RETIREMENT PAY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2703, to provide more adequate and uniform administrative provisions in veterans' laws pertaining to compensation, pension, and retirement pay, payable by Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill takes jurisdiction away not only from the Pensions Committee, which committee has jurisdiction over Spanish War veterans, but it also takes jurisdiction away from the Invalid Pensions Committee which has jurisdiction over the Army and Navy and the present global war. I have no objection that bills be handled by the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation if the legislation properly belongs to that committee, but the rule is very specific that the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has no jurisdiction over any other war than the World War. The only committee that has jurisdiction over all wars is the Invalid Pensions Committee.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI]?

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] has taken the floor several times in his broadcasts attacking the jurisdiction of the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. I want to say that this is purely World War veterans' legislation. The bill was drafted at the request of the Veterans' Administration, it was introduced, and the Speaker properly referred it to the Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation. If the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] imagines that he is going to block relief for World War veterans, especially these boys who are coming out of the service now and who need this attention, he is very badly mistaken. If we cannot get the legislation passed this way, we will do it under the regular rules of the House.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. I hope that the gentleman from Michigan will not object because of a technical situation that might exist in reference to the question of jurisdiction, because this legislation is important and means much to those who are serving. I am sure my friend from Michigan will look at the broader implications and without in any way changing his views on jurisdiction not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that this measure has the unqualified support of the American Legion. It has the unqualified support of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. It has the unqualified support of the Disabled American Veterans of the World War, and of the Order of the Purple Heart; it has the unanimous backing of the Committee on World War Legislation, that heard the testimony on it; with one or two minor amendments it has the unqualified support of General Hines, and, with only one question about raising the pay of men in the hospital from $6 to $8 a month, it has the support, of the Bureau of the Budget.

There may be one amendment with which the Bureau of the Budget was not familiar that I am sure the House will approve unanimously, but this matter was submitted to the Bureau of the Budget, and the only objection it raised was to that provision in which we provide that instead of receiving $6 a month while in hospitals, a veteran who is totally and permanently disabled from a non-service-connected disability will receive $8 a month.

So this measure has the support of every organization that is interested in World War veterans; it has the support of the Veterans' Administration; and it has the approval of the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. LESINSKI. I have no objection to the veterans getting a raise in their pay checks, but I do have an objection to a committee getting a preference as to legislation that does not belong to them. Once a precedent is set the equities of it do not mean anything.

Mr. RANKIN. Let me say again that the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LESINSKI] is chairman, is the old Civil War Pensions Committee. We have let it go on because we preferred not to disturb that set-up as long as those old veterans or their dependents were living. But hundreds of thousands of the boys in the service now were in the First World War. I have a letter in my pocket now from our former colleague, Colonel Faddis, who has just been wounded in north Africa, and who served throughout the last war. We have hundreds of thousands of these men who were in the last war now in the service. They are so interwoven, so interconnected, that it is absolutely mandatory that the same committee handle the legislation for both World War No. 1 and World War No. 2. This fact is recognized by those on whose shoulders falls the responsibility for legislation of this kind.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANKIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. This bill also has the endorsement of the Order of the Purple Heart, composed of men wounded in action.

Mr. RANKIN. That is right. The representative of the Order of the Purple Heart, every one of whom was wounded in action, came before this committee and gave this bill his unqualified support.

So if the gentleman from Michigan is quibbling about our turning back the pages of history and throwing these World War veterans back into the old Civil War Pensions Committee, I submit he is going to get cold comfort from the veterans' organizations and from the Members of this House. I am going to object to this bill being carried over without prejudice. I want it considered and passed now.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I object, Mr. Speaker, on grounds that Committee on World War Veterans' Legislation has no jurisdiction over this legislation, that same belongs to the Committee on Invalid Pensions of which I am chairman, and its jurisdiction is all wars, including present global war.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE REGULAR ARMY

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 997, to amend certain provisions of the National Defense Act of June 3, 1916, as amended, relating to the Medical Department of the Regular Army.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I inquire whether or not the War Department is in favor of this bill?

Mr. BARDEN. Is the gentleman addressing his remark to me?

Mr. KEAN. No, to some member of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DURHAM] introduced this bill, and I think may answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. DURHAM. I shall answer the gentleman's question by stating that I believe the Surgeon General has always been on record as objecting to the creation of additional corps, the Veterinary Corps, the Nurse Corps, and all other corps, and he objects to the creation of this corps.

Mr. KEAN. He objects to this because he does not like to have any more different types of corps in the Army?

Mr. DURHAM. I think that is correct.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

SPRINGDALE, UTAH

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2527, to amend the description of the area affected by the act of May 28, 1928, entitled "An act for the relief of the town of Springdale, Utah," and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of May 28, 1928 (45 Stat. 787, ch. 818), is hereby amended by substituting the following language in lieu of the language in the act following the words "to grant permission to the town of Springdale, Utah," "to convey through such piping facilities as may be necessary, for domestic and other uses within the limits of said town of Springdale, Utah, water from certain springs in the Zion National Park, Utah, located in sections 17, 22, and 27, township 41 south, range 10 west, Salt Lake base and meridian."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CUSTODIAL EMPLOYEES OF THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

The Clerk called the next bill, H. R. 2250, to extend the provisions of the Reclassification Act of February 28, 1925, to include custodial employees into the Postal Service.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of February 28, 1925, Postal Salary Classification

Act, is hereby amended to include officers and employees of the custodial service of the Post Office Department: Provided, That the salary ranges of the designated classes shall be as allocated by the Post Office Department under the provisions of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended: And provided further, That such action shall not result in the reduction of the salary of any employee by reason hereof.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "classes" and insert "grades."

Page 2, line 1, after "of the", insert "grade or."

ADDITIONAL SAFEGUARDS, FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2612) to extend the effective date of the act of December 17, 1941, relating to additional safeguards to the radio communications of ships of the United States.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to provide additional safeguards to the radio communications service of ships of the United States in the interest of national defense, and for other purposes," approved December 17, 1941 (55 Stat. 804; 47 U. S. C. 353 note), is hereby amended by striking out in lines 3 to 6, inclusive, the words "national emergency declared by the President on May 27, 1941, to exist but not after July 1, 1943, or the date upon which the President proclaims the existing national defense emergency terminated, whichever occurs first," and substituting therefor the following: "present war and for six months thereafter, or until such earlier time as the President by proclamation or the Congress by concurrent resolution may designate."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL PAY, RURAL DELIVERY CARRIERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2080) to provide temporary additional pay for equipment maintenance for each carrier in Rural Mail Delivery Service.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is the practice of those in charge of the Consent Calendar to object to bills which carry appropriations or authorizations of several million dollars. This bill will cost $4,318,000 per year. For that reason I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CHANGING NAME "LABORER" TO "MAIL HANDLER," POSTAL SERVICE

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2419) to change the name of "laborer" in the Postal Service to that of "assistant clerk."

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the classification "laborer" in the Postal Service is hereby abolished, and in lieu thereof there is hereby created the classification of "assistant clerk" to perform the same duties and receive the same compensation as laborers.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 5, strike out "assistant clerk" and insert "mail handler."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to change the name of 'laborer' in the Postal Service to that of 'mail handler.'"

AID TO STATES—CONSTRUCTION OF RURAL POST ROADS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2798) to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PRIEST. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RADIO OPERATORS ON CARGO SHIPS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 2750) to amend section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 353 (b) of the Communications Act of 1934 (50 Stat. 193, 55 Stat. 579; U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 47, sec. 353 (b)), as amended, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(b) A cargo ship, required by this part to be fitted with a radio installation, which is fitted with an autoalarm in accordance with this title, shall, for safety purposes, carry at least one qualified operator who shall have had at least 6 months' previous service in the aggregate as a qualified operator in a station on board a ship or ships of the United States, but during the emergency proclaimed by the President on September 8, 1939, to exist, but not after the termination of such emergency or such earlier date as Congress by concurrent resolution may designate, the aforesaid requirement of 6 months' previous service may be suspended or modified by regulation or order of the Commission for successive periods of not more than 6 months' duration."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION RESERVE FUNDS

The Clerk called the bill (S. 163) to amend section 511 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, relating to ship construction reserve funds, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 511 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1936, as amended, is hereby amended as follows:

(a) The first sentence of subsection (b) of such section is amended to read as follows: "For the purposes of promoting the construction of vessels necessary to carrying out the policy set forth in title I of this act, any citizen of the United States who is operating a vessel or vessels in the foreign or domestic commerce of the United States or in the fisheries or owns in whole or in part a vessel or vessels being so operated, or who, at the time of purchase or requisition of the vessel by the Government, was operating a vessel or vessels so engaged or owned in whole or in part a vessel or vessels being so operated or had acquired or was having constructed a vessel or vessels for the purpose of operation in such commerce or in the fisheries, may establish a construction reserve fund, for the construction or acquisition of new vessels, to be composed of deposits of proceeds from sales of vessels, indemnities on account of losses of vessels, earnings from the operation of vessels, and receipts, in the form of interest or otherwise, with respect to amounts previously deposited."

(b) The second sentence of subsection (c) of such section is amended to read as follows: "For the purposes of this subsection no amount shall be considered as deposited in a construction reserve fund unless it is deposited within 60 days after it is received by the taxpayer except that (1) in the case of amounts received before December 10, 1940, the deposit may be made not later than February 7, 1941, and (2) in the case of amounts received at any time between May 27, 1941, and the date of enactment of this amendatory clause, the deposit of which by the taxpayer is authorized by the amendments to subsection (b), the taxpayer may make such deposit at any time within 120 days from such date of enactment, and the Commisison may approve any such deposit previously made if, in other respects, it complies with the provisions of this section, as amended."

(c) Subsection (g) of such section is amended to read as follows:

"(g) The provisions of subsections (c) and (f) shall apply to any deposit in the construction reserve fund only to the extent that such deposit is expended or obligated for expenditure, in accordance with rules and regulations to be prescribed jointly by the Commission and the Secretary of the Treasury, under a contract for the construction or acquisition of a new vessel or vessels (or in the discretion of the Commission, for a part interest therein) entered into after October 10, 1940, and on or before December 31, 1943, with respect to deposits made prior to January 1, 1943, or not later than 1 year after the date of such deposit with respect to deposits made on or after January 1, 1943, and in either case only if under such rules and regulations—

"(1) within such period not less than 12½ percent of the construction or contract price of the vessel or vessels is paid or irrevocably committed on account thereof and the plans and specifications therefor are approved by the Commission to the extent by it deemed necessary; and

Page 3, line 20, insert after the word "period" the words "of 2 years."

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING TIME, SUITS OF UTE INDIANS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1947) to extend the time within which a suit or suits may be brought under the act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1209).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, to ask the author of the bill or somebody familiar with the provisions, to explain it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, Congress by an act passed in 1938 authorized suits to be brought before the Court of Claims in behalf of the Ute Indians in Utah. Section 2 of that act limited the time within which the suits could be brought to June 29, 1943. The situation is this at the present time. Two of the attorneys for the Ute Indians have been called to the service in the Army and the Navy. Many of the witnesses who would be used in connection with the trial of the case are likewise in the service—that is, Indian witnesses. The purpose of this act is to extend the time in which these suits may be brought until 1946.

Mr. TARVER. When were these attorneys called into the service?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Within the last year.

Mr. TARVER. Then the Indians had about 4 years since the passage of the bill in 1938 within which they might have brought the suits before the attorneys were called into the service?

Mr. O'CONNOR. These claims require a mighty lot of preparation to bring them into the court through the General Accounting Office and all that sort of thing. In other words, after the Congress authorizes the beginning of suits, it takes time to get the necessary information.

Mr. TARVER. How far back is this cause of action on behalf of the Indians?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It originated a long time ago.

Mr. TARVER. How long?

Mr. O'CONNOR. As far back as 1881. I think the first violation of treaty claimed was in 1881, but at the same time, if the gentleman will recall, we had a mighty hard time to get any sort of a bill through the House owing to certain objectors in the House, authorizing Indians to commence any kind of suits in the Court of Claims or in any other court.

Mr. TARVER. In other words, 57 years after the cause of action originated, the Congress, through a spirit of liberality, gave the Indians 5 additional years within which to bring suit in the Court of Claims. Their attorneys were in position to have brought suit for 4 years of that additional 5-year period, and now you are asking for 3 years more because for the last year two attorneys have been in the armed services.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to suggest this to the gentleman, that the bill has the approval of the Indian Commissioner and the Interior Department, because they are familiar with the facts with relation to the required testimony.

Mr. TARVER. How much money is sought by the Indians?

Mr. O'CONNOR. I do not know. Perhaps the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER], the author of the bill, can explain that.

Mr. GRANGER. I do not know how much is sought. I do not know about the claims.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I will say to the gentleman that the amount that can be recovered under the action or actions is not very great, because usually the Government is permitted any offsets that it has against the Indians. The experience has been that in all of the suits against the Government for Indians, tried in the Court of Claims, less than 3 percent of claims recovery is had, because the offsets amount sometime to more than what the claims amount to in the first instance.

Mr. TARVER. Without knowing more about the justice of reviving these old claims and the amount of money involved, I shall be compelled to object unless the gentleman will ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I would prefer to have the gentleman make that request if he will do it.

Mr. TARVER. I am putting that up to the gentleman.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Of course, I am not the author of the bill. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] is the author of the bill. I am very sorry the gentleman takes that attitude, because the bill has the approval of the department and it was unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs and is a just bill.

Mr. TARVER. I think, according to the statements made here, the Indians have been treated very generously by Congress and have had ample time when their attorneys were available to have instituted the suits. I am not in a position to agree to the passage of the bill this morning.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TARVER. I yield.

Mr. GRANGER. The time will have expired by July 1, and if the gentleman objects, of course the bill will be of no effect.

Mr. TARVER. Of course, you could secure reenactment of the provision by Congress if it is justified. I shall be compelled to object unless the gentleman asks that it be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

HOSPITAL OR DISPENSARY AT ST. LAWRENCE, NEWFOUNDLAND

The Clerk called the next business, House Joint Resolution 118, authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to construct and the President of the United States to present to the people of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland, on behalf of the people of the United States, a hospital, dispensary, or other memorial, for heroic services to men of the United States Navy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation of this bill. From reading the title it seems we are authorizing the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States to construct a hospital outside of the United States. I know a great many people in the United States who need hospital facilities. I would like to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment in the hands of the Clerk which I ask unanimous consent to have read at this time.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment proposed may be read for the information of the House.

There being no objection, the Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BATES of Massachusetts:

Page 1, line 5, strike out the words "or other memorial."

Page 2, line 2, strike out the words "or other memorial."

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, is to permit the Secretary of the Navy to construct a hospital or dispensary in the village of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland. The idea of this hospital or dispensary was first conceived by Admiral Bristol, who was in command of the Argentia Naval Station about a year ago. Admiral Bristol has since died.

The purpose of this memorial is in appreciation and gratitude by the United States, particularly the United States Navy, for the very splendid and heroic work that was given to the survivors of the U. S. S. Truxtun and U. S. S. Pollux, which foundered on the shores of that area in February 1942. If any of us has any idea of the type and kind of weather they have in the Newfoundland area, we will have some conception of the difficulties that faced the men on the Truxtun and the Pollux when those two ships foundered in that cold, bleak month of the year. It was only the heroic work done by the villagers that resulted in saving many of the lives of the men who were on those two ships. Many lives were lost. Those people out in the wilderness trekked over a space of 4 or 5 miles to the cliffs of St. Lawrence in the Newfoundland area, divested themselves of their own clothes, wrapped them around the men and brought them into their own homes, and only by such constant and heroic measures applied by them over a period of many, many hours, were they able to save that large number of men who finally survived from those two ships.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. I yield.

Mr. CASE. Is there any limitation on the cost placed in the bill?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the bill provides for an expenditure of not more than $50,000.

In view of the fact that we have one of the largest naval air stations anywhere to be found on the adjacent shores of Newfoundland, it has seemed to me and seemed to the Navy Department that it would be a splendid gesture of gratitude on our part in showing the appreciation for what they have done for our men in one of the most distressing episodes the Navy has ever experienced when these ships foundered if we should authorize this monument to be built.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about the maintenance of this building after it is constructed.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the bill only provides for and authorizes the building of a hospital unit or dispensary as the Navy Department may determine. I have had stricken from the bill the words "or other memorial."

The maintenance of this hospital or dispensary will come under the Newfoundland Board of Health, which has a series of hospitals in that part of Newfoundland, but none in this particular area; and the cost of maintenance will be carried by the Government of Newfoundland.

Mr. CARTER. What indication has the Newfoundland Government given to this Government that it is able and willing to assume and will maintain and operate this hospital after it is donated?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Navy Department, as represented by the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, has consulted with the representatives of the Newfoundland Public Health Department who naturally would be very happy and pleased to have the Government locate such a hospital there and will be only too happy and pleased to maintain it after it is built.

Mr. CARTER. Of course, I do not blame them for being happy and pleased. I would be very happy and pleased to have the Navy Department establish a hospital out in my district, too, where we have very crowded war conditions. But I think this is a most unusual program.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. One thing about the bill as I read it is that it authorizes the undertaking of the construction of the hospital and leaves no opportunity for a review of the cost of it by the Appropriations Committee. The resolution if passed in its present form would authorize the Secretary of the Navy to engage and enter into an obligation which the Congress would be compelled, practically, to appropriate the money for. It seems to me that if the resolution is to be considered it should be a pure authorization to just authorize an appropriation up to the limit of $50,000 or so much as may be necessary. It should not in itself constitute a joint authorization and appropriation. Consequently I shall ask to have the bill passed over without prejudice.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I trust that the gentleman will permit a perfecting amendment to be offered at this time, because I believe a matter of this kind, where we are trying to build up good relationships with those who are allied with us in this great war, this would be a means of showing a deep appreciation for the splendid service the people of this area have given to the men in the armed service. I think that we can now amend the bill to meet the objections, because I, too, believe that it should be subject to the Appropriation Committee, and I am perfectly willing to have such an amendment offered now to that effect, but I do believe we ought to act on it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill go over without prejudice.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts this question: The bill provides that this hospital shall be presented to the people of Newfoundland. Does the Federal Government now have title to the land which they are going to present to this foreign government?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the bill itself authorizes the building of the hospital and acquisition of such land as may be necessary. Whether or not that will be in the nature of a gift or whether or not they will have to buy the land, which after all is very inexpensive land in that land area, does not make much difference.

Mr. MICHENER. In other words, if this bill becomes a law, then the United States invests so much money in this hospital and loses all future control over the land on which it is built and of the hospital?

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. This is an outright gift, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MICHENER. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. BATES of Massachusetts. It is to be a gift to the people of this particular area to show our gratitude and appreciation for the splendid service they gave to the men on those two ships.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is: Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota and the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. GERLACH. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object to the request that the bill be passed over without prejudice?

Mr. GERLACH. I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

The SPEAKER. The time for reserving objections has passed. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania object to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GERLACH. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

EXTENDING TIME FOR BRINGING SUITS UNDER ACT OF JUNE 28, 1938

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 113, H. R. 1947, to extend the time in which a suit or suits may be brought under the act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1209).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is the bill to which I indicated objection a few moments ago. I am now advised it involves claims aggregating approximately $1,000,000. Part of those claims originated in 1882. The justness of the claims is something about which I have no information, but it does seem that if a real cause of action existed on behalf of these Indians something would have been done about it in less than 61 years. The attorneys who have been employed by the Indians, before they were inducted into service, had 4 years in which to bring suit, and a period of 20 days yet exists within which suit may be brought.

So far as I am concerned, I do not think this is good legislative practice. At the same time there are Members here from the western part of the country, from the area where these Indians live, who ought to know more about this subject matter than I. I am not in my judgment justified in taking the responsibility because it is within my power under the rules by my individual objection to prevent the passage of this bill if all other Members of the House are of the opinion that it ought to be passed; so, as far as I am concerned, I am not going to object, although I do not believe the bill ought to be enacted.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I object.

PROTECTION OF WATER-FRONT FACILITIES AND VESSELS

Mr. VINCENT of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 97, H. R. 2663, to provide a penalty for the willful violation of regulations or orders respecting the protection or security of vessels, harbors, ports, or water-front facilities.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever willfully shall violate any regulation or order promulgated or approved by the Secretary of the Navy pursuant to lawful authority for the protection or security of vessels, harbors, ports, or water-front facilities, and relating to fire hazards, fire protection, lighting, machinery, guard service, disrepair, disuse, or other unsatisfactory conditions thereon, or the ingress thereto, or egress, or removal, of persons therefrom, or otherwise providing for safeguarding the same against destruction, loss, or injury by accident, or by enemy action, sabotage, or other subversive acts, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be liable to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 6, strike out the word "and."

Page 1, line 9, strike out the comma after "egress" and after "removal."

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, was this bill on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. It was not.

Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Naval Reserve Act of 1938, as amended, is hereby further amended as follows:

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 3, after the word "commander", insert "Exclusive of officers appointed in the Medical Department of the Naval Reserve."

Page 2, line 15, after the word "Washington", insert "Except members of the Medical Department of the Naval Reserve."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MAAS: Page 2, line 2, after the word "captain", strike out the balance of line 2 and all of line 3 including the word "commander."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday of this week, after the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table and other special orders heretofore made, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACT OF JULY 11, 1916

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 2798), to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the definition of the term "construction" in section 2 of the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921 (42 Stat. 212), is hereby amended to read as follows: "The term 'construction' means the supervising, inspecting, actual building, and all expenses, including the costs of rights-of-way, incidental to the construction of a highway, except locating, surveying, and mapping."

SEC. 2. Section 5 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941 (55 Stat. 765) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. Reapportionment of Federal Highway funds: Federal funds apportioned to the States prior to January 1, 1942, for expenditure on the system of Federal-aid highways, on secondary or feeder roads, and for the elimination of hazards to life at railroad grade crossings in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented, which were not on that date obligated by the States and which shall not be so obligated on or before June 30, 1943, shall not be reapportioned among the States in accordance with the provisions of said act, as amended and supplemented, but shall remain available for obligation by the States during continuance of the emergency declared by the President on May 27, 1941, and for a period of 1 year thereafter."

SEC. 3. The Commissioner of Public Roads is hereby authorized to expend in cooperation with the highway department of any State for engineering and economic investigations of projects for future construction and for surveys, plans, specifications, and estimates for post-war highway improvements so much of the unobligated funds for regular Federal aid, for secondary or feeder roads, and for the elimination of hazards at railroad grade crossings, that now remain available to such State, as may be deemed adequate, but not to exceed in any State an amount which would represent such State's share of $50,000,000 apportioned under the formula provided under section 21 of the Federal Highway Act: Provided, That agreements may be entered into with any State highway department for such post-war highway projects not exceeding the unobligated Federal funds.

SEC. 4. Section 6 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941, approved November 19, 1941 (Public Law No. 295, 77th Cong.), as amended by the act of July 2, 1942 (Public Law No. 646, 77th Cong.), is hereby further amended by striking out the figure "$10,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "not to exceed $25,000,000."

SEC. 5. The Commissioner of Public Roads is authorized and directed to make a survey of the need for a system of express highways throughout the United States, the number of such highways needed, the approximate routes which they should follow, and the approximate cost of construction; and to report to the President and to Congress, within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this act, the results of such survey together with such recommendations for legislation as is deemed advisable.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON]?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the bill has been reported by the Committee on Roads, which is of course a legislative committee. There are no authorizations contained in the bill and there are no provisions for additional authorizations for appropriations. The pressing need for the passage of the bill arises from the reversion and reapportionment provisions in existing Federal aid highway legislation, where funds are unobligated by the States.

Under section 5 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941 the funds apportioned to the States unless they are obligated revert to the Treasury and are reapportioned among the States. It is well known that because of the difficulty in public construction arising from priorities and the war there is practically a cessation in highway construction at the present time.

Section 2 of the pending bill provides for a continuation of the time for the allocation of projects to the States and a matching of those projects by the State without provision for reversion and reapportionment. There is at present allocated to the States on projects unobligated as of April 30, 1943, that would be affected by a lapse on July 1, 1943, the sum of about $68,000,000. These funds are allocated to the States under the formula of the Federal Highway Act. On July 1, 1944, those funds would amount to about $171,000,000. These funds have already been authorized. They are not being obligated because of the difficulties not only in highway construction but in all other construction.

There is a very excellent report on the pending bill here, giving an analysis of it, the amounts that have accrued to each State and the apportionments that are made, which are affected by the provision against reversion and reapportionment, the amendments contained in the bill, and a copy of the bill.

Section 1 of the bill provides for a change in the definition of the term "construction" so as to include rights-of-way. Heretofore, except in strategic highways for national defense, the States have provided the rights-of-way for Federal-aid projects. It is a matter of common knowledge that much of the highway construction that will be required following the present war will involve a change and a relocation of existing highways. So that the first section of the bill is to provide that both the States and the Federal Government shall share in the cost of rights-of-way for the construction of highways.

Section 2 of the bill is to prevent a lapse of highway funds and continues in force until 1 year after the present war.

Section 3 of the bill is an important provision and it looks toward highway construction as public work following the war. I may say in passing that I know generally of no more satisfactory public works to provide work for the unemployed in all of the States of the Union than highway construction.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BONNER). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. Speaker, section 3 provides that there shall be eligible for expenditure with the Federal Government matching in preparing plans for post-war construction not to exceed $50,000,000 of the Federal aid highway funds for all purposes heretofore appropriated. In other words, heretofore the States and the State highway commissions have prepared the plans for construction. This section is merely an enlargement of section 9 of the Defense Highway Act, which provides that there shall be appropriated $10,000,000 to prepare plans and that the local interests and the Federal Government shall share equally in those plans. In the post-war program where the Federal Government must make large appropriations for highway construction, it is preeminently proper that we should provide now for plans so that we will have available to the States and to the Federal Government adequate plans already prepared for the essential highway construction that must follow the war.

Section 4 provides for an additional allotment of $15,000,000 for the construction of roads to strategic materials, primarily minerals, the amount now available having been expended; that amount being $10,000,000.

Section 5 provides for a survey of a system of express highways by the Department of Public Roads and for a report to the Congress within 6 months.

Mr. GREEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GREEN. I believe the gentleman has answered my question. This extends for 1 year after the duration? It extends for that length of time?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Yes.

Mr. GREEN. Does the Federal and State Governments both participate in the expense of surveys up to then?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Both agencies participate, as I stated, in the expense of preparing plans and detailed specifications for highway construction following the war.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I want to congratulate the gentleman upon bringing up for consideration this bill and I hope every one votes for it because its passage is very important to every State in the Union and particularly to my own State, as we must prepare to match the sum, and this act will give us time to do this. Take my own State, for instance. This provides that it has the amount of $2,135,692 for highways and $534,708 for secondary roads, and then certain sums for access roads. We must not lose these sums for our State is in dire need of road repairs and construction.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I anticipate the gentleman's question. The purpose of this bill is to prevent the gentleman's State from being deprived of those funds and to extend the time until 1 year after the war for the projects to be constructed and for the gentleman's State to match it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. How much will the State have to contribute in addition to what is provided for by the present law in order to take advantage of this fund?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Nothing whatever, no more than required by existing law. It does not make any other change in existing law.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. I want to commend this legislation for its safeguarding highway funds to the various States. Has any change been made in the allotting of funds for access roads, or is that on the same basis as last year?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. No change whatever has been made.

Mr. MURDOCK. But the amount has been increased?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. The amount has already been increased to $260,000,000, and there is no amendment for that purpose.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. NORRELL. Does this affect the moneys that presently may be due the respective States and which have not heretofore been used?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It does not, except to prevent their lapsing, as I have stated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker. I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS TO THE TAX PAYMENT ACT OF 1943

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD relating to the tax question, including questions and answers and certain tables.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL HIGHWAY ACT OF JULY 11, 1916

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi has covered this bill intelligently and specifically. It seems that he has left very little if anything to be said. I do not believe there should be any opposition to this bill. It is probably one of the most meritorious bills the Committee on Roads has ever reported out.

As the gentleman from Mississippi has said, if we do not act in this matter before July 1 of this year, some $68,000,000 of funds which have already been allocated to the States will be lost to those States for all purposes. Another amount will revert a year following. The total of these amounts, as you will notice by reference to the hearings, is $171,544,373.

There has been very little highway construction under the Federal Highway Act, wherein the States match the moneys allocated to them by the Federal Government, because of the war and because the War Production Board under the circumstances could not give priorities to the States and the contractors for sufficient materials for consruction. So there has been a period now of some months, perhaps over a year, where all the construction that has been done in the several States has been either maintenance, for the purpose of keeping the roads in passable condition, or the construction of roads under the access highway paragraph of the act under which we authorized $260,000,000 to be made available to the War and Navy Departments and other devisions of the Government for the construction of access highways to camps, navy yards, and to forest areas, and the construction of approaches to strategic material deposits.

We anticipate that following the war there will be a boom in roadbuilding. It will be essential that a large portion of the highways in the United States be totally reconstructed. In order to do this job effectively and well, the States must make plans now. They should have what is known as a shelf of projects, so that they will be able to utilize all of their facilities immediately after the war for the rehabilitation of these highways which are being broken up because of the heavy traffic incident to our war effort. So we have not only made these unallocated funds available to them for 6 months following the termination of hostilities but we have provided that $50,000,000 of those funds shall be allocated among the States in accordance with the provisions of section 21 of the Federal Highway Act, which means that this money shall be allotted to the States on the basis of population, area, and road mileage. There will be a fund available to each State for planning purposes.

I can give to the Members of Congress the approximate amount of the $50,000,000 which will be available to their State highway commissioners for planning and survey purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. May I take the liberty of suggesting to the gentleman, inasmuch as we are considering this matter in the House, that he ask unanimous consent to include those figures in his remarks. I believe they will be important.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The figures I have before me are not exact, but I will have the exact figures in a few minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that as a part of my remarks I may include a break-down of the $50,000,000 that is referred to in section 3 of the bill, in which there will be a designation of the exact amount which each State will have available for planning purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Will this bill incorporate the highway plan suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]?

Mr. WOLCOTT. This bill does not include the plan advanced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]. The committee has given a great deal of consideration to that, but we think the matter has to be thought out a great deal more thoroughly than it has up to the present time before we want to recommend it to the House.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. It is understood that under section 3, in the event any State does not use its part of the $50,000,000 allocated, that part will still be available for construction, so the State does not lose it.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I may say that this $50,000,000 is deducted from the aggregate in the final settlement with the States. None of the States is going to lose any of its money through this allocation process.

Mr. CASE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE. Referring to what the gentleman has just said, the bill applies to moneys allocated for secondary road funds as well as for primary Federal aid?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. The total amount available at the present time for Federal aid to highways, secondary roads, the elimination of grade railroad crossings which have been allocated in accordance with the Federal highway acts that have been passed, is the total that I have mentioned, $71,544,373.

Mr. HOBBS. And there is nothing in this bill which relaxes the rule about wartime construction?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. As a matter of fact, we make it easier in this bill for those funds to be used. We increase the amount available for the construction of access roads to sources of raw materials, from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000.

Mr. HOBBS. What I am inquiring about is the relaxation of the rule as to access roads to forts, airports, and similar training grounds, for the preparation of our boys for combat service.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No. I think the gentleman refers to the provision of the bill by which we made available $260,000,000 for the construction of what we term "access highways" to camps, navy yards, and so forth.

Mr. HOBBS. And there has been relaxation with regard to roads to sources of raw material but no relaxation as to others?

Mr. WOLCOTT. We increase the amount made available from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000. There has already been expended about $9,000,000 of the original $10,000,000 of the original $260,000,000 made available, and because they have to expand this program we have increased that $10,000,000 to $25,000,000, making available an additional $15,000,000 to construct access highways to sources of raw materials, so that there will be perhaps a lessening by $15,000,000 of the total amount used for other purposes, and it is all the same fund anyway.

Mr. HOBBS. It may be somewhat harder instead of easier to get needed construction to camps, and so forth.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; because there is plenty of money available for all those purposes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH].

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. Speaker, the legislation which comes with the unanimous report of the House Roads Committee proposes to take those funds which were provided in our Defense Highway Act of 1941, and use them for a program of planning and the prosecution of road construction immediately after the war. We know that the shortage of manpower and materials made it impossible during the past year to do any appreciable amount of work in any of the States of the Union. Testimony presented to the House Roads Committee disclosed our present improved roads will not remain so without constant maintenance and without replacement when they get beyond the condition of economical maintenance. In many cases they have become a menace to safe highway transport.

Our highway network would decrease rapidly in adequately improved mileage if construction should stop. Under such an assumption by the end of 1960 there would be but 27,000 miles of surfaced roads remaining, from about 209,800 surfaced miles now existing on the Federal-aid highway system.

An adequate reconstruction program is essential in view of an estimated increase in motor-vehicle registration. At the same time there will no doubt be an appreciable increase in annual travel per vehicle, bringing approximately a 50-percent increase in use of the highways.

The Roads Committee learned in February 1938 that the following reconstruction program would be required to meet traffic demands and provide an adequate system by 1960.

On the Federal-aid system the following annual program would be required from 1945 to 1960 if we are to have a 250,000-mile, surfaced, Federal-aid system by that date:

	Miles
Sand-clay, topsoil, etc	2,332
Gravel and stone types	6,943
Bituminous macadam and bituminous mixes	4,739
Concrete, bituminous concrete, brick, etc	4,000
Total annual mileage Federal-aid system	18,014

The average total mileage constructed on the Federal-aid system for the period from 1921–37 was 14,407 miles, although during the years 1935, 1936, and 1937 the average was approximately 13,000 miles on the Federal-aid system.

The House Roads Committee heard in 1938 and again in 1940 that the need for modernizing our road system was increasing at an alarming rate. The total estimated cost of modernizing the roads in 1938 was $3,329,000,000 for 98,181 miles of roads plus $393,428,000 for 19,376 bridges. By 1940 these figures had increased to $3,500,000,000 for 106,560 miles of highways plus $444,476,000 for 21,682 bridges. At that rate the cost of modernization for highways averaged $115,550,000 for 4,189 miles of highways per year plus $25,024,000 for 1,153 bridges per year. This enormous increase was occurring in spite of a normal construction program by the States of approximately $500,000,000 per year.

During the latter part of 1942 practically all road construction was stopped except for that small mileage which was considered of immediate military importance. Therefore, in addition to the rapid need for modernization there must be added the amount of normal construction which has accumulated in the amount of $650,000,000. Taking the figures of 1938 and 1940, with the addition of the average increased need for modernization and the accumulated amount of delayed annual construction, there exists as of 1943 on the Federal-aid and State highway systems a needed construction program of $5,016,000,000.

The explanation made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTINGTON] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] as to the general provisions of the bill correctly bring to the membership the necessity for the passage today of this legislation.

I direct attention to section 5 of the proposed measure. This portion of the bill, originally embodied in H. R. 2615, would not only authorize but would direct the Commissioner of Public Roads to make a survey of the needs for express highways in the United States. In that study he would bring back to the President and to the Congress recommendation for the number of such highways needed, the approximate routes which they should follow, and the approximate cost of construction.

Mr. HARE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. HARE. Will it be entirely within the discretion of the Commissioner to determine the location of these highways, or will there be any direction from the Congress?

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Commissioner of Public Roads is directed by the House Roads Committee, and by the Congress, if this bill is enacted into law, to work with his staff in cooperation with the road officials of the various States, including the gentleman's State, in determining the need, approximate locations, and approximate cost of these highways. He must report within 6 months with a definite limitation on Commissioner McDonald to bring back to Congress and to the President in that period his findings. His report would also recommend to the Congress such legislation as it is deemed advisable to pass in connection with superhighways or express roads.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. I take it that this survey you would authorize in section 5 is post-war planning for highway building.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is correct. I might say also that it is absolutely necessary to plan for the future of America, not only from the standpoint of an integrated highway system but in many other aspects as well, and I believe the able gentleman from Arizona agrees with me on that proposition.

Mr. MURDOCK. If the gentleman will permit me, I have always regarded the gentleman as a great advocate of aviation, commercial and otherwise. The gentleman does not feel that aviation will make such strides, that transportation by land or sea will be relatively unimportant.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman raises a pertinent point. I would not assume to say that any one system of transportation would replace any other system.

Mr. MURDOCK. The gentleman from West Virginia has also been a stanch advocate of very superior highways ever since I entered Congress in 1937. No doubt, the study provided for in section 5 is planned to coordinate all systems of transportation.

Mr. RANDOLPH. We need an integrated system of transportation and communication in America—highways, skyways, and waterways. All of them need to be well rounded, and this sort of a survey will be very helpful toward that end.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Do you think if the O. P. A. continues its present activities there will be anything to haul on these highways?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should say to the gentleman that I am not in agreement with the policies of the O. P. A. in many particulars. The gentleman may remember that I once said in this body that the American people are eager to comply with restriction, with regulation, and with rationing, but they want common sense used in those programs. On that we are in agreement. I will say in connection with the hauling that across the Pennsylvania turnpike, which is one of the roads which serves as a pattern for what tomorrow will hold from the standpoint of express highways in America, each minute and 17 seconds we have a truckload of munitions moving over that highway between Pittsburgh and Harrisburg, Pa.

Mr. PACE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. PACE. Has Mr. McDonald done enough preliminary work to complete this comprehensive survey within 6 months?

Mr. RANDOLPH. In appearing before the House Roads Committee he was questioned on that very point, and he and his associates, in cooperation with the men who are in positions of leadership throughout the States, are working now on such a plan. The report can be ready in the half-year period.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. McDonald indicated to the committee that this job could be completed and a report made to the Congress within the prescribed time. He believes such a report will be needed and valuable for post-war work.

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. STEFAN. To clarify the situation as to why we need roads for tomorrow, unless we have roads to take care of the airplane traffic that is coming, the airplane traffic will not be successful?

Mr. RANDOLPH. You are correct. The gentleman pictures the future as one in which air travel joins hands with highway development.

May I say for the RECORD, that there is legislation pending in this House, of which I am the author, which would call for a Nation-wide survey of the need for an expanded airport system in this country.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I yield.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. In that connection, it is well to keep in mind in response to the question of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. HARE] that Mr. RANDOLPH'S amendment in section 5 provides for approximate routes and approximate costs of these highways, so as to eliminate any anticipated competition as to the location of these lines.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The gentleman is absolutely correct. We here lay the ground work for future discussion and planning. Now is the time to proceed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I arise in support of the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. 2798) which amends the Federal Highway Act approved on November 9, 1921.

A rather restricted and experimental measure was passed by Congress and approved July 11, 1916, but the great basic Federal Highway Act was passed by Congress and approved November 9, 1921. I regard that as one of the great constructive measures and policies of the Congress and the Nation.

When I first became a Member of Congress in 1919, I requested and was named as a member of the Committee on Roads of the House, and later on introduced the measure before the Roads Committee of the House that was in substance finally adopted and became the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921. I have consistently through the years given my support to amendments that would strengthen this legislation and have supported appropriations to carry out the purpose of that act to provide a unified, coordinated system of highways for the Nation and to aid the States in the building of such a system of highways. Under that act a great unified coordinated system of hard-surfaced roads has been built extending to every county seat and to every industrial and populace center of the Nation, and it has brought good roads to within 2 miles for at least 90 percent of the people of the United States. This system has been of inestimable value to the farmers in providing farm-to-market roads and comfort and pleasure to the farm population. It has contributed more than anything else to the development of our great automobile industry, to convenient truck and bus service. It has served as feeders to our water- and rail-transportation services by bringing the products of the forests, farms, and mines to the rail and water lines. This system of good roads has enabled tens of millions of Americans to see their country and become acquainted with their fellow Americans in all sections of the Nation. I have said many times, if we had had this great system of highways for a reasonable period before the Civil War, there likely would have been no Civil War. The North would have known their neighbors in the South and our citizens of the West would have become acquainted with their fellow Americans in the East. When we get to know each other well, we find that Americans are very much the same whether living in the North, South, East or West. Our system of highways has brought untold blessings to the American people.

I am in favor of the bill H. R. 2798. It modifies the Federal Highway Act approved November 9, 1921. Under the original act no part of the Federal funds could be used in paying for the rights-of-way. This measure amends that act and provides the term "construction" means the supervision, inspection, and actual building and all expenses including the costs of rights-of-way incident to the construction of highways. If this measure becomes a law, the Federal Government may participate with the States in paying for the rights-of-way, the same as it now does in the actual building of the highways. In other words, the costs of rights-of-way become a part of the construction of Federal highways and the Federal Government may contribute for that purpose.

Under appropriations heretofore made by the Congress to aid the States in the construction of Federal-aid highways sums have been allotted to Kentucky and other States of the Union. These allotments or obligations will expire on June 20, 1943. On account of the war and the inability of the States to secure the necessary materials for the construction of highways, Kentucky and other States will not be able to use these Federal funds that have been allotted to them before June 30, 1943, and this money will revert to the Treasury. This measure preserves these funds to Kentucky and the other States until after the war and they can then be used to aid in the road-building program of the several States.

Section 3 of this bill provides that the United States Commissioner of Public Roads is authorized to expend in cooperation with the highway departments of the several States for engineering and economic investigations of projects for future construction, surveys, plans, specifications, estimates for post-war highway improvements so much of the unobligated funds, Federal aid for secondary feeder roads and for the elimination of hazards of railroad grade crossings that now remain available to such States as may be adequate but not to exceed in any State an amount which would represent such State's share of $50,000,000 apportioned under the formula provided under section 21 of the Federal Highway Act, and the provision that the Federal Government may enter into agreements with any State highway department for such portion of the State highway department not exceeding the unobligated Federal funds due each of the several States. In other words, this authorizes the States to go ahead and make surveys, plans, specifications, estimates, and agreements for post-war highway projects. We are giving authority here for the highway departments of the several States to make plans for carrying on Federal highway projects after the war.

Section 4 amends section 6 of the Defense Highway Act approved on November 19, 1941, authorizing the expenditure for the purpose set forth in that act not to exceed $25,000,000.

There has been much discussion over a period of several years on the subject of building a system of express highways throughout the United States in Congress and out. It has been urged that these express highways would be self-sustaining and should be built for handling busses and trucks, and especially truck transportation to relieve the congested condition of our highways and add to the safety of our highway travel.

Section 5 authorizes and directs the United States Commissioner of Public Roads to make a survey for the need of a system of express highways throughout the Nation, the number of such highways needed, the appropriate routes which they should follow and the approximate costs of construction and to report to the President and Congress within 6 months after the date of the enactment of this act the results of such surveys together with such recommendations for legislation as deemed advisable. I think this is a very wise step and we are very fortunate indeed in having as the Commissioner of Public Roads Hon. Thomas McDonald. As I recall, he was appointed Director or Commissioner of Federal Highways about 1916, and he has continued in office ever since. To him, more than any other one person, is due the credit of laying out and constructing in cooperation with the States our wonderful unified system of highways. He has done a wonderful job, and in all of the years there has not been the slightest intimation that there was any graft or inefficiency in his administration of the Federal highway funds. I am convinced that he will bring to the President and Congress a most illuminating report under the authority granted under section 5 of this bill. He is so very competent from time to time our Government has loaned him to other nations in the Western Hemisphere to help plan and lay out their system of highways.

I am very glad indeed to give this measure my support, and I trust that the motion will prevail and that this measure will be passed without a dissenting vote.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT].

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, when this bill, H. R. 2798, was under discussion in the committee, I brought to the attention of the committee at that time a new paragraph which I thought should be placed in the bill. I was assured by the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Utah [Mr. ROBINSON], that this provision would be placed in the bill, inasmuch as I was compelled to be absent owing to the fact that I was named by the Speaker to accompany the body of our late colleague Mr. Englebright to his home. When I arrived in Washington I found that it had been left out of the bill altogether.

That provision deals with damage done by the Army and Navy to roads in practically every State in the Union at this time. Under section 10 of the by-laws the Commissioner of Public Roads is authorized to reimburse the several States for the necessary damage caused by the Army or the Navy, but it does not go far enough to assist the States and cities when a private contractor doing work either for the Army or the Navy causes damage. The States and cities cannot be reimbursed under that provision.

You will find many States, many counties and municipalities in the United States at this time where the damage has run as high as $1,000,000, where large strips of road are a total loss, and which cannot be reimbursed under the provisions of this act. I was in the State of Oregon and I saw some of those instances; also in California and Illinois, where great damage has been done to our State, city, and county roads.

I am hopeful that when this bill reaches the Senate that provision will be placed in the bill by the Senate, and then the matter can be ironed out by the conferees of the House and the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that this legislation will be passed. It is very much needed. But the provision I mentioned is one of the most urgent provisions to be placed in this particular bill at this time, because, as I stated, numerous cities of military importance on our coast, as well as thoroughfares, have been damaged. The damage has not been actually done by the Army or the Navy, but by contractors doing work for the Army and the Navy. Under the language of this bill they cannot be made to reimburse the respective municipalities and States.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. If the gentleman has no objection, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee, Mr. WHITTINGTON, a question. What provision is made in this bill for cooperation between the Bureau of Public Roads and the Forest Service in the construction of access roads to open up the metal needed in our war effort?

Mr. ELLIOTT. I can answer that question. That is taken care of in section 4. Twenty-five million dollars is made available for access roads, chiefly access roads to mines, and so forth.

Mr. WHITE. You must remember the Forest Service has the engineering force and equipment to build these roads, but they must have the money, and there is no provision to supply that money.

Mr. ELLIOTT. One of the provisions of the bill, I will say to the gentleman from Idaho, takes care of access roads to mines, no matter whether they are in forest areas or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MOTT].

Mr. MOTT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is twofold. It has two main objectives, both of them are very simple and both are sound.

The first purpose of the bill is to prevent the reversion to the Federal road fund of Federal-aid money already allocated to the several States but which has not yet been obligated by those States for the reason that during the past year it has been practically impossible to build roads. The W. P. B. will not give priorities for road building because the critical materials which go into road construction, and the manpower required for road building are needed in other phases of the war effort. If this bill is passed the money which has already been allocated to the States under existing law and which under that law belongs to the States, will not revert to the general fund to be reapportioned. If the bill is not passed these funds will revert and the States will lose this money.

A second objective of the bill is the legal recognition of a fundamental fact which should have been recognized long ago—and that is that acquisition of rights-of-way is a proper and necessary part of road construction, and that planning and engineering and surveying are likewise a part of road construction.

In this bill, for the first time, the Congress recognizes the obligation of the Federal Government to participate with the States in this phase of road building, and, therefore, section 1 of the bill redefines the term "construction" to include acquisition of rights-of-way so that Federal-aid highway funds may be used for that purpose. It also recognizes the obligation of the Federal Government to participate with the States in road planning, particularly post-war planning, by making available to the States the sum of $50,000,000 to be used for post-war road planning, which sum will be matched by the States. Heretofore the States have borne the entire expense of both right-of-way purchases and of engineering and planning.

The bill is a very progressive one. It takes a definite step toward full participation by the Federal Government with the States in road building. It recognizes the fact, which many of us on the Roads Committee have so long urged, that the Federal Government should take a much greater part in road construction and should bear a much greater portion of the expense than it ever has before.

The building of an adequate highway system is no longer purely a State matter. It has become a national matter and it is fast becoming an international one.

The Federal Government has never contributed funds to the States for road building which were commensurate with the amount of money which the Federal Government takes each year from the road users of the several States through the imposition of the Federal gasoline tax. On the average we have allocated to the States each year an amount equivalent to less than one-half of the money which the Federal Government has collected each year from the road users of the States, and we have left the other half in the Federal Treasury to be used for purposes other than road building. That has never seemed to me to be fair or just or equitable, and, for my own part, I intend to continue to do everything I can to bring about enactment of legislation under which the Federal Government will contribute its full share of responsibility for the building and maintenance of our Federal highway system.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Oregon has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD at this point.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope this bill will pass because it will put Congress on record before the country as taking one very important and far-seeing step in the program of post-war reconstruction. When this war is over two compelling facts will face a nation confronted with meeting and solving vital post-war problems: First, a sadly deteriorated road system, and, second, millions of returned and returning servicemen and defense workers seeking and deserving employment.

Under a wartime economy neglect of our highways has been inevitable, but in the transition to the anticipated peacetime economy there will be few necessities which will deserve priority over the need of a well-integrated system of highways in a state of repair and improvement permitting safe and speedy traffic. To promptly rehabilitate our road system will call for an army of laborers which can be readily recruited from those whose services will be freely and urgently offered to follow war and defense services which will sooner or later become summarily terminated.

This bill insures to the several States the continued right to the use of Federal funds which were made available for Emergency highway transportation needs under the Defense Highway Act of 1941, but which have not been obligated, and, in most cases, could not be obligated because of wartime restrictions. And these funds may now be employed, if the bill is enacted, by the several States for surveys and for construction, including the costs of rights-of-way.

Engineering forces in the State highway departments have been seriously depleted, but such forces as are left intact may be set to work at once in the preparation of plans for post-war construction and for the acquiring of rights-of-way so that instead of a delay of a year or more when the war ends the States will be ready to start work at once.

We can hardly overestimate the value of this saving of a year's time in putting our highway and motor-transportation system in an adequate condition to carry the commerce of the country in a world at peace if the country is to take the place we want it to take in the commerce of the world.

Each of the States now has a system of highways which, taken together, form a national network which has become one of the most important of those facilities making up our boasted national economic system. Improvement of this system, necessarily interrupted by the prosecution of the war, may now be resumed as soon as the war is over when the States take advantage of the provisions of this bill.

There is no public work more useful than highway construction. It stimulates production as well as employment because it not only provides direct labor in many fields near the sources of labor but also provides labor in the production of equipment and machinery. It calls for materials of many sorts from many sources. It does not compete with private industry, but rather stimulates private industry and private enterprise by starting a chain of business activity which reaches into many channels and extends back through the mines and the mills and through an ever widening cycle of business contacts it plays an important part in creating and maintaining what we call good times.

Enactment of this bill will be acclaimed by all who are looking to the Congress to begin now to legislate in anticipation of the day when we shall face the difficult task of setting up the stabilizing constituents of a civilian peacetime economy to displace the total war economy of today.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. STEFAN].

Mr. STEFAN. Mr. Speaker, I think it is very timely that road legislation is being brought to us for consideration. The farmers are interested in this legislation, especially where it refers to farm-to-market roads. There are thousands of miles of farm-to-market or feeder roads which have had very little attention and which must be made all-weather roads. Farm-to-market or feeder roads and our post roads must be made all-weather roads in order that we can solve our distribution and transportation problem as it relates to the plan for the future construction of superhighways.

The importance of rural road improvement is shown in the 1940 census figures which indicate that a total of 4,144,136 passenger automobiles and 1,047,084 motortrucks are owned on 4,486,220 farms. The obsolescence of these roads is indicated by the fact that in one prewar year more than 27,000 of the 39,500 traffic-accident deaths occurred on rural highways.

It is absolutely essential that the American farmer be lifted out of the mud, into which many of the country roads are transformed during wet weather. The post-war period must bring to the American farm population a Nation-wide system of modern, all-weather roads.

I favor the passage of H. R. 2798 which is a bill to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes", approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented. The bill is a substitute for H. R. 2113, upon which the members of the House Committee on Roads held extensive hearings on May 14, 15, 17, and 20, 1943. The hearings on this bill are very important and should be read by every Member of the House who realizes that our road-construction program had just begun when war hostilities started and when much of the construction program had to be curtailed in order that we could concentrate our road work on military or defense highways. The report contains some interesting tables, one showing unobligated balances of regular funds, availability of which will expire on June 30, 1943, as of April 30, 1943.

The unobligated balances of regular funds in my State of Nebraska show that in the highway fund we have $1,810,155; for secondary or feeder roads $348,653; for grade crossings $186,780, or a total of $2,345,588 of unobligated balances of regular funds.

The second table in the report which accompanies this bill shows balances of funds apportioned to all States available for programmed projects as of April 30, 1943, and this table indicates that in Nebraska we have for the regular Federal aid $3,029,640; for Federal aid, secondary roads, $691,898; and for Federal aid, grade crossing roads, $515,703; or a total of $4,237,433.

Under the Defense Highway Act of 1941, funds were made available to the various States in accordance with a formula provided by law in order to meet the emergency highway transportation needs. Because of the difficulty in obtaining labor, equipment, and materials, it has been impossible for the States to obligate these funds. Section 5 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941 provides that these funds, together with all Federal road funds apportioned to the States prior to December 31, 1941, if not obligated by the States on or before June 30, 1943, shall be reapportioned among the States. The section further provides that no State having an unobligated balance in its road fund shall be entitled to participate in the reapportionment. The most pressing reason for the passage of the legislation now under consideration is the provision found in section 2 of H. R. 2798, which would prevent the reversion and reapportionment of these funds.

The remaining sections of the bill would lay the ground work for a well-planned program of essential road construction and repair to be commenced at the end of the war.

Because of the great interest Nebraska has in this program, I urge the passage of the bill because we in Nebraska are anxious that the Federal- and State-aid program be continued in order that we can complete a well-thought-out and a well-considered road program which includes the completion of thousands of miles of farm-to-market or secondary roads.

We are also interested in the passage of this bill because, under existing law, the cost of rights-of-way in the construction of roads under the Federal-aid program is left to be met by the States without Federal participation. Section 1 of this bill would amend the definition of the word "construction" as found in section 2 of the Federal Highway Act of November 9, 1921, so that costs of rights-of-way may be included as part of the construction costs and may be shared by the State and Federal Governments on the same basis as other items of construction.

Regarding the reversion and reapportionment of highway funds, one section of the Defense Highway Act of 1941 provides that any Federal funds apportioned to States prior to December 31, 1941, pursuant to existing Federal-aid road legislation, which shall not be obligated on or before June 30, 1943, shall be reapportioned immediately thereafter among the States in accordance with the provisions of the Federal Highway Act, as amended and supplemented, except that any State or States which shall not have so obligated said funds on June 30, 1943, shall not be entitled to share in such reapportionment. I am informed that up to this time no State has been able to obligate all the funds allotted to it. This is true, not because the need for road construction, maintenance, and repair is not critical, but because labor, materials, and equipment have been assigned to work which the Government has regarded as even more urgent. Since my State could not qualify, section 5 of the Defense Highway Act, if allowed to operate on these unobligated funds, would place the Federal Government in the position of having reacquired funds for reapportionment among the States and finding no State eligible to participate—and not due to any lack of diligence or good faith on the part of the States.

Therefore, the second section of this bill would correct this situation created by section 5 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941 by providing that the unobligated balances shall remain available for obligation by the States during the continuance of the emergency and for 1 year thereafter.

The second section of this bill would also correct another serious situation. Under existing law, unobligated funds apportioned to the States since December 31, 1941, which would not be affected by section 5 of the Defense Highway Act, would revert to the general road fund, according to the terms of their authorization, on July 1, 1944. In other words, all the funds now apportioned to the States under the various Federal highway acts will revert to the Federal road fund either on July 1, 1943, or July 1, 1944, unless the States have obligated these funds before the time has expired, or unless remedial legislation, such as the legislation we have before us, is passed to allow the use of the funds on a broader scale and to prevent the reversion of the unused amounts.

The committee was wise in drawing this bill in that it provides for some post-war planning. You will find that section 3 of the bill, together with section 1, which includes the cost of rights-of-way as part of "construction" as defined in the basic Federal Highway Act, would authorize the expenditure by each State of an amount which would not exceed that State's share of $50,000,000, apportioned among the States, for making surveys, engineering and economic investigations of projects for future construction and for the purchase of rights-of-way. The object of section 3 in this bill is to provide advance planning of highway improvement projects so that they may be placed under construction immediately at the close of the present war to meet the future highway transportation needs, and, if necessary, to provide employment for the men and materials to be released at the end of the war.

Those of you who listened to the speech by the gentleman from Pensylvania, the Honorable J. BUELL SNYDER, on his proposed super-highway program will readily admit that the House Committee on Roads has given much study to post-war planning so far as road construction is concerned. Right along that line, section 5 of the bill authorizes and directs the Commissioner of Public Roads to make a survey of the need for a system of express highways throughout the United States, the approximate number and routes of such highways and the probable cost of such a system. The Commissioner is directed to report the results of the survey to the President and to Congress within 6 months after the date of the enactment of the act.

Due to the fact that the Pennsylvania Turnpike connects with Highway No. 30 near Pittsburgh and due to the fact that the map which was displayed by Mr. SNYDER recently on the floor of this House would indicate that the turnpike would be connected with Highway No. 30 going west, I feel that some consideration should be given to the program of express highways after the war is over. This Highway No. 30 goes through my State and is one of the most heavily traveled highways in the Midwest. It should be considered in post-war highway planning.

I feel that the committee has done valuable work in including feeder roads to sources of raw materials in this proposed legislation. Section 6 of the Defense Highway Act of 1941, as amended by the act of July 2, 1942, provides that of the $260,000,000 fund made available for access roads, $10,000,000, now almost exhausted, shall be available for access roads to sources of raw materials. That limitation has operated to prevent construction of many projects which have been certified as important to the national defense. So the purpose of one section in this bill—section 4—is to raise this limitation to $25,000,000 and make it possible to use more of the access-road funds for building these roads to sources of critical raw materials. Such roads are of the low-type construction into mining and timber areas to make it possible to develop mines and produce needed raw materials and make them available for use in the war effort. I feel that the removal of this limitation is of the utmost importance.

Mr. Speaker, this bill reflects very careful study of present and future highway construction. The bill was well considered by the House Committee on Roads which merits much commendation. I see in this legislation much of the work which has been done in research and study for post-war planning by Mr. Thomas McDonald, the director of our road bureau; by Mr. Charles Upham, the great road engineer of the American Road Builders Association; the work of great road machinery construction people; great highway engineers and some of our great American material men. I feel that the combined efforts of these American road builders is reflected in this legislation along with the excellent work of every member of the House Committee on Roads. It has been my experience to learn that this committee gives unusual and serious study to all of the legislation which is proposed to it. I am happy to note that the fundamental principles in the American Road Builders' Association post-war program finds its initial start in this legislation.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, this bill has the approval of the Association of State Highway Officials. Failure to pass this legislation would place a penalty on those States which have been economical and restricted expansion to aid the war effort and at the same time grant a bonus to the spendthrift States. It enables the State highway engineers of each State as well as the District of Columbia to plan now for the post-war period and thus be ready to furnish immediate employment for the discharged soldiers. These State highway associations have their personnel but not much work for them to do during the emergency. The passage of this bill will enable them to turn their forces loose acquiring or selecting rights-of-way, and drawing plans and specifications for the highways to be repaired and built at the close of the emergency, so that when the boys come back from the service they will have work to put them on at once without having to consume time to acquire rights of way and draw plans and specifications.

Every State in the Union, including the District of Columbia, will benefit by this legislation. Under the Defense Highway Act of 1941 funds were made available to the several States to meet emergency highway needs. This act also provided that unless the funds were obligated by the several States by June 30, 1943, the money would be reapportioned. The States, as explained by the gentleman from Mississippi, the gentleman from Michigan, and others, were unable to obligate these funds because of the emergency. The Emergency Highway Act of 1941 also provided that no State having an unobligated balance to its credit could participate in any of the reapportionment. Since all of the States, including the District of Columbia, have an unobligated amount to their credit, this means that the reapportionment of this fund, if this legislation is not enacted into law, will result in all the States losing the amount that was apportioned to them originally and therefore each State of the Union would suffer by the failure of this act.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman yields back 1½ minutes.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, the House is considering H. R. 2798, reported by the Committee on Roads, an act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes.

I am very much interested in this road legislation. Under the existing law the Commissioner of Public Roads is authorized to reimburse the several States for the necessary rehabilitation or for the repair of roads and highways of States, of their subdivisions substantially damaged by the Army, or Navy, or both. However, it does not provide reimbursement for the damage that is caused by a person having a contract from the Army or Navy. In my own congressional district, and more particularly in the cities of Oakland, Berkeley, Alameda, Richmond, Hayward, and San Leandro, a great deal of damage has been caused by contractors operating heavy trucks over the streets of these cities. Said contractors were working on Army and Navy contracts.

I regret to say that this present bill does not cover the situation of a contractor working for the Army and Navy Departments, and I had intended to offer an amendment along this line. However, I have the assurance of the various members of the House Committee on Roads that it is proposed to insert such an amendment in the Senate, and I have been requested not to offer the amendment at this time in the House. I will conform to the expressed wishes of the membership of the Roads Committee. I am very glad to support this legislation today, and trust that it will pass the House without serious opposition and I also am hopeful an amendment as above indicated will be placed in the bill in the Senate.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Speaker, I wish to urge upon the Members present the passage of H. R. 2798. This bill is of the utmost importance to the future of the highways of our States and Nation.

Under the Defense Highway Act of 1941, funds were made available to the various States in accordance to a formula provided by law in order to meet the emergency highway transportation needs. Because of the difficulty in obtaining labor, equipment, and material, the States have been unable to use all of these funds, and there still remains unused by the States over $171,000,000. This act will prevent the reversion of these unused funds back into the Federal Treasury and will keep them apportioned among the States to be used at the end of the war emergency.

One provision of the act would amend the present highway law so that costs of right-of-way may be included as part of construction costs and may be shared by the State and Federal Government on the same basis as other items of construction. My State has desired this for many years.

Certain funds are divided and apportioned among the States for the purpose of making engineering surveys and economic investigations of projects with a view of construction after the war. This will make it possible to start work on these State and Federal highways, secondary and feeder roads as soon as hostilities cease. That will result in the immediate employment following the war emergency of hundreds of thousands of men in highway construction over the United States.

Another provision increases the amount of money that may be spent during the war for access roads to sources of raw materials from $10,000,000 to $25,000,000. These roads into mining camps and forests are of low-type construction and will open up many more mines and timber areas for development. There probably is no single piece of legislation that will do more to aid in the present and future use of our highways than H. R. 2798. It will lead to the development of much inaccessible raw material so badly needed in our war effort at this time and will retain for use after the war a substantial sum of money for the development of feeder, secondary, and main highways of our Nation.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized for 1½ minutes.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California [Mr. ELLIOTT] spoke of the necessity of repairs on account of damage by war contractors and has brought up a very important question. It is fair to say that this question was not overlooked by the committee. The testimony of the gentleman was really the only direct testimony as to any particular damage brought to the attention of the committee during the progress of these hearings, and it is fair to say that the chairman of the committee has introduced a resolution for the appointment of committees among other things to look into the damage done, it being kept in mind that under the Defense Highway Act while emergency repairs made necessary by the Army and Navy use are provided for, the difficulty is to say where and when and what type of damage is caused by the Army and Navy.

As a matter of fact all our transportation facilities are being used to their uttermost and it is difficult to say what part of the damage occurring on any highway including those to defense plants is attributable to the war. For this reason the reconstruction and rebuilding of highways will involve enormous sums and in certain instances the relocation of the highway. As I say, the committee has in mind reporting at an early date a program to provide large amounts to be expended by the Federal Government in highway construction following the war that will involve the reconstruction and repair of damages to existing highways.

Mr. ELLIOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I yield.

Mr. ELLIOTT. How will such a bill take care of the cost of those roads that have already been replaced by counties and States?

Mr. WHITTINGTON. I may say that until we have some more experience under the authority of section 10 of the Defense Highway Act it will be rather difficult for the committee to formulate the legislation that is necessary to provide for the rehabilitation that is needed not only in his area but in other areas of the country as well.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired, all time has expired.

The question is, Shall the rules be suspended and the bill be passed?

The question was taken; and two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on this bill may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their own remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

DIRECTING SECRETARY OF LABOR TO MAKE AN INVESTIGATION AND STUDY OF ABSENTEEISM

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2553) directing the Secretary of Labor to make an investigation and study of the extent and causes of absenteeism and to make available the facilities of the Department of Labor to act as a clearing house for information on methods to control absenteeism.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON]?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

EXTENSION OF TIME IN WHICH SUIT OR SUITS MAY BE BROUGHT UNDER ACT OF JUNE 28, 1938

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 1947) to extend the time within which suit or suits may be brought under the act of June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1209).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the bill that was called up on the Consent Calendar a short time ago and objected to?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes; but I may say to the gentleman from California that the gentleman from Georgia who first objected withdrew his objection. Later on the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

KEEFE] objected, but the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], as I understand it, is willing now that the bill be considered without objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, as is well known by the gentleman from Montana, there are certain Members of this House who are designated the official objectors on either side of the aisle. They are not here at this time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. They were all here when the bill was called and considered.

Mr. CARTER. I do not know if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] had not objected that there would not be an objection from some of them.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say that the matter was presented when the official objectors were here and there was no objection made by the official objectors. The gentleman from Georgia originally objected on the ground he had no knowledge or information sufficient on which to base an opinion. After he ascertained the facts he withdrew his objection and the gentleman from Wisconsin who is now speaking interposed an objection.

I may say to the membership of the House that I have acquainted myself with the facts in reference to this bill and I find that there should be no objection to it, therefore I withdraw any objection that I offered a few moments ago.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Montana very briefly tell us what the bill does?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I will state what the bill does. In 1938 the Congress passed an act giving the Ute Indians of Utah the right to file a claim in the Court of Claims against the Government involving the value of some land that the Indians claimed had been unlawfully taken from them. There was an expiring date on that right to file the suit of June 28, 1943.

The reason why suit has not been filed is because two members of the law firm who represented the Ute Indians are now in the service of the Army or Navy.

Mr. CARTER. How long a time will this be extended?

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is extended until 1946. I may say further that this bill has the support of the Interior Department and likewise the Commissioner of Indian Affairs who believe the Indians should have their day in court. That is in substance what the bill is.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. My investigation discloses the facts to be that the attorneys who were handling these claims for the Indians purposely refrained from starting suit on the items that are now open because of the fact that they were in negotiation with the Interior Department and it was expected, and still is expected, that these matters on which suit has not been instituted will be settled by agreement without the necessity of commencing suit; but they are under the necessity of either commencing this suit before the expiration date, which is about 20 days hence, or they will lose their right to commence suit. If they do commence action it is expected that that will set aside all of the efforts toward negotiations that have been had in the past. I believe we will be doing a good thing if we extend the time on the basis of those facts which I have ascertained.

Mr. CARTER. Does not the gentleman think that is an unusually long time to extend that right? That is a period of 3 years, as I understand it.

Mr. KEEFE. I do not think so, under the circumstances, due to the fact I have also ascertained that the two men in Mr. Wilkerson's office who represent these Indian tribes and who had the active handling of these particular claims have entered the armed forces and there is no one in the office who is familiar with these claims, and who can within the time limit properly prepare the petition in order to get the claims in the Court of Claims.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin and the gentleman from Montana, I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Montana [Mr. O'CONNOR]?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time within which a suit or suits may be brought under the act entitled "An act conferring jurisdiction upon the United States Court of Claims to hear, examine, adjudicate, and render judgment on any and all claims which the Ute Indians or any tribe or band thereof may have against the United States and for other purposes," approved June 28, 1938 (52 Stat. 1209), be, and the same hereby is, extended until 1 year after the termination of hostilities by the United States in the present World War.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, lines 1 and 2, strike out the words "1 year after the termination of hostilities by the United States in the present World War" and substitute therefor "December 31, 1946."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my own remarks in the RECORD and include therein an article entitled "Women at Work."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

CLARENCE CANNON,
LOUIS LUDLOW,
EMMET O'NEAL,
LOUIS C. RABAUT,
JED JOHNSON,
JOHN TABER,
R. B. WIGGLESWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the amount carried by this bill as it passed the House was $134,096,279.86. When it reached the Senate, the Senate added amendments aggregating $9,534,311.70, so that the bill went to conference providing appropriations totaling $143,430,591.56.

In conference the Senate receded from $200,000 of the $9,534,311.70 and the House agreed to the remaining $9,334,311.70 proposed by the Senate.

Six amendments remain in disagreement, and will be taken up in their order as soon as the conference report is disposed of. The first relates to limitation of the President's emergency fund and will doubtless occasion some discussion. The remaining five are of minor importance—with the possible exception of the last, dealing with the provision relating to Messrs Watson, Dodd, and Lovett, reported by the Kerr committee—and will require little, if any, debate.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. The conference report is unanimous on the part of the conferees?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The conference report has the unanimous approval of all House conferees on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The conference report was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment in disagreement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 5: Page 3, line 16, strike out "Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for the National Resources Planning Board or the Farm Security Administration or for any of the functions of either said Board or said Administration", and insert "Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for any of the functions of any agency of Government for which appropriations have been duly made by the Congress, or for the functions of any agency for which estimates have been submitted by the Budget and for which the Congress has failed to make appropriations: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to allottments or allocations made to the War Department or the Navy Department."

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 5 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter stricken out and all of the matter inserted by such amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, a preferential motion. I move that the House recede and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division of that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 5?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 128, noes 0.

So the motion to recede was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri moves to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows: Omit all of the matter stricken out and all of the matter inserted by such amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second on that motion.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on my motion.

Mr. TABER. I demand a second on that, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. On what does the gentleman demand a second?

Mr. TABER. On the motion for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we have 20 minutes on a side. I have moved the previous question. Therefore, when the gentleman demands a second, we have 20 minutes on a side.

The SPEAKER. The previous question must be ordered before any time at all is fixed.

The question is on the motion for the previous question.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. TABER) there were—ayes 43, noes 111.

So the motion for the previous question was rejected.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a substitute for the motion offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. TABER moves to substitute for the Cannon amendment an amendment as follows: Add to the language of the Senate amendment No. 5 the following: "or the Department of State or the Office of Strategic Services."

Mr. TABER. On that motion I move the previous question, Mr. Speaker.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire 20 minutes of debate on each side now?

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the man who left his impress on human institutions more indelibly than any other man who ever lived, expressed his life policy in a single sentence, "This one thing I do."

Likewise the American people have today one dominant purpose—to win the war; to win it as quickly and win it as cheaply as it can be won—but to win the war. Anything that interferes with that purpose, and anything that does not contribute to that purpose, has no place today in the national program or in this legislation.

Judged by that standard, the proposal presented by the substitute amendment of the gentleman from New York is not in harmony with the war program. It will contribute nothing to the winning of the war. On the contrary, it will seriously interfere with the prompt and successful prosecution of the war.

Let us examine the amendment and its effect if agreed to. What does the amendment involve? When this bill first came to the floor it carried an appropriation for the President's emergency fund. The President's emergency fund is a vital part of the war program. Such funds have been provided in every war fought by the United States. Always in time of war we have made provision for an emergency fund to be handled secretly at the discretion of the Commander in Chief. Obviously we cannot notify Berlin and Tokyo as to our plans, what expenditures we are making, or what we are buying with the money. It is, therefore, indispensable that a secret fund be available under the control of the President which he can use at any time in any emergency and without restrictions. Such a fund was made available to President McKinley in the Spanish-American War. Such a fund was provided for President Wilson in the World War. And on each occasion it was appropriated by Congress without any limitation whatever.

In keeping with that precedent, and in conformity with the needs of modern warfare, the committee in originally reporting this bill to the House, and in response to a recommendation by the Bureau of the Budget, included an amount for the President's emergency fund. It was precisely the same appropriation—although in smaller amount—which had been made for McKinley and Wilson.

But when the bill came to the floor—contrary to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations; contrary to the recommendation of its subcommittee; contrary to the recommendation of the members in charge of the bill—an amendment was offered to limit the President's control of the fund.

The amendment was adroitly worded. It named two purposes of expenditure against which there was great prejudice and for which appropriations had been previously denied. It denied the President the right to expend any of this fund for the National Planning Board, or for Farm Security, although there was no thought of using it for either purpose and, now, no possibility under the law of expending any of it for either purpose.

Now let it be said again, as it was said before, that the issue before us, neither at the time nor now, is the National Planning Board or Farm Security.

I approve of appropriations for both purposes, as I stated at that time and as I state now. But regardless of how ardently I or anybody else may desire it, not a dollar can be taken from the President's fund for either purpose for the simple reason that in other legislation, diversions from the President's emergency fund for the Planning Board and Farm Security have been expressly prohibited. The House denied funds for the National Resources Planning Board in the independent offices appropriation bill and the Senate restored them and denied supplementary funds from any other source, which, of course, included the President's emergency fund. The House denied funds for farm security in the agricultural appropriation bill and the Senate restored them and denied supplementary funds from any other source, which, of course, included the President's emergency fund. So an amendment to this bill denying funds for either the Planning Board or Farm Security from the President's emergency fund is futile and superfluous on the face of it.

Nor is there occasion for anxiety about any of the other prohibitions set out in the pending substitute amendment. They are offered in the same spirit which prompted the amendment against the Planning Board and Farm Security. That is not the issue raised by this amendment. That is not the purport of this amendment. The purport of this amendment is to register lack of confidence in the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy who has control of this secret fund. The purpose is to suggest that he cannot be trusted to spend it for patriotic purposes; that he will divert money from this fund to purposes not in keeping with the war program.

Now, I ask you if such an amendment, an amendment casting aspersions on the Commander in Chief and notifying the Nation at home, and our allies and enemies abroad, that the Congress has lost confidence in the integrity and patriotism of the President in his prosecution of the war—I ask you if such an amendment will contribute in this national crisis to the winning of the war? Will we be nearer to success in the war if this doubting-Thomas amendment is agreed to than if it is disagreed to? That is the issue on which you are voting in disposing of this amendment. There can be no other issue.

I have no objection to criticism of the President. That is a God-given right guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States. That is a right for which we are fighting in this war. But this amendment expressing lack of confidence in the President is more than criticism. It charges design to divert vital war funds from the prosecution of the war. It charges maladministration which would be ground for impeachment. Will an amendment implying such charges help win the war—will such an amendment help America in this hour of need?

But this amendment is more than an expression of lack of confidence. It amounts to a prohibition of the use of the emergency fund. And I quote the highest authority to that effect, a letter just received from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget.

The letter which is directed at the Senate amendment, but which applies even more forcibly to the pending substitute amendment, is as follows:

MAY 31, 1943.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CANNON: I wish to call your attention to the action of the Senate in amending the provision in the urgent deficiency bill relating to the President's fund. This amendment reads:

"Provided, That no part of the funds continued available by this paragraph shall be allotted to or expended for any of the functions of any agency of Government for which appropriations have been duly made by the Congress, or for the functions of any agency for which estimates have been submitted by the Bureau of the Budget and for which the Congress has failed to make appropriations: Provided further, That this limitation shall not apply to allotments or allocations made to the War Department or the Navy Department."

The effect of this amendment is to so hamper and restrict the President in his use of these funds that they would be of very little value to him and would not at all serve the purpose for which Congress established the funds.

This amendment would forbid the allotment or expenditure of funds for any agency of the Government for which Congress has made appropriations, excepting the War and Navy Departments. It would prevent the allocation of funds for any agency for which estimates had been submitted by the Bureau of the Budget and for which Congress had failed to make appropriations. This would seem to contradict the language of the appropriations for the President's fund which provides:

"To enable the President, through appropriate agencies of the Government, to provide for emergencies affecting the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, and to make all necessary expenditures incident thereto for any purpose for which the Congress has previously made appropriation or authorization" (Public, No. 678, 77th Cong.).

It is not quite clear to me for just what functions or purposes this appropriation would be available in 1944. Certainly no agency that has an appropriation or for which an estimate has been submitted and Congress has failed to make an appropriation would be eligible for an allocation of funds. There are, or will be by 1944, practically no agencies of Government not covered by these two categories. The only way in which this allocation can be spent is to create a new agency or to make an allocation to the Army or Navy. Since the Chief of Staff now has a discretionary fund at his disposal which is both larger and less restricted than the authority granted to the President, it hardly seems likely that future allocations of any importance will be made to the War Department.

You may recall our correspondence in connection with the Mexican railroad project in the Office of Coordinator of Inter-American Affairs in which you and the committee agreed that the project should continue to be financed by allocation from the President's emergency fund up to the total amount of $7,500,000. It is my understanding that the amendment would prohibit the obligation or expenditure of any part of this allocation after the date of enactment of the bill because this is a function of the Office of the Coordinator, an "agency of Government for which appropriations have been duly made by Congress." Similar situations would arise with most of the allocations now in force because following the language of the appropriation, the funds have been allocated for expenditure "through appropriate agencies of Government."

As was stated in the hearings before your committee, about $12,500,000 were allocated in the first 4 months of this fiscal year, $10,500,000 of which were to the State Department for confidential purposes, and the remainder for purposes and reasons which were set forth in a supplementary memorandum to your committee. This does not seem to me to constitute any abuse of the authority lodged in the President, nor indicate any necessity for the restrictions on the use of the fund involved in the Senate amendment.

I strongly urge that in the conference with the Senate you insist upon the elimination of this item since the restriction is unnecessary and destroys the effectiveness of the fund.

Very truly yours,

WAYNE COY,
Acting Director.

Mr. Speaker, Pizarro with his sword drew a line in the sand and invited all those who would go forward to step across the line. And those who stepped forward won a new world. We draw a line on this amendment and invite all who are solely interested in winning the war to cast a forward looking vote—a vote that will defend and preserve the New World.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has consumed 20 minutes.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not vote for the substitute without a full understanding of its meaning and implications.

I hope the House in this time of war, when the very life of our Nation is at stake, will not vote to put the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy in a strait jacket, as far as the use of emergency funds is concerned. I believe it is true that Congress has given the President entirely too many blank checks in years past. I am against every form of blank-check appropriation that is not related to the war and I hope Congress will not give any more blank checks. The only kind of blank check for which there is any justification, in my opinion, is the President's emergency fund.

Most of this fund is used through the State Department to finance highly confidential and secret activities which by their nature cannot be divulged but which are very important toward winning victory for us and our allies.

To say that President Roosevelt shall be denied in the greatest of all wars the use of an emergency fund which other war Presidents have had and which they have found very useful, is to my mind unthinkable. In the Spanish-American War Congress gave President McKinley an emergency fund of $50,000,000 and provided that this grant was to be "for national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended in the discretion of the President."

When the World War broke out Congress gave President Wilson an emergency fund of $100,000,000 to be expended by him with the same plenary authority that was conveyed in the former statute granting an emergency fund to President McKinley. Later in World War No. 1 President Wilson's emergency fund was increased by $50,000,000. The wars in which Presidents McKinley and Wilson led us were pigmies compared with the titanic struggle in which we are now involved. With free institutions tumbling to destruction all around the world and with the flower of our young manhood engulfed in the bloodiest war of all times, are we going to reverse these historic precedents and deny to President Roosevelt the use of an emergency fund which other Presidents have employed to advantage in the most crucial periods of our Nation's history?

Under the language of the Senate amendment the President's emergency fund would be nullified as far as useful activities connected with winning the war are concerned but it could be used for other purposes for which Congress has not given its approval. For instance, as a possible case, if Congress should decide against appropriating any money to evacuate American nationals from Turkey, on the ground that they were in no danger, and then Turkey should be sucked into the war, the President could not use any part of his emergency fund to evacuate our nationals even though by the new and unexpected turn of affairs they might be brought into the gravest danger.

On the other hand, under the language of the Senate amendment, the President could use his emergency fund to build the Florida ship canal because the Florida ship canal has been authorized but not appropriated for, and no Budget estimate has been submitted to Congress for it.

The Senate amendment, while putting hobbles and handicaps on the President, concludes with an anomalous grant of authority which enables him to make allocations from the fund to the War Department. The irony of this lies in the fact that the Chief of Staff already has an emergency fund to be spent in his discretion amounting to $125,000,000 while the balance in the President's emergency fund amounts to only $89,000,000. It ought to be obvious that there is no need of a transfer of money from the President's emergency fund to the emergency fund of the Chief of Staff.

In former wars there was no report of emergency fund expenditures until after the war was over. After World War No. 1 a Republican Congress made an issue of the delay in reporting and it was long after the war when President Wilson submitted a report. President Roosevelt is taking Congress into his confidence with as complete contemporaneous reports as can be made and these are being printed and made public in our committee hearings.

If the language of the Senate amendment is adopted we might just as well repeal the President's emergency fund. All of the activities for which it was created will be strangled by that amendment.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Would the gentleman be good enough to explain the import of his inclusion of strategic services in this amendment?

Mr. TABER. It is an independent agency set up by an Executive order and is not directly a part of either the War Department or the Navy Department. It is one of the things that might perhaps require funds of an emergency character that might possibly be needed for the carrying on of our war effort.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS. Then the point of view brought forth by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON], in that connection is not correct, and your amendment would be helpful to the Office of Strategic Services?

Mr. TABER. My amendment would permit the emergency fund of the President, which presently consists of about $90,000,000, to be allotted either to the War Department, the Navy Department, the State Department—which has very many unusual functions in these days—or to the Office of Strategic Services. The Senate amendment would not permit of any allotment to any set-up, as I understand it, outside of the War and Navy Departments. The Senate approved that amendment unanimously.

The reason why these restrictions have come up from time to time is this: The President has on occasions allocated large sums of money for things that were not necessary, that did not contribute to the war effort, like the St. Lawrence waterway proposition, which manifestly was not something that was a part of the war effort.

The previous amendments that the House has placed upon the language of the President's fund resulted in this: That allotments might be made for any purpose for which the Congress had previously made appropriations or granted authorizations. Under that no allotments can be made for anything unless previous appropriations or authorizations had been made by the Congress of the United States.

This amendment of the Senate goes further, and it was adopted by the Senate Appropriations Committee, according to my understanding, unanimously, and by the Senate without a dissenting voice, so that restrictions might be placed on that fund, so that it could only be used for effective war purposes. You and I, all of us, want to see this war carried on in the very best possible way and in the most effective way, and we do not want to have a lot of money wasted or spent or allotted for things that the Congress did not appropriate for.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that Congress refused to appropriate money to build this Office of Information building for which $625,000 was requested, and is it not also true it was built and paid for in defiance of the express will of the Congress out of the President's emergency fund?

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct, with the exception that he calls it a building. It is a monstrosity.

It is about time that that sort of monstrosity was stopped, and it is about time that we spoke out and that we helped the President to go along with the war effort by giving him the authority that he needs and by giving him no further authority.

I offered the amendment in the House which prevented an allotment to the National Resources Planning Board or to the Farm Security Administration, because I felt that those two agencies did not help the war effort and were not helpful in the war effort, and with that very thing in mind I go along with the Senate to adopt the limitation that they have placed upon this bill. There can be no possible interference with the war effort, no possible failure as a result of the adoption of my substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON]. He would wipe out the restrictions the House placed in the bill, and he would give to the President the appropriating power and the authorization instead of reserving it to the Congress, as it should be reserved.

I am asking the Congress to do everything it can do for the war effort, and at the same time to reserve to itself the appropriating power. I want to see the war effort carried on effectively and efficiently; we all do. But everytime a move is made where funds of the United States are wasted on something else, or something that does not contribute to the war effort, we are interfering with and blocking the war effort.

Mr. O'NEAL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. O'NEAL. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York would limit the use of this money to four agencies alone, and, of course, we know there are many more agencies. If the amendment prevails there still remains the Maritime Commission, the War Production Board, the Bureau of Ships, the F. B. I., the Selective Service, and the other agencies that would not fall under the amendment.

Mr. TABER. The gentleman is correct. The money for the Maritime Commission has been appropriated and it has on hand upward of $4,000,000,000 of available funds. Every other agency that is really working effectively for the war effort has been given liberal appropriations, and there is no agency where any emergency funds might be required or might be necessary beyond the range of these four that I have named, and where I can conceive that such agencies should not come to the Congress of the United States and ask for the appropriation of funds.

If we do not maintain a decent respect for the proper appropriation of funds, if we do not do the things which prohibit abuse of Executive authority, if we do not stop turning over to the Executive the appropriating powers of the Congress, we are going to contribute to losing the war, and I do not believe that any man of this House or any woman of this House wants to be in that position. I hope that my substitute will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. CANNON of Missouri) there were—ayes 145, noes 86.

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 205, nays 139, not voting 87, as follows:
